Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XXIII, r. 1—Res judicata—Relinquishment of portion of claim without leave, consequence of.

In a suit for recovery of possession of land, the plaintiff included within the boundaries described in the plaint two parcels A and B, and put forward his claim for ejectment in respect of both on the allegation that the defendants had dispossessed him therefrom, but before the Commissioner at the local enquiry, and at the trial, the plaintiff relinquished his claim without leave of the Court in respect of the parcel B, with the result that the suit was dismissed with regard to that parcel.

Held, that a subsequent suit for recovery of possession of parcel B against the same defendants was res judicata and was also barred under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, as the dispossession which was the cause of action in both the suits was in reality the same, although the plaintiff falsely alleged, in his plaint in the subsequent suit, dispossession at a later date. [p. 411, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent, from the judgment of Mr. Justice D Chatterjee, dated the 17th July 1914, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2129 of 1913.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following judgment of

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—Two points have been argued in this appeal. The first is that the subject-matter of this suit was the subject-matter of a previous suit between the same parties and that the decision in the previous suit which dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs in respect of the lands claimed in this suit is a bar to the maintenance of the present suit by the rule of res judicata, and the second is that the plaintiffs came to Court on an allegation that, while in possession, they had been dispossessed and that it was, therefore, the duty of the plaintiffs to prove that they were in possession within twelve years of the institution of the suit. In this case, however, the learned Judge has, it is contended, applied Article 144 and tried the question whether the defendants have proved adverse possession for more than twelve years. I think that both these contentions must fail.

The previous suit, as instituted, no doubt, included the lands in dispute in the present case. The eastern boundary in the previous suit was given as the river Madhumati and the disputed land in this case lies between what was shown as the disputed land in that case and the river Madhumati. It was, therefore, within the land claimed in the plaint in that suit. At the time of the local investigation held in that case, however, the plaintiffs showed only the land to the west of the disputed land in this case as the land that they had claimed in that suit and the learned Munsif in the previous case said: "I should mention here that at the time of the local investigation by the Civil Court Commissioner, the plaintiff disclaimed his right to a portion of land on the bank of the Madhumati which is covered by the boundaries given in the plaint. The piece of land which has been shown in yellow colour in the Commissioner's map and which the plaintiff has pointed out to him as belonging to him (plaintiff) is now treated and described as the disputed land." It seems, therefore, that although the disputed land in this case was included within the boundaries of the plaint land in that case, the western portion of the same only which was shown to the Commissioner as the disputed land was treated as the disputed land. It cannot, therefore, be said that any dispute as to this piece of land to the east of the land marked yellow in the previous suit was the subject of investigation and decision in that case. There is no doubt that the decree made by the Munsif dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs in that case to the lands to the east of the yellow portion, but nevertheless, what was the subject of investigation and decision in that case was the yellow portion and nothing else. It would have been better if the plaintiffs in that case had made an amendment in their plaint; and that might have prevented a good deal of dispute in the present case. But that was not done, nevertheless that only will be considered as the subject of dispute which was treated as such in that case and the decision of that case must be confined to that land only. It has further been found by the learned Judge in this case that, at the time of the institution of the previous suit, the land which is now in suit was not in existence as culturable land. It was then covered by the river and, therefore, the plaintiffs had at the time of the institution of that suit rightly described the yellow portion of the disputed land in that case as being bounded by the Madhumati on the east. In this view of the case I am unable to accede to the learned argument of the appellants' Vakil that the decree in the previous suit, simply by reason of its dismissing the claim of the plaintiffs in respect of lands which answer to the boundaries of the present suit, should be considered as a final decision in respect of these lands.

With regard to the question of limitation, it is true that the plaintiffs' suit was brought on the allegation of possession and dispossession. But it is found in this case that "the land on the east side, i.e., the present disputed land, was not fit for cultivation and so was not in the possession of any one," that is about the time of the dispossession alleged in the previous case, and then again the learned Judge says: "I do not think that they could dispossess the plaintiffs from this land before Agrahayan 1306, in the time of dispossession regarding the land in previous suit which is within twelve years." Although the judgment is not as clear as it could be expected, I think that this means that the plaintiffs must be taken to have been in possession in or about the year 1306 when these lands became culturable and if that be so, the plaintiffs have proved their possession within twelve years. Notwithstanding, therefore, the finding of the learned Judge that there was no satisfactory evidence that the defendants or their lessor or vendor had possession of the land in suit for more than twelve years, I think that there is sufficient in the judgment from which it can be made out that the learned Judge found that the plaintiffs were in possession within twelve years. In this view of the case I think that the plea of limitation also fails.

In view of the fact, however, that the plaintiffs failed to take sufficient measures for ensuring certainty in the previous case by making an amendment in their plaint in respect of the land which appeared after the institution of their suit, each party should bear his own costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee in a suit for recovery of possession of land. The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decision and on appeal to this Court the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been confirmed. The defendants contend that the suit should have been treated as barred under section 11 and Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. To determine the validity of this objection, we must bear in mind the facts of a previous litigation between the parties.

On the 3rd January 1902, the present plaintiffs instituted a suit against the defendants for recovery of possession of what we may briefly describe as two parcels of land A and B. The plaintiffs then alleged that they had been dispossessed by the defendants on the 1st January 1900. A Commissioner was appointed to survey the disputed lands. The plaintiffs confined their claim to plot A alone before the Commissioner and from the report of the Commissioner it appears that whereas the plaintiffs pointed out parcel A as the disputed land, the defendants pointed out parcels A and B as the disputed lands. The Commissioner further found that the defendants were at the time in possession of both parcels of land. In the judgment of the Trial Court in that suit we find a statement to the effect that at the time of the local investigation by the Civil Court Commissioner, the plaintiffs disclaimed their right to "a portion of the land on the bank of the Madhumati, which is covered by the boundaries given in the plaint," that is, what we have called B. The Court came to the conclusion that the suit should be decreed in part, that is, with regard to plot A alone, and then proceeded to state explicitly that the claim so far as it relates to the remaining portion of the land included in the boundaries of the plaint, that is, what we have called B, be dismissed. The defendants appealed and in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge we find the statement repeated that at the time of the local enquiry by the Commissioner the plaintiffs gave up their claim in respect of what we have called plot B and confined their claim to the portion coloured yellow in the map, that is, what we have called A. The Subordinate Judge reversed the decree of the Court of First Instance and dismissed the suit in its entirety. The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to this Court, and the result was that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was reversed and that of the Court of First Instance restored on the 5th June 1906. On the 30th March 1911, the plaintiffs commenced the present litigation in respect of plot B. Objection was forthwith taken that there was a two-fold bar to the suit, namely, bar of res judicata and bar from withdrawal or abandonment of claim without leave of the Court. In our opinion, there is no answer to the objection.

Section 373 of the Code of 1882, which was in force when the previous suit was decided and has since been reproduced as Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Code of 1908, provides as follows: "If the plaintiff withdraws from the suit or abandons part of his claim without such permission, he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit for the same matter or in respect of the same part." Here the plaintiff undoubtedly abandoned a part of his claim. We are not concerned with the reasons which induced him to adopt this course, nor does a statement of such reasons appear in the proceedings of that suit. But we do know this that although the parcels A and B were included within the boundaries described in the plaint and although the claim for ejectment was put forward in respect of both the plots on the allegation that the defendants had dispossessed the plaintiffs therefrom, before the Commissioner and at the trial they relinquished their claim in respect of one of these parcels, with the result that the suit was dismissed with regard to that parcel. In such circumstances, we cannot appreciate how the plaintiffs can possibly escape from the bar provided by the second paragraph of section 373. Reliance, however, has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Kamini Kant Roy v. Ram Nath Chuckerbutty (1). That case is clearly distinguishable. There A instituted a suit to establish his right to sell a certain property in satisfaction of a decree against B. He withdrew the suit without leave obtained to bring a fresh suit. A subsequently instituted another suit to establish his right to sell the same property in execution of another decree against B. The Court held that the second suit was not barred by the provisions of section 373, as it could not be deemed a fresh suit in respect of the matter covered by the previous suit. Here, however, the position is entirely different. We observe that a comprehensive view has been taken of the scope of section 373 by the Madras High Court in the cases of Achuta Menon v. Achutan Nayar (2), Machana Ujhala v. Gorugantulu (3) and Sennava Reddiar v. Venkatachala Reddiar (4), where in the determination of the question whether the matters in controversy in two suits were or were not identical, reference was made not merely to the right claimed by the plaintiff but also to the right set up by the defendant. These cases, however, must be deemed materially qualified, if not actually overruled, by the Full Bench decision in Pandillapalli Singa Reddi v. Yeddula Subba Reddi (5), which accords with the decision in Gopal Chandra Banerjee v. Purna Chandra Banerjee (6), and it is not necessary for our present purpose to attribute to section 373 such a wide scope, for, even upon a more limited view, the suit is barred by section 373. We must also hold that the suit is barred under the provisions of section 11 of the Code of 1908. The plaintiffs put forward a claim to the land now in dispute in the earlier litigation; that claim was dismissed. It is obviously impossible for them to maintain another suit to enforce the identical claim: the dispossession, which is the cause of action in this suit, is in reality the dispossession urged in the previous litigation, although the plaintiffs in view of the possibility of objections under section 11 and Order XXIII, rule 1, falsely alleged in the plaint dispossession at a later date.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of this Court as also of the Court of Appeal below set aside and that of the Court of First Instance restored. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 24, 25—Issues, re-settling of—Framing new issue—Remand—Procedure

The Court of First Instance decided a case on framing a material issue as: "Have the plaintiff and his co-villagers their alleged right of way by necessity, grant or prescription". The Judge in the First Appellate Court, coming to the conclusion that the issue which was really material had not been stated in the Court below, framed the issue thus: "Has the plaintiff acquired the right of user over the disputed path by virtue of any custom," and then purporting to act under Order XLI, rule 24, Civil Procedure Code, dealt with the case on the evidence as it stood, without taking any further evidence or remanding the case for further evidence:

Held, that the Judge acted wrongly as he did not realise that he was not re-settling the issues, but was framing an entirely new issue, and that the proper course for him to take was to proceed under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 413, col. 2.]

LASKARI V. ABBAS BEPARI.

1912, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Tipperah, dated the 18th April 1912, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Comilla, dated the 26th March 1911.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of MULLICK, J.—The plaintiff and defendant No. 1 are co-sharers. The plaintiff sues on behalf of his co-villagers for a declaration of a right of way 12 cubits wide over some land which is in the defendant's separate possession.

The Commissioner deputed to make a local investigation found a path of varying width running through the village from north to south. He considered that an uniform width of 7 to 8 cubits was necessary to the villagers. The Munsif came to the conclusion that as regards the northern and southern portions of the path shown on the Commissioner's map, the plaintiff had no cause of action inasmuch as the defendant had in no way interfered with the use thereof but that in respect of that portion which lay between stations Nos. 5 to 9 the defendant had by levelling some land to the east raised an apprehension of injury in the plaintiff's mind; that the plaintiff had acquired an easement of necessity in the whole length of the existing path and that between stations Nos. 5 to 9 where the width varied from 3 to 6 cubits, the alleged obstructions being more than twelve years old, the claim for a way of greater width was barred by limitation. The Munsif, therefore, partially decreed the suit by declaring "a right of way as a village path by necessity over the disputed path as laid down in the Commissioner's map" and by restraining "the principal defendants from interfering with the existing breadth between stations Nos. 5 to 9 by encroachment and by obstruction."

Both sides appealed against this decree, with the result that the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the defendant's appeal but partially decreed the plaintiff's appeal. He found that the plaintiff had established a customary right to a village path 7 cubits in width and that the decree for an easement of necessity could not be supported. He accordingly directed that "the plaintiffs do recover possession thereof by removing all obstructions, if any, put up or created by the defendant thereon."

The present second appeal is preferred by defendant No. 1. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the appellant that he is not concerned to resist the learned Subordinate Judge's decree in respect of any portion other than that lying between stations Nos. 5 to 9. The substance of his appeal is that the learned Subordinate Judge has made a new case of custom and has taken him by surprise. Now the plaintiff claims not a public way but a village path or, as he puts it in his plaint, a semi-public way and he bases his title on grant, prescription, twenty years' user and necessity. The Munsif finds that a grant, express or implied, is neither proved nor capable of being presumed. He, therefore, rightly holds that the plaintiff cannot base his title on grant or prescription.

The learned Munsif next finds more than twenty years' user of the existing path proved but his judgment is silent upon the question whether the plaintiff has acquired a title under section 26, Limitation Act. It would seem from their omission to mention this aspect of the case that both the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge were of opinion that the character of the plaintiff's enjoyment does not fulfil the conditions of that section. The learned Munsif, therefore, falls back upon necessity. But, as the learned Subordinate Judge has very properly observed, if no grant can be presumed, then there can be no way of necessity and the learned Munsif's decree cannot be sustained. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, thinks that the proper issue which arises in the case is whether any customary right is established. Now although the plaint does not allege any custom I agree that it would be unfair to scrutinise mufussil pleadings with too much rigour and I cannot, under the circumstances, say that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in framing the issue, "Have the plaintiffs acquired the right of user over the disputed path as a village path by virtue of any custom." But the defendant was clearly entitled to adduce rebutting evidence and the omission to give him a chance of doing so was an error of law. There is nothing to show that the evidence which he gave upon the question of immemorial user was intended to suffice for the trial of an issue on custom or even that the possibility of such an issue was present in his mind. The learned Vakil for the respondent draws my attention to a sentence in the learned Munsif's judgment which runs as follows:

"The evidence of P. W. No. 4 and P. W. No. 5 precludes the presumption of a gopath or path by dedication, custom or immemorial user."

In my opinion these words are not sufficient to establish that the question of custom was directly and substantially litigated before him. I think, therefore, that there must be a remand. It is necessary to note that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the obstruction complained of is a continuing wrong and that the learned Munsif's view that the claim to a width in excess of the existing path is barred, contravenes the provisions of section 23, Limitation Act. It will be open, therefore, to the lower Courts to determine what is the width of way to which a customary right has been established.

The learned Subordinate Judge's decree will be set aside and the case remanded to him, with a direction that he will send down the 2nd and 3rd issues framed by him to the Court of First Instance for a finding returnable within two months of the record reaching the latter Court. It will be open to both parties to adduce such additional evidence as they may require. On the receipt of the 1st Court's finding the Lower Appellate Court will dispose of the appeal without delay.

It is admitted by both sides before me that no other issues are open and that if the plaintiff fails to prove the custom alleged his whole suit must be dismissed. Costs will abide the result.

Maulvi Nuruddin Ahmed, for the Respondent in No. 24 and the Appellant in No. 25.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In these cases the issue which is material for us to consider was framed in the Court of first instance in this way: "Have the plaintiff and his co-villagers their alleged right of way by necessity, grant or prescription." Evidence was taken with regard to that issue. When the cases came before the learned Judge in the First Appellate Court, he came to the conclusion that the issue which was really material had not been stated in the Court below; and consequently he framed the issue himself, which was in these terms, "Have the plaintiffs acquired the right of user over the disputed path by virtue of any custom." He purported to act under Order XLI, rule 24, Civil Procedure Code, which I need not read; but he purported to deal with it as the re-settling of the issues; and, thereupon, as he thought, having re-settled the issues, he dealt with the cases upon the evidence as it stood, without taking any further evidence or remanding the cases for further evidence. In my judgment, with great respect to the learned Judge, I think he made a mistake. I do not say for a moment that he made a mistake when he said that this was the real issue between the parties. What I mean by saying that he made a mistake is that he did not realise that he was not re-settling the issues, but was framing an entirely new issue which was quite different from any one of those which were tried by the learned Munsif. Therefore he came within Order XLI, rule 25, Code of Civil Procedure, which runs in these terms: "where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits." That is what the learned Judge thought in these cases. Evidently he came to the conclusion that that was the issue which was essential for the right decision of the cases—then what were his powers? "The Appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required." I think that is the course which the learned Judge ought to have taken.

Mr. Justice Mullick has directed as follows: "The Subordinate Judge's decree will be set aside and the case will be remanded to him with a direction that he would send down the 2nd and 3rd issues framed by him to the Court of

PUMULLI MANAKAL NARAYANAN v. VENKITAJELA AIYAR.

First Instance for a finding returnable within two months of the record reaching the latter Court. It will be open to both parties to adduce such additional evidence as they may require. On receipt of the First Court's finding the Lower Appellate Court will dispose of the appeal without delay." I think that is a proper and right order to make in these cases. The result will be that in my judgment both these appeals will be dismissed and Mr. Justice Mullick's order will stand. Inasmuch as neither side has succeeded, there will be no order for costs of these appeals.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—The Privy Council has, no doubt, held in Radha Kunwar v. Reoti Singh (1) that in a suit by a mortgagee for sale, it was irregular to have joined as defendants parties who claimed portions of the mortgaged properties adversely to the mortgagors.

But whether in a suit for redemption, it would be irregular to add persons claiming title to the mortgaged property or portions thereof was not directly decided in that case. In In re Krishnaswami Pathan (2) Mr. Justice Krishnaswami Aiyar held that such a course was not obnoxious to the rules of joinder. The present case seems analogous to the case of In re Krishnaswami Pathan (2).

Even if In re Krishnaswami Pathan (2) was wrongly decided and it was, therefore, the duty of the Court of First Instance to have taken the necessary steps to cure the defect of misjoinder before deciding the suit, the Appellate Court ought not to have reversed the decision of the Court of First Instance on the ground of misjoinder alone, unless such misjoinder had affected "the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court" [section 99 of the Code of Civil Procedure and Vasudeva Ravi Varma v. Athikottil Eazhuvan Kannanur (3).] The Lower Appellate Court has assumed on general observations found in some of the decisions, that the alleged misjoinder in this case must have affected the merits. The grounds of the appeal to the Lower Appellate Court preferred by the 1st defendant and the grounds in the memorandum of objections presented by the 19th defendant in that Court do not allege that the merits or the jurisdiction of the Court were affected. It is on the facts of each case, the evidence and the course of the trial in the Court of First Instance that the question whether merits or jurisdiction have been affected should be decided. In the present case, we think that there is no question of the jurisdiction having been affected and if the merits have been affected at all, the justice of the case could be fully met by allowing the defendants Nos. 1 and 19 to let in any further evidence on the question of improvements and on the title to the lands claimed by the 19th defendant, which the Lower Appellate Court thinks would have been adduced or is necessary to be allowed to be adduced for deciding the case satisfactorily.

We, therefore, set aside the Lower Appellate Court's decision and direct the Appeals Nos. 320 and 360 of 1911 on the file of that Court with the connected memorandum of objections to be restored to file and direct that Court to re-hear the appeals and to pass a fresh decision according to law after allowing an opportunity to the defendants Nos. 1 and 19 to adduce fresh evidence on the points above mentioned, the plaintiff being at liberty to adduce rebutting evidence so far as it is permitted by the law. Costs in all Courts will be provided for in the revised decision of the Lower Appellate Court.

In the Sonthal Pergannas a contract between a borrower and a lender for the repayment with interest of the principal sum borrowed, which is really a subtle device for the purpose of evading the provisions of section 6 of Regulation III of 1872, is not invalid, and the Court ought to enforce the contract in accordance with the provisions of the Regulation regulating the rate at which interest is to be allowed. [p. 417, col. 1.]

Rs. 550 were borrowed in the Sonthal Pergannas on condition of repayment by 550 maunds of paddy within four months. It was found that on the due date of repayment the price of paddy was Rs. 2 per maund:

Held, that though the condition contravened the provisions of Regulation III of 1872, still having regard to the real meaning of the contract the plaintiff was entitled to recover the principal and 25 per cent. interest from the date of the loan up to the date of repayment mentioned in the contract and in addition interest at 12 per cent from the date of repayment mentioned in the contract up to the date on which the suit was instituted and then from the date of the institution of the suit at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until realisation. Appeals under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 27th January 1916, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 4150 of 1913.

NEWBOULD, J.—In this suit the appellant claimed Rs. 1,100 on a mortgage-bond executed by the defendant. The defendant had borrowed Rs. 550 in cash from the plaintiff in Kartick 1315 and undertook to re-pay 550 maunds of paddy in Magh the same year and mortgaged 20 bighas odd land as security. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,100 on the ground that the price of paddy in Magh 1315 was Rs. 2 per maund. Both the lower Courts have held that this was contrary to the provisions of section 6 of Regulation III of 1872, the Sonthal Pergannas Settlement Regulation, and granted a mortgage-decree for the principal amount only without any interest.

I agree with the learned District Judge that the agreement to repay the money lent by paddy of greater value was an agreement to repay the loan with interest and that the provisions of section 6 of the Regulation are applicable. But I cannot agree with him that the agreement is contrary to the provisions of that Regulation or a device to evade its provisions and the contract is, therefore, void under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act. A similar case came before this Court, the case of Shama Charan Misser v. Chuni Lal Marwari (1), in which the effect of an agreement to pay compound interest, which is also referred to in section 6 of the Regulation, had to be considered. It has been pointed out in that case that there is no law or Regulation laying down that an agreement between any two persons living in the Sonthal Pergannas to pay compound interest upon the amount borrowed is "unlawful" within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act. All that the law provides is that compound interest will not be decreed by any Court. Mutatis mutandis this decision is equally applicable to an agreement to pay interest at a higher rate than two per cent. per mensem. There is nothing illegal in such a contract but it will not be enforced by any Court at the higher rate. The contract in question must be regarded as a contract to pay interest at a higher rate. But no Court on that agreement can allow interest at a higher rate than two per cent. per mensem as provided in section 6. The suit was brought three years and nine months after the contract was entered into and interest at the statutory rate for that period amounts to Rs. 425 (rupees four hundred and ninety-five only). The plaintiff is entitled, therefore, to recover the principal and the interest for the same, Rs. 1,045 (rupees one thousand and forty-five only) in all and the decrees of the Court below will, therefore, be varied by increasing the amount decreed from Rs. 550 to Rs. 1,045. The appellant will get his costs in all the Courts.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for the Appellant in No. 52.—The suit was brought on a mortgage-bond executed by the defendant-appellant. The money lent on the bond was only Rs. 550. There was no stipulation to pay interest, but the mortgagor agreed in the mortgage-bond to deliver, about three months after the mortgage, 550 maunds of paddy to the mortgagee. This agreement for the delivery of 550 maunds of paddy in lieu of interest was nothing but a device to get rid of the provisions of section 6 of the Sonthal Pergannas Regulation III of 1872, which restricts the right of the mortgagee to realise interest on the money advanced at more than a certain rate specified in the section. The Hon'ble Judge was wrong in allowing interest at 24 per cent. per annum from the date of loan to the date of suit. The plaintiff did not claim any interest after the due date. He only claimed the value of the paddy agreed to be paid, which was Rs. 1,100. My client is not liable to pay interest at 24 per cent. per annum upto the date of suit. He is not liable to pay interest to the plaintiff for the period subsequent to the due date of delivery, as there is no such stipulation in the mortgage-bond to that effect. The English and Indian cases go to show that interest as such cannot be allowed in the absence of any agreement to that effect.

Then as regards the contract to pay 550 maunds of paddy in lieu of interest, I submit that the contract is void and unenforceable because it is in contravention of section 6 of the Sonthal Pergannas Regulation III of 1872. The effect of the contract is to give the plaintiff more than what he can demand under the law, and to make the defendant liable to pay an amount which he is not liable to pay under the law. The object of the law would be defeated if the plaintiff be allowed to enjoy the effect of this ingenious device. So the defendant was fully justified in refusing to deliver 550 maunds of paddy.

The plaintiff can, no doubt, claim damages, which should be assessed at a reasonable rate. It cannot be 24 per cent. per annum.

Maulvi A. Ahmad, for the Respondent in No. 52.—My client does not claim interest. There is a simple contract in the mortgage-bond for the delivery of paddy for the breach of which the plaintiff is entitled to get damages. The amount that has been awarded, whether call it interest or damages, is reasonable.

As regards Regulation III of 1872, I submit that it does not apply when there is a contract to deliver paddy on a certain date. The Regulation can be made applicable to a case where there is a loan with a stipulation to pay interest on the money lent. The case of Shama Charan Misser v. Chuni Lal Marwari (1) lays down that a contract in contravention of section 6 of the Regulation is valid. The stipulation has never been found by any of the Courts below as a device to avoid the provisions of the Sonthal Pergannas law.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Newbould raises a point which is somewhat out of the ordinary.

I do not suppose that the decision that I am about to give will be a precedent in other cases, because I imagine that the particular form of the contract in the present case is not a usual one. The borrower of Rs. 550 entered into an agreement dated the 10th of Kartick 1315, reciting that he borrowed on that day Rs. 550 "for the purpose of purchasing hide with- in the month of Magh of the current year which is the period fixed for repayment." Then instead of undertaking to repay the money, the method of repayment was as follows:—

"I shall pay off by 550 maunds of dried autumnal paddy by weighing them on the same day, at the rate of one maund per rupee, and I shall have it entered on the back of this deed;" so that, the method of repayment was by delivery of certain paddy which is to be 550 maunds at the rate of one maund per rupee. Then the borrower said: "If I fail to pay the paddy I shall be liable to make good the gain which would accrue to you by purchase and sale with the said money."

Now, the learned Judge in the first Appellate Court came to the conclusion that this was really a subtle device for the purpose of evading the provisions of Regulation III of 1872, a Regulation for the peace and good government of the territory known as the Sonthal Pergannas. He based this conclusion on the fact that it was proved that the price of paddy in Magh 1315 was Rs. 2 per maund, i.e., the sum repayable was Rs. 1,100, the result being that the Rs. 550 was to double itself in three months. I think that is a conclusion which he was justified in coming to upon the terms of this agreement. It was in effect an agreement to repay the principal sum which was borrowed and interest at the rate of 100 per cent. on the date of repayment, namely, Magh 1335. Having come to the conclusion that it was a device to evade the Regulation, what is the result?

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the whole contract was invalid. Then, I think, he rather abandoned that position and said that he could not dispute that the principal sum could be recovered but he contended that no interest was recoverable. I do not think that the contract was invalid. I think that having come to the conclusion that the real effect of the contract was an undertaking to repay the principal and interest at the rate of something like 100 per cent. within three months, what we have then to see is what the Court would do in such a case. We find that in the Regulation there are certain provisions varying according to the period for which interest is to be calculated, which direct the Court as to the rate at which the interest is to be allowed. I think the Court ought to enforce the contract in accordance with those provisions of the Regulation. Therefore, the period for which interest was to be calculated, having regard to the real meaning of the contract, was from the date of the loan to the month of Magh in the same year, which the learned Vakil told me was about $3\frac{1}{2}$ months. In my judgment inasmuch as that is less than a year, applying the Regulation section 6, paragraph (6), the rate of interest for that period would be 25 per cent. Therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the principal and 25 per cent. interest from the date of the loan down to the date of repayment mentioned in the contract.

In addition to that, the plaintiff is entitled to damages, inasmuch as the defendant did not pay that which he was legally bound to pay under the contract; and the question then arises, what will be the rate of interest which the defendant should be charged in respect of the period after the date of repayment mentioned in the contract. We have had certain cases mentioned to us in some of which 6 per cent. interest was allowed, in some of which 12 per cent. was allowed, and in some of which 25 per cent. was allowed. Having regard to all the circumstances of this case, I am of opinion that 12 per cent. would be a reasonable rate of interest to be allowed from the date of repayment mentioned in the contract down to the date on which the suit was instituted: and, then from the date of the institution of the suit at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until realisation.

Inasmuch as the plaintiff succeeded to some extent but has not succeeded to the full extent for which he contended, I think the fairest thing as regards costs in this appeal is to make each party pay their own costs of this hearing.

This judgment disposes of both the appeals (Nos. 52 and 55), and we direct that each party do pay their own costs of this hearing in Appeal No. 55 also.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 44, 144—Joint Hindu family—Alienation by manager of minor co-parcener's property, describing himself as minor's guardian—Suit for possession after majority, nature of —Guardian and ward—Limitation.

Article 44, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act applies to cases in which a person acts as a guardian of a minor in respect of property in which he has individual rights of ownership.

A suit by a member of a joint Hindu family for possession of property alienated by the manager during the plaintiff's minority describing himself as the guardian of the minor, is not a suit to set aside a sale by a guardian to which Article 44 of the Limitation Act applies, but is one for possession of immoveable property within the meaning of Article 144.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 186 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif's Court, Chodavaram, in Original Suit No. 918 of 1911.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General), for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that Article 44 of the Limitation Act 1877 cannot properly be applied to this case.

No doubt in the sale-deed the plaintiff's brother is described as the guardian of the minor as well as his senior brother, but the family was admittedly an undivided one, and it is a well-established principle of law that in an undivided family no guardian can be appointed for a minor co-parcener who has no separate property [see Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh (1) and Bindaji v. Mathuratai (2).]

The case reported as Sivavadvelu Pillay v. Ponnammal (3) was one in which the minor's guardian was his mother and no question of co-parcenary property was raised. The transaction evidenced by the sale-deed, Exhibit I, was essentially one of sale by the managing member of a joint Hindu family. Article 44 may apply to cases in which a person acts as a guardian of a minor in respect of property in which he has individual rights of ownership.

The view that we take coincides with the view taken in a similar case, Radhu Ram v. Mohan Singh (4), and we adopt the reasoning of the learned Judges who decided that case. Under Article 144 of the Limitation Act we think that the plaintiff had 12 years' time to sue for possession. We, therefore, allow the appeal and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for decision according to law of the other issues arising in the case. Costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will abide and follow the result.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3, applicability of—Dispossession by landlord as such, whether necessary—Limitation.

In order that the special rule of limitation as comprised in Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act may apply, it is not necessary that the dispossession must be by the landlord as such. [p.
420, col. 1.]

A suit by a ryot to recover possession of a holding, from which he was dispossessed by the defendants with whom it was settled by the landlords after they had purchased it in execution of a decree, is governed by Article 3, Schedule III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 420, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 15th March 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, Diamond Harbour, dated the 13th
December 1911.

Babu Ramchandra Mojumdar (with him
Babu Panchanan Ghose for Babu Chandra Sekhar Banerji), for the Appellants.—The only question for which your Lordships' decision is invited in this case is the point of limitation, whether in the present case Article
3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies or whether the ordinary rule of twelve years applies. I submit that the special limitation of two years is clearly applicable here and as such the suit is not maintainable. The lower Appellate Court has erred in law in thinking that Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act is no bar to the present suit. The appellants, in order to invoke the aid of Article 3, Schedule
III, are not required to show that dispossession was by the landlords as such.
Refers to the judgment of Fletcher and Teunon, JJ., in Fani Bhusan Sarkar v. Pulin Chandra Mandal (1), where Fletcher, J., held that nothing warrants the addition of such words as 'by the landlords as such' after the wording in the 3rd column of Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Refers to Rudra Narain Maity Natabar Jana

Babu Sashi Sikhar Bose (with him Babu Biraj Mohan Mozumdar), for the Respondents.—
In your Lordships' judgment in Fani Bhusan Sarkar v. Pulin Chandra Mandal (1), it is said that there was an ouster by the landlord and so the special law of limitation of two years applied. In *Rudra Narain Maity
v. Natabar Jana* (2) the tenant was ousted by a purchaser at the instance of the landlord. So the 2 years' limitation applied.
In Basanta Kumari v. Nanda Ram (3) ouster was not by the landlord. The judgment in Kamal Dhari Thakur v. Rameshwar Singh
(4) considers all the other cases on the point. In the present case Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be applied and so the appeal cannot succeed.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5 from a decision of the learned Additional District Judge of the 24-Pergannahs, dated the 15th March 1913, affirming a decision of the Munsif at Diamond Harbour. The only question raised in this appeal is the question of limitation and that is whether Article 3
of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to this case or whether the ordinary rate of twelve years applies. The father of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was the landlord of the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants. He obtained in the first instance, in the year 1899, an ex parte decree for rent. That was set aside and the case was tried on the merits and a new decree was passed. In execution of that decree the property was put up to sale and purchased by the landlord and possession was delivered in the year 1904. Then the landlord settled some of the lands with the present tenants, the defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5. The plaintiffs brought their suit for possession of a 13-anna share of the property, alleging that the dispossession took place in 1909. The only question that has been argued in this appeal is whether the special rule of limitation applies to a case of this nature or whether, as some of the cases say, the dispossession, in order that the special rule of limitation comprised in Article 3 of Schedule III may apply, must be by the landlord as such. The decisions are not all one way. There are conflicting decisions on this point. The latest decision is one of my own which is in favour of the appellants and, in the view that the matter is one on which different Courts have come to different conclusions, I think my own decision in which Mr. Justice Teunon concurred is, with all due respect, as much likely to be right as the others. The words "as such" do not appear in the Article and it is admitted that the special rule of limitation, which was passed apparently for the reason that disputes between landlord and tenant as to ouster should be settled and determined within the shorter period fixed by the Legislature rather than the longer period of twelve years, is considerably cut into by the addition of words in the Article such as the words "when the landlord dispossesses as such." There are no such words in the Article and I do not see why the Article should be limited or the generality of the language used therein cut down because it may be a hard case on the tenant. These holdings are of small value as a rule and it is essential that disputes of this nature should be decided within the shorter period mentioned in the Article. I see no reason to dissent from the judgment that I delivered in Fani Bhusan Sarkar v. Pulin Chandra Mandal (1). That being so, I do not agree in the view of the learned Additional District Judge. The learned Munsif came to this finding. That assuming that the special rule of limitation contained in Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied, he was of opinion that the evidence did not show that the dispossession took place in 1312 as alleged by the defendants and, therefore, the plaintiffs' suit, in any event, was brought within time. The learned Additional District Judge made no finding in this respect. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court for the purpose of making a finding as to whether the suit was brought within time, having regard to the fact that, in our opinion, the special rule of limitation does apply, and then to pass a decree according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Adverse possession, whether question of law—Burden of proof—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 142—Possession, suit for—Limitation.

A question of adverse possession may be a question of law where the facts are not in dispute and where the conclusion depends upon inferences to be drawn from admitted facts. [p. 420, col. 2.]

A plaintiff in a suit for possession has to show title and where it is alleged that he is out of possession, he must show affirmatively that he has been in possession within twelve years of the suit. [p. 420, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous reference made by the Additional District Judge, Ajmer-Merwara, dated the 1st February 1916.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The first point we have to decide is whether in this case before us there is a question of law. It was decided as such on appeal in Ajmer and was referred to us as such. It is well settled that a question of adverse possession, where the facts are not in dispute and where, therefore, it depends upon inferences to be drawn from admitted facts, may be a conclusion of law. We think that is the condition of things before us. Secondly, it has been urged by Mr. Panna Lal with great force that the onus is on the plaintiff. We agree. A plaintiff has to show title and where it is alleged that he is out of possession, he must show affirmatively that he has been in possession within twelve years of the suit. But possession may be ambiguous. Nothing shows that better than the case to which my brother called attention, decided by the Privy Council and reported as Corea v. Appuhamy (1). In that case there was no dispute about the facts. The only question in the first Court was whether the person in possession had taken possession as heir or as a squatter. The Privy Council held on the facts that he had come into possession in the only capacity he could lawfully come into possession as one of several co-owners, and they held as a matter of law that nothing having happened to change his position, his possession never became adverse. Applying that principle to the facts of this case, so far as they are known, it seems to us that the right conclusion is that Mangal at any rate from and after 1903 was in possession either as tenant or as agent or as licensee of his uncle Jai Lal, and that his possession was, therefore, permissive. At any rate the facts are such as to throw the onus upon the present defendant to satisfy the Court that the possession was adverse. The authorities which Mr. Panna Lal has referred to only deal with the question of onus, which may be shifted by evidence. Such evidence may lead either to a contrary conclusion or leave the facts ambiguous. Neither party here was in a position to prove how Mangal originally came into possession of this upper storey, but it is perfectly clear that when he was in possession he was a member of a joint family and, therefore, as a matter of law he could not be in adverse possession at that time. A partition took place in 1894 when his father had his share partitioned and the property in question remained the joint property of the other two brothers. So that neither Mangal nor his father had any interest in it. Nonetheless he was allowed to remain in possession. In 1895 another partition took place and the property in question was then partitioned and given to Jai Lal. Nonetheless Mangal remained still in possession. We think this fact alone, namely, the quick succession of parties and the continuance of possession in Mangal is in itself significant and rather raises the inference that he was allowed to continue after the partition, as he had been before the partition, in possession without interference by the other members of the family, but two things happened in 1903 which in the absence of any explanation to the contrary to our mind raise a very strong presumption. A certain person Kistur Chand, who was called as a witness, took a mortgage of this very property from Jai Lal in 1903 as he said. He knew the relationship of the parties and as we read his evidence he went out of his way, knowing that Mangal was in possession and that Jai Lal was purporting to deal with the property, to take what he called a rent-note from Jai Lal because he said he was Mangal's uncle. It seems to us not improbable that Mangal knew all about this transaction and of course if he did, it was an arrangement to which he was a party and which is wholly inconsistent with his present contention; but whether he did or not know precisely of this particular transaction it is to our minds sufficient, if unexplained, to show that at that time Mangal was in possession for and on behalf of his uncle Jai Lal who was looking after the property. The other point is that Jai Lal did not live there but lived far away while Mangal had always done so, and nothing is more natural in a joint family of this kind than that the uncle should allow the nephew to continue as he had done while the property was still joint. It is not suggested that since 1903 Mangal has done anything at all to show what is called adverse possession. We hold taking all these circumstances together that they are sufficient to justify the conclusion that Mangal was in possession, first, as a member of the joint family and after partition, for and on behalf of Jai Lal and not independently of him. The first Court set out the law perfectly correctly, but it overlooked the fact that the expression adopted in the judgment from the authority which was being quoted, namely, "the character of an agent", applied to the facts of this particular case. The Additional District Judge held that there was nothing on the record to show that the possession was permissive. That is where we differ from him, we think there is just enough and it is to be observed that the presumption as against Chatar Bhuj who sold this property, that the possession was always permissive, is in his case the only possible presumption consistent with his being an honest man. We do not think it well to answer the question in the precise terms of the reference, as it is submitted somewhat in the abstract. We do not hold that when the parties are cousins the presumption of permission always arises, but we hold that on the facts of this particular case, there being nothing to show that respondent No. 1 ever exerted his possession adversely, the possession as a matter of inference justified by the evidence was with the permission first of the joint family and subsequently with the permission of Jai Lal. The question is, therefore, answered in favour of the purchaser. We think, therefore, that the appeal to the Court, from which the reference was made, should be allowed with costs, which under section 20 of Regulation No. 1 of 1877 will include the costs of this reference. We think the costs certified are reasonable.

Inasmuch as the parties to a submission to arbitration have the right to the presence and effect of the arguments, experience and judgment of each arbitrator at every stage of the proceedings, so that by conference they may mutually assist each other in arriving at a just conclusion, it is essential that there should be a unanimous participation by the arbitrators in consulting and deliberating upon the award to be made. The operation of this rule is in no way affected by the fact that authority is conferred upon the arbitrators to make a majority award; even where less than the whole number of arbitrators may make a valid award, they cannot do so without consulting the other arbitrators. JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this appeal to consider the propriety of an order of dismissal of an application under paragraph 17 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, for the enforcement of a private award. The relevant portion of the agreement of reference was in these terms:—

“Considering it desirable to decide the matters in dispute by arbitrators and so appointing the above-mentioned gentlemen as arbitrators, we execute this deed of reference and agree that the award, which all the arbitrators unanimously or the majority of the arbitrators will make, will be accepted as a decree of a superior Court and will have force and be valid at all places. In case of difference of opinion among the arbitrators, the majority of them will make and be competent to make their award unanimously. To that no objection by any of us will be entertained nor shall we be competent to make any.” Under this instrument, five gentlemen were appointed arbitrators, three of whom alone signed the award. The application with which we are now concerned was made for the enforcement of this award. The defendant objected that there was no valid award in law because two of the arbitrators had not attended all the sittings and one at least did not take part in the final deliberations. The plaintiff contended that inasmuch as three arbitrators who had made the award had attended all the meetings, and as a majority of the arbitrators was competent to make a valid award, the award was legal and enforceable. The Subordinate Judge has overruled these contentions on the ground that all the arbitrators should be present at all the meetings and particularly at the last when the final act of arbitration is done, though as a result of this united deliberation there may be an award by a majority only of them. In our opinion, the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is correct.

It is now firmly settled, as ruled in Nand Ram v. Fakir Chand (1), that when a case has been referred to arbitration, the presence of all the arbitrators at all the meetings and above all at the last meeting, when the final act of arbitration is done, is essential to the validity of the award. There the case had been referred by the Court to the arbitration of three persons and the parties had agreed to be bound as to the matters in dispute by the decision of the majority. One of the arbitrators subsequently refused to act and withdrew from the arbitration. Oldfield and Mahmood, JJ., held that the award of the majority was not binding. A similar view was taken in Sreenath Ghose v. Raj Chunder Paul (2). Our attention, however, has been drawn to the earlier decision in Kazee Syud Naser Ali v. Musammat Tinoo Dossia (3) as an authority for the contrary position. We are of opinion that this case is clearly distinguishable, and is an authority only for the proposition that an award of arbitrators cannot be set aside on the ground that it is erroneous for that only two out of three arbitrators signed the award when the parties agreed to abide by the decision of the majority. There is nothing to indicate that the arbitrator who did not sign the award had not taken part in the deliberations. The principle which underlies the view we take is best stated in the words of Russell, which have now become classical, quoted as they were with approval in In re Beck and Jackson (4) and Khelut Chunder Ghose v. Tarachurn Koondoo (5): "As the arbitrators must all act, so must they all act together. They must each be present at every meeting; and the witnesses and the parties must be examined in the presence of them all; for the parties are entitled to have recourse to the arguments, experience and judgment of each arbitrator at every stage of the proceedings brought to bear on the minds of his fellow Judges, so that by conference they shall mutually assist each other in arriving at a just decision." The same point of view had been emphasised in Dalling v. Matchett (6), where the Court of Common Pleas observed as follows:—"It has often been said that if that one had been present," that is, the arbitrator who did not attend, "he could not by his vote have turned the majority the other way, when all the rest were unanimous; yet it has always received this answer that every one has a right to argue and debate as well as to give his vote and it is possible at least that the person absent may, if he had been present at the meeting, have made use of such arguments as may have brought over the majority of the rest to be of his opinion." The matter was put substantially in the same way in Pering and Keymer, In the matter of (7). Lord Denman observed: "Any two, under such submission as this, that is, a submission which provides for a valid award by the majority, may make a good award. But then it must be after discussion with the other arbitrator. If after discussion, it appears that there is no chance of agreement with one of the arbitrators, the others may indeed proceed without him." Coleridge, J., added: "The parties have not got what they stipulated for. They stipulated that two at least should make the award; but no two could make it till each arbitrator had been consulted." This view accords with that adopted in Peterson v. Ayre (8); White v. Sharp (9); Templeman, In re (10); Burton v. Knight (11); Morgan v. Bolt (12) and Doberor v. Morgan (13).

We adopt the principle that inasmuch as the parties to the submission have the right to the presence and effect of the arguments, experience and judgment of each arbitrator at every stage of the proceedings, so that by conference they may mutually assist each other in arriving at a just conclusion, it is essential that there should be a unanimous participation by the arbitrators in consulting and deliberating upon the award to be made; the operation of this rule is in no way affected by the fact that authority is conferred upon the arbitrators to make a majority award; even where less than the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 5—Instalment decree—Default—Application for final decree, nature of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181.

Under the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, an application for a final decree is not an application in execution. [p. 425, col. 1.]

In a suit on a mortgage a compromise was effected by which the defendant was required to pay the money by certain instalments and in default of payment of any one instalment the property was to be sold for the full amount of the claim. On default being made, the decree-holder applied under Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, for a final decree. The application was dismissed on the ground that the decree was barred by time.

Held, that Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applied to the case and that time began to run from the date when default was made. [p. 425, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 6th January 1916.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. Radha Kanta Malaviya, for the Appellant.—A compromise was effected in a mortgage suit. The mortgagor agreed to pay the amount of the mortgage by instalments. It was also agreed that if any default was made in the payment of instalments the decree-holder shall be entitled to get the property sold. Certain instalments have been paid. The first default was made on the 2nd of February 1915. The decree-holder then applied for a final decree. The Courts below dismissed the application as barred by time. The application is not an application in execution, but is for obtaining a final decree and the applicant is entitled to obtain a final decree if he comes within time of the first default. The case is governed by Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan, for the Respondents.—The payment of the instalments having not been certified as provided by Order XXI, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the Court could not recognize the payments. The application is clearly three years after the date of the decree and as such is barred by time. The case of Chhattar Singh v. Amir Singh (1) clearly covers the case.

Mr. Radha Kanta Malaviya was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was originally instituted upon foot of a mortgage. The suit resulted in a compromise decree, which provided that the defendants should pay Rs. 600 by certain instalments therein mentioned and that in default of any one of the instalments the property should be sold for the full amount of the claim and costs. It is alleged (and we may assume for the purposes of this appeal) that the judgment-debtors paid several of the instalments. According to the decree-holder default was first of all made on the 2nd of February 1915. Such default having been made, the present application was preferred for a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 5. The Court below has dismissed the application as being barred by time. The Court relying on a decision of this Court [affirmed by the decision reported as Chhattar Singh v. Amir Singh (1)], has dismissed the application as barred by time. The case referred to was a case of a simple money decree and the application was for execution. Order XXI, rule 2, clause 3, provides that any payment or adjustment which has not been certified in the prescribed manner shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. The application in the present case was not an application for execution of the decree. Under the present Code an application for a final decree is not an application in execution. The case cited, therefore, has no application. The Court below seems to have applied Article 182 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. The proper Article in our opinion is Article 181 and limitation should run from the time when default was made. It will be for the Court below to ascertain when default was made, if at all. We must allow the appeal, set aside the decisions of both the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of First Instance through the Lower Appellate Court, with directions to re-admit the application under its original number in the file and proceed to hear and determine the same according to law. Costs will be costs in the cause. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 12, 5—Time requisite for obtaining copies—Application on day of delivery of judgment—Exclusion of day twice over, whether permissible—Bona fide mistake.

Where copies of a decree and judgment are applied for on the same day on which judgment is pronounced, the appellant is entitled to exclude that day from the period of limitation only once, as the day on which judgment is pronounced.

The period of limitation, with reference to the provision as regards time for obtaining copies, means the period of limitation beginning to run from the day after the delivery of judgment, and, therefore, no portion of time previous to this period can be deducted as time requisite for obtaining copies.

If a man chooses to adopt his own methods of calculation and files his appeal on the last possible day according to that method, he has only himself to thank if his method of calculation is erroneous.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 8th July 1915, confirming that of the Additional Judge to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Khandwa, dated the 12th March 1915,

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is only in time if the appellant can, in computing the period of limitation, exclude from the period the same day twice. Judgment was delivered on the 8th July and copies of judgment and decree were applied for on the same day. Copies were delivered on the 21st July. The fourteen days from the 8th to the 21st inclusive being deducted from the time taken by the appellant before he lodged his appeal, the appeal is time barred. The appellant wishes to deduct the 8th July twice over with reference to the provisions of section 12 of the Limitation Act. It would be manifestly absurd to deduct the same day twice, but I prefer to state the matter in a more logical manner. Section 12 (2) provides that the period of limitation shall not begin to run until the day after judgment is pronounced. The period of limitation, with reference to the provision as regards time for obtaining copy, means the period of limitation beginning to run from the day after the delivery of judgment. So much of this period as is taken up in obtaining copy may be deducted, but no portion of time previous to this period can be deducted. The period of limitation referred to in the section is the actual period beginning on a certain date, not an abstract number of days. One day cannot last more than one day, and be the equivalent of two. The learned Advocate for the appellant urges that the appellant made a bona fide mistake. If a man chooses to adopt his own methods of calculation and files his appeal on the last possible day according to that method, he has only himself to thank if his method of calculation is erroneous. He should not run things so fine. The appeal is dismissed with costs as time-barred.

A purchaser of an ijmali share of an estate at a revenue sale, which is subsequently set aside at the instance of the original proprietors, is nevertheless entitled to realise rents from the tenants until the recovery of actual possession by the decree-holders.

Syed Muhammad Tahir, for the Appellant.

Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—These appeals arise out of suits for rent. The tenants' defence was that the plaintiff had no title. The plaintiff had purchased an ijmali share of an estate at a revenue sale in September 1901. The original proprietors brought a suit to set aside the sale at which the plaintiff had purchased. The suit succeeded in the first Court but was dismissed by the High Court in appeal. It finally succeeded on appeal to the Privy Council but although the original proprietors succeeded in their suit the finding is that they did not succeed in actually obtaining possession of this particular property. In these circumstances the learned District Judge held that until recovery of actual possession by the decree-holders, the plaintiff should continue to realise rents from the tenants. I am of opinion that this is the correct view to take.

It is contended in appeal before us, first, that the Privy Council having set aside the sale, the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to recover any rent. This contention does not appear to be valid. So long as the plaintiff remains in possession he should be entitled to continue to recover the rent, otherwise, as the learned District Judge points out, neither the plaintiff nor the persons who have failed to recover possession can realise the rents.

Then it is contended that the learned District Judge should not have held that the plaintiff was still in possession. The finding is based upon an order of the Subordinate Judge in a suit subsequently instituted. This evidence appears to have been admitted in appeal without objection. It was relevant evidence and in fact it was conclusive of the question whether the plaintiff was or was not in possession. I am not disposed to interfere with the admission of this evidence in first appeal. The result is that these appeals are dismissed with costs.

An order in first appeal setting aside an execution sale on the ground of fraudulent suppression of the sale proclamation and consequent inadequacy of price does not become open to second appeal, merely because the judgment-debtor impeached the sale not only on the ground of fraud in the publication of sale but also on the ground of fraud antecedent to the publication, and the Court of First Appeal held that the latter was not established. KAMER-UN-NISSA BIBI v. SUGHRA BIBI.

August 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Bagerhat, dated the 24th February, 1915.

Babu Harendra Krishna Mukherjee, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this appeal is barred under sub-section 2 of section 104, Code of Civil Procedure. The appellant was the decree-holder in the Court below, and at his instance the property of the judgment-debtors was sold in execution on the 17th July 1912. On the 25th April 1914, the judgment-debtors applied to have the sale set aside, on the ground that it was vitiated by material irregularity and fraud in publication. But they also alleged fraud of a more comprehensive character, viz., that the decree-holder had taken out execution, though his decree had been satisfied in full out of Court. The Trial Court dismissed the application. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the allegation that the decree had been satisfied in full was not established. He came to the conclusion, however, that the sale proclamation had been fraudulently suppressed, and that the property had been purchased by the decree-holder at a price much lower than its proper value. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge has set aside the sale under rules 90 and 92 of Order XXI of the Code. On the present appeal it is contended that the case falls beyond the scope of rule 90 of Order XXI and comes within the scope of section 47, in so far as the judgment-debtors impeached the sale on the ground of fraud antecedent to its publication and that, in this view, the order of the Subordinate Judge is a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure and is appealable as such. It is not necessary to determine, whether the decision of a question of fraud antecedent to the publication and conduct of sale, brings the case within the scope of section 47; for it is plain that in so far as fraud was imputed in connection with the publication of the sale, the case is covered completely by rule 90. The order of the Subordinate Judge, in so far as the case was within the scope of rule 90, was thus an order under that rule, and that rule alone. We cannot hold that by reason of an allegation of fraud of a more comprehensive scope, the character of the decision of the question within the scope of rule 90 was altered. The order of the Court of First Instance was thus open to appeal under Order XLIII, rule 1 (j), and the order passed in appeal was final under section 104(2). Consequently, the present appeal is incompetent in so far as the case is within the scope of rule 90. As the validity of the order cannot be assailed in second appeal, when regarded as an order based on the ground of fraud in the publication of the sale, it is immaterial to consider whether fraud of a wider scope imputed to the decree-holder has or has not been established: cf. Jadab Chandra v. Joy Gopal (1). The result is that this appeal is dismissed.

Custom, meaning of—Pre-emption—Single proprietor, acquiring entire village, effect of—Custom, whether continues to exist.

Custom means a practice prevailing amongst a certain community and if that community has been reduced to a single individual, it is impossible that the practice can any longer exist. [p. 428, col. 2.]

Therefore, where once an entire village has come into the ownership of a single individual, that individual is entitled to dispose of his property to any one he pleases without its being subject to any right of pre-emption, unless the sale is made expressly subject to such right. [p. 428, col. 2.]

Powell v. Powell, First Appeal No. 302 of 1910, decided on the 22nd of March 1912, followed.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 14th September 1915

FACTS.—The appellant Musammât Kamer-un-nissa Bibi purchased on 16th May 1913 a 4 annas share in village Dhelwa from defendants 2nd party, who are respondents in this appeal. There were two other deeds of transfer between the parties but the questions of law involved in all those cases were the same. Musammam Sughera Bibi, a co sharer in the village, brought three suits to pre-empt the properties transferred; but this report relates to the first sale-deed only, viz., the one dated 16th May 1913. The plaintiff came into Court on the basis of custom as detailed in the wajib-ul-araiz of 1840 and 1881 and in the alternative on contract, if the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1881 be interpreted as a contract. Finally he fell back on the Muhammadan Law. The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit on the ground that there existed no custom of pre-emption in the village as in the year 1881. There was only one person as proprietor and thus the custom, if any, came to an end. It also held that there was no contract and that the demands required by Muhammadan Law had not been made. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who allowed the appeal and held that the custom of pre-emption had been proved and the fact that in 1881 there was only one proprietor did not show that the right of pre-emption came to an end, but it only put an end to the exercise of that right. The defendant 1st party, thereupon, appealed to the High Court.

Sir Sundar Lal (with him Messrs. Abdul Raoof, Mukhtar Ahmad and Kamlakant Verma), for the Appellant, submitted that for the custom of pre-emption to exist there must be at least two persons; therefore, as soon as a single person became proprietor of the village, the custom, if any, ceased to exist. The view of the learned District Judge to the contrary was incorrect.

He referred to Powell v. Powell, First Appeal No. 302 of 1910, decided on the 22nd of March 1912.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman (for Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Respondent, submitted that during the time there was a single proprietor in the village, the custom of pre-emption was in abeyance; it did not disappear. The custom had now become enforceable as there were now more proprietors than one.

Dr. Sundar Lal was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is connected with Second Appeals No. 140 and No 141 of 1916. They were all disposed of by one judgment. All three appeals arise out of pre-emption suits. The plaintiff in each case came into Court seeking to pre-empt certain property and relying both upon alleged village custom and Muhammadan Law. The Court of First Instance in each case dismissed the suit. The Lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of First Instance. That Court has held that there is an existing custom of pre-emption under which the plaintiff is entitled to get possession of the property upon payment of the price found to have been paid by the defendant vendee. The Court below, having decided that the custom of pre-emption existed, felt it unnecessary to consider whether the formalities required by Muhammadan Law had been complied with. We may assume for the purposes of the present appeal that some time prior to the year 1881 there was a custom of pre-emption prevailing which was recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1840. We find, however, that some time prior to 1881 (and in the year 1881) the mahal was the property of a single proprietor. It seems to us quite impossible that there could be a custom of pre-emption in existence when the property belonged to a single individual. The Lower Appellate Court seems to have thought that it was merely the right to exercise the power that was in abeyance. We do not think that this view can be accepted. "Custom" means a practice prevailing amongst a certain community. If that community has been reduced to a single individual, it is impossible that the practice can any longer exist. It seems to us equally clear that once the property had come into the ownership of a single individual, that individual was entitled to dispose of his property to any one he pleased without its being subject to any right of pre-emption (unless the sale was made expressly subject to such right). We have already decided this same question in another case. See First Appeal No. 302 of 1910, decided on the 22nd of March 1912, Powell v. Powell. In our opinion the Court below was wrong in holding that a custom of pre-emption existed at the time of the sale in question. No doubt a custom might grow up again in the course of time, but there is no evidence to justify any such finding in the present case and this is not the finding of the Court below. Nor can it be said that a contract between the co-sharers has been proved. In 1881 (when the latest record of pre-emption was made) the property was, as already stated, in the hands of a single proprietor. The fact that there is such a record appearing in the wajib-ul-arz of a mahal in the hands of a single proprietor is another instance that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz is not always trustworthy. Before finally deciding the appeal we must refer the second issue to the Court below, namely, whether the formalities required by the Muhammadan Law were performed by the plaintiff pre-emptor. This issue will be deemed to be taken in all three cases and the Court will decide the issue upon the evidence already on the record. The case will be put up on return of the finding before any Bench of two Judges.

Per Wallis, C. J.—All that the illustration to clause (c) of section 27 of the Specific Relief Act shows is, that if one of several joint tenants contracts, as he is entitled to do, to sell his share and dies before performing his contract, specific performance of that contract may be enforced against the other joint-tenants. The section and the illustration have no bearing on the question whether persons who are strangers to the contract and against whom it cannot be specifically enforced can be properly joined as defendants and partition claimed against them as co-parceners of the vendor. [p. 437, col. 1.]

In a suit for specific performance of a contract by a member of an undivided Hindu family to sell his share, it is not permissible to join the other members of the family as defendants merely with a view to obtaining partition and possession of the alleged vendor's share against them. [p. 436, col. 1.]

The joinder of strangers, not parties to the contract, in such a suit would amount to misjoinder. [p. 437, col. 1.]

Per Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.—The right of the buyer in enforcing a contract for the sale of immoveable property is a right in personam against the vendor and arises out of the contract for sale, and is different from the title or the right of property which the purchaser obtains on the execution of the conveyance which enables him to sue in ejectment all persons in possession, including his own vendor. The fact that a buyer, when suing for specific performance of a contract of sale, does not seek recovery of possession would not prevent him from seeking that relief on his title which gives him another cause of action. It is doubtful whether the obligation under the contract of sale to give possession is one which is capable of being specifically enforced, and whether the proper relief is not damages for breach of the contract to give possession till execution of the conveyance, after which date the purchaser would be entitled to mesne profits from the person in possession, whether such person is the vendor or a stranger without title. [p. 440, col. 2; p. 441, col. 1.]

Quere.—Whether a suit for possession based on the obligation under a contract of sale can be brought against a subsequent purchaser with notice of the contract who has obtained possession as such purchaser.

If there is an existing cause of action for partition on the date of the institution of a suit for specific performance, the question whether the two causes of action, one for specific performance and the other for partition and possession, can be joined in one suit, would depend not only on the provisions of Order I, rules 3 and 5, Civil Procedure Code, which primarily regulate the joinder of parties, but also of Order II, rules 3 and 4, which provide for joinder of causes of action. [p. 442, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—A purchaser from a co-parcener can enforce specific performance of his contract against the other co-parceners and in a suit for the said relief, the joinder of a prayer for possession or partition is permissible under section 27 of the Specific Relief Act and Order I, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 437, col. 2; p. 439, col. 2.]

Under rule 3 of Order I it is sufficient if the right to relief exists in respect of or arises out of the same transaction or series of transactions, subject only to the condition that there be any common question of law or fact to be decided. It does not matter whether there are more than one and technically different causes of action, or the liabilities of the several defendants are different, nor is it necessary that every defendant should be interested in all the reliefs claimed in the suit. [p. 438, col. 1.]

The right to possession arises out of the contract of sale so as to be covered by the words of Order I, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. The fact that by virtue of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, no interest in immoveable property is acquired by the contract does not affect the question. It is sufficient for the plaintiff to say that by the contract he obtained the right to acquire the property with the aid of the Court, the execution of a registered conveyance and delivery of possession being the means by which the right is to be enforced. [p. 439, col. 1.]

Nor does it make any difference that the right to possession is contingent on the plaintiff establishing his right to the execution of a proper conveyance by the defendant. [p. 439, col. 1.]

By the Division Bench (per Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.)—Though an alienee of specific portions of joint family property does not, as of right, acquire any interest in it, his conveyance enables him to demand a partition of the family property and entitles him either to the specified property, if that can equitably be assigned to his vendor's share, or to its equivalent from such other property as that share may include. [p. 432, col. 2.]

The suit should not, in any event, be dismissed for joinder of prayers for possession and partition along with the relief for execution of a conveyance. The plaint should be allowed to be amended by deleting the prayers for possession and partition, and if not so amended, the Court should dismiss the suit so far as regards the objectionable prayers and dispose of it in so far as it relates to specific performance. [p. 432, col. 2; p. 433, col. 1; p. 434, col. 2; p. 435, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 388 of 1914, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Original Suit No. 73 of 1913.

This civil miscellaneous appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections put in by the 1st and 2nd respondents coming on for hearing on the 9th and 11th August 1916, and having stood over for consideration till the 29th August 1916, the Court (Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

OLDFIELD, J.—Plaintiffs claim in this suit, first, specific performance of a contract by 1st defendant to sell and secondly, as consequential relief, possession of the property sold by means of a partition, to which 1st to 5th defendants, the members of the joint family it belonged to at the date of the contract, will be necessary parties. The main question argued is whether this constitutes misjoinder. The Subordinate Judge held that it did gave plaintiffs an opportunity to withdraw their consequential claim and, as they did not do so, dismissed the suit. The District Judge in the order under appeal directed separate trials of the two claims under Order II, rule 6, and then struck out the prayer for partition without, as I understand him, making it plain that it was reserved for separate disposal.

The matter is further complicated by the fact that the contract is alleged as being for the sale, not of 1st defendant's unascertained share or any particular part of it, but of his share in certain specified lands, which, of course, may or may not fall to him, when the partition takes place. It will be simplest to deal, first, with the question raised in its more general form, whether claims for specific performance against a vendor and possession by means of partition against him and his co-parceners can be made in one suit. If the answer is in the affirmative, it will be necessary, secondly, to decide whether such a suit is sustainable, when it is brought in respect of the sale of and for possession of specified properties, and whether any amendment of the plaint can make it so.

Firstly, as regards misjoinder, we [have, no doubt, been shown no decision, in which such a suit as this was permitted expressly. But this and other High Courts have held, as for instance in Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1) and Madan Mohan Singh v. Gaja Prosad Singh (2), that a suit against a vendor for both specific performance and possession is sustainable; and it is well established (Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th edition, page 488) that a suit will lie against a vendor and his co-parceners for partition and possession by the purchaser of an unascertained share of family property or a portion of one. It is then difficult to understand why all these reliefs should not be asked for in one suit. For, the purchaser's right to sue for possession as well as specific performance once recognised, if the objection is only that the right to sue the vendor for possession involves none to sue others who claim jointly with him, the contrary is entailed by the second principle just referred to. And again with reference to the wording of Order I, rule 3, and such cases as Sri Raja Simhadri Appa Rao v. Prattipati Ramayya (3), Aiyathurai Ravuthan v. Santhu Meera Ravuthan (4) and Kowuri Basivireddy v. Tallapaparagada Nagamma (5), I should be inclined to hold that there is no misjoinder in the present case, the claim to relief against all the defendants arising in respect of the same transaction, plaintiffs' purchase, and the common question between them and each of the defendants being of the share, to which they through 1st defendant would be entitled on a fair partition.

Defendants' objection to this conclusion is based mainly on the character of the transaction, on which the suit is founded, as a contract, specific performance of which is asked for, and the particular rule alleged by them to be applicable to such suits, that strangers to the contract cannot be parties to them; and this general principle is, no doubt, laid down at page 94, Fry on Specific Performance, 5th edition, and in numerous cases, the most apposite being Tasker v. Small (6) and Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1) already referred to. But defendants' argument takes no account of the circumstances, in which the principle was applied in these cases or the exceptions to it allowed in others. In each of the cases cited the stranger in question held, as defendants do here, under a title, which originated prior to the contract of sale. But he was a mortgagee and, as was pointed out in Tasker v. Small (6), he would not be bound to surrender the property on that contract being enforced or until he was redeemed, which might never happen, and he had no concern with the adjudication between the plaintiff and the mortgagor on the question, which would be entitled to redeem him. So also in Narasinga Row v. Rangasami Thevan (7) referred to by my learned brother, the third persons in question were sued as tenants, who could be ousted from possession only when their tenancy expired, and who had no direct interest in the decision of the suit for specific performance. In the case before us the plaintiffs' claim to possession against the stranger defendants is not contingent on anything except the enforceability of the contract of sale. For, when that is declared, the former's right to possession will arise immediately, not the less because it can be made effective only by the legal method, a partition to which 1 to 5 defendants are parties and which 1st defendant could at any time have demanded.

Reference postponed to the plaint allegations regarding the partition, which has actually been made, the foregoing entails that 2nd to 5th defendants' title, though prior to the contract and known to plaintiffs, might have been displaced by 1st defendant; and then reference to section 27 (c) of the Specific Relief Act affords an answer to 2nd to 5th defendants' objection. That this clause applies to contracts for the sale of the unascertained share of a joint tenant appears from the second illustration to it. The illustration is no doubt the case of a vendor, who might have displaced his joint tenant's title but for his death, not, as here, of one who has evaded his duty to displace it. That may be because the two English cases referred to at page 1031, Dart on Vendors and Purchasers, 7th edition, Volume II, as authority for the doctrine, deal only with its application to a surviving joint tenant. But it is stated by the learned author, as it is in the Act, without qualification; and it must, therefore, be applied to the case before us.

It is not the less applicable, because the plaint contains an admission that a suit for a partition, brought by 1st defendant against 2nd to 5th defendants, was in progress when the contract to sell was made. For, if that suit was contested honestly, 2nd to 5th defendants can claim at most that plaintiffs' right under their contract is restricted to receiving whatever they are entitled to from the property awarded to 1st defendant under the decree, which has been passed. Plaintiffs, however, allege (it must be assumed for the present purpose, truly) that the suit was not contested honestly and that the compromise decree, in which it ended and which awarded to 1st defendant a large proportion of his share in cash and a small proportion in land, was intended to defraud them and to defeat their rights under their contract, of which 2nd and 5th defendants had known throughout. They, therefore, contend in accordance with Fateh Chand v. Narsingh Das (8) that the partition under that decree should not prejudice them and that a fresh partition should be made. These allegations afford additional ground for the application of section 27 (c), since they justify reference in support of it to Mokund Lall v. Chotay Lall (9) which was apparently, though not statedly, decided under it. There the stranger defendant was held to be a proper party, because he had combined with the vendor to defeat the purchaser's rights, and it cannot be a valid ground of distinction that there the device employed was possession under a benami title, whilst here it is the use of fraud affecting the fairness of the partition, by which the purchaser's rights are to be worked out. I, therefore, hold that in the circumstances stated there is no objection to a suit for specific performance, partition and possession against all these defendants.

The second question above stated calls for decision, because plaintiffs' contract was for the sale only of 1st defendant's share in certain specified items of property, not directly or in the alternative of his share, as it might be ascertained; and it may be mentioned that one part of the fraud imputed to defendants in connection with the partition above referred to is that they excluded all those items from 1st defendant's share. Their present contention, however, is that, as laid down in Duvvur Subba Reddy v. Kakuturu Venkatarami Reddi (10),

"On the view that a co-parcener cannot alienate any specific property, no specific performance can be decreed" of a contract to alienate such property. This dictum was, however, obiter; and with all respect, I can accept it only on the assumption that the learned Judge concerned was referring to a decree, not only for specific performance proper by execution of a conveyance, but also for possession, the two cases cited by him dealing with claims only to the latter. It is true that an alienee of specified property does not as of right acquire any interest in it. But it is well settled, and it was held by the same learned Judge in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (11) that his conveyance enables him to demand a partition of the family property and entitles him either to the specified property, if that can equitably be assigned to his vendor's share, or to its equivalent from such other property as that share may include. The rights conferred by such a document, though not necessarily those expressed in it, are not unsubstantial; and there is no reason why the law should refuse to enforce the contract to transfer them by compelling the execution of a sale-deed in accordance with it. The plaint before us no doubt is defective in so far as it asks for possession under the sale-deed to be executed only of the specified properties. But Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer on behalf of plaintiffs has undertaken to make any necessary amendment, and his clients would probably have amended in the lower Courts, if they had been asked to do so. The proper form of prayer is that given in the statement of facts in Aiyyagari Venkataramayya v. Aiyyagari Ramayya (12) and the plaint, amended in accordance with it, would, in my opinion, be open to no objection.

I would, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the suit to the Subordinate Court with directions to restore it and

1. To give plaintiffs a reasonable opportunity to amend as directed above.

2. If such amendment is made, to dispose of the suit according to law.

3. If it is not made, to dismiss the suit so far as it relates to partition and possession and dispose of it so far as it relates to specific performance. In accordance with the foregoing I would dismiss the appeal against order and allow the memorandum of objections.

As, however, my learned brother differs, we refer to a Full Bench the questions

1. Whether 2nd to 5th defendants are proper parties to the suit?

2. Whether the relief of partition and possession can be claimed by plaintiffs in one suit as well as execution of a sale-deed?

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The facts have been set out in the judgment of my learned brother, which I had the advantage of studying before writing my own.

I am unable to distinguish on principle the case of Tasker v. Small (6) from the present case in respect of the question whether in a suit for specific performance a claim for possession against persons other than the vendor could be joined. That case, Tasker v. Small (6), was recognised as good law in Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1). The case of Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1) was followed in the recent judgment (dated 27th July 1916) in Narasinga Row v. Rangasami Thevan (7) decided by this Bench. I shall quote two sentences from our judgment in the last case: "The remaining argument is that the 3rd and the 4th defendants should not have been made parties, because the contract, to which they were strangers, between the plaintiff and the 1st and 2nd defendants was for the sale of the land and did not include the giving of possession of it by the last mentioned." "In the absence of an agreement to give possession, there is nothing against our applying the principle enunciated in Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1) and holding that the 3rd and 4th defendants are not proper parties to the suit."

As regards the argument based on Order I, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, I do not think that the act or transaction which is the plaintiffs' cause of action entitling them to claim the relief of specific performance against the 1st defendant gives them also the right to the relief of partition and separate possession of one-third share from the defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The transaction which would entitle them to such relief against the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 had yet to come into existence, namely, the execution by the 1st defendant (or on behalf of the 1st defendant by the Court) of a proper conveyance of the 1st defendant's one-third share. I entirely agree with the principles of law enunciated by Tyabji, J., in the case reported as Krishnammal v. Manandiar Sundararaja Aiyar (13). Though, where only the vendor and persons claiming by title subsequent to the plaintiff's contract or persons whose title may be displaced by the vendor are joined as parties, the relief for the specific performance of a contract of sale can be supplemented by a prayer for possession, (such joinder being allowed for the sake of convenience and to prevent useless multiplicity of suits), I do not think that the plaintiffs could be allowed to join in the same suit a future cause of action for partition against third persons (which cause of action could not vest in the plaintiffs till they get a conveyance from their vendor) along with the existing cause of action against the contractor (promisor) to obtain the specific performance of the contract, namely, the execution of the conveyance. The "right to relief" and "the same act or transaction or series of acts and transactions" mentioned in Order I, rule 3, must "exist" on the date of suit for the privilege granted by that section to be taken advantage of, whereas the right to relief of partition and possession had in this case to come into existence, even if all the plaintiff allegations were true. As Tyabji, J., puts it in Krishnammal v. Manandiar Sundararaja Aiyar (13), "The effect of section 55 (1) (f) of the Transfer of Property Act, when read with section 54 of the same Act and with the Registration Act, is that in the absence of an express agreement to transfer possession, independently of the registered conveyance, the purchaser (or to be accurate, the person agreeing to purchase) has no right to the possession of the property until the conveyance is completed." It follows a fortiori that he has no right to sue strangers to the contract for partition and possession till he gets his conveyance. Such a suit for partition and possession against strangers would clearly be premature.

As regards the contention based on section 27, clause (c) of the Specific Relief Act, I think the phrase used in that section, namely, "might have been displaced by the defendant", means "might have been displaced by the defendant according to his unilateral will and pleasure." This, I think, is clear from the second illustration to that clause. In the present case, the 1st defendant could not by his own will and pleasure, without reference to the consent of the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 or without obtaining a decree of Court (the Court having the power in a partition suit to allot properties according to its sense of justice and equity), have displaced the title of the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 to their undivided joint ownership and possession in the plaint three items. Further section 27, clause (c), relates only to the right to the specific performance of the contract against a third person claiming title and not to the question of the right to bring a suit for recovery of possession against the persons not parties to the contract. The second illustration to section 27, clause (c), (where it is said that C may enforce the contract against B) only means, in my opinion, that B might be directed to convey A's half share to C. If C also claims partition and possession of that half in the same suit and if B is in possession of the whole, the relief of partition and possession may also be granted (according to the practice of the Courts) in order to prevent multiplicity of suits as the possession of no third party has to be disturbed. It may be said that in Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1) and Narasinga Row v. Rangasami Thevan (7), section 27, clause (c) of the Specific Relief Act, was not referred to. But for the reasons set out by me above as to the scope of that clause, I do not consider it legitimate to distinguish those cases on that ground. I, therefore, agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs ought to have amended the plaint by withdrawing the claim for partition and possession against the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and by striking off the words in the plaint claiming partition and possession. They might, if so advised, have asked for the relief of possession as against the properties which fell to the 1st defendant's share in the partition decree already made as between the defendants but they must, in that case, abandon the contention that the decree in the partition suit was collusive and fraudulent.

The next question is whether on the plaintiffs' omission to amend as directed, the suit ought to have been dismissed wholly as the Subordinate Judge did. Order VII, rule 11, of the new Civil Procedure Code does not contain the clause (d) of section 54 of the old Civil Procedure Code, which provided that if the plaint is not amended within the time fixed by the Court, it should be rejected. I think that under those circumstances the Court itself (see Order VI, rules 16 and 17) ought to have exercised the power to strike out and amend all matters in the plaint which tend "to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit" and "in such manner and on such terms as may be just." In the present case, not only is the plaintiffs' claim against the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 premature, but they make allegations as to fraud, collusion, notice, the effect of the decree in another suit Original Suit No. 8 of 1907 to which they were not parties and other matters (see paragraphs 3, 6, 7 and 8 of the plaint), which have nothing to do with their personal right against the 1st defendant, to get a conveyance from the 1st defendant of the undivided one-third share which belonged to the 1st defendant on the date of the contract of sale. The trial of those matters along with the matters which directly and legitimately arise out of the contract of sale (which contract does not contain any stipulation as to the giving of possession) would clearly lead to embarrassment and delay. The Subordinate Judge ought, however, not to have dismissed the suit wholly for the reasons already given by me.

On the question whether the plaintiffs as purchasers of the undivided share of the 1st defendant in some only of the family properties are entitled to sue for specific performance, I agree with my learned brother for the reasons stated by him and I respectfully dissent from the view propounded in Duvvur Subba Reddy v. Kakuturu Venkatarami Reddi (10) on that point.

In the result, I would, in modification of the lower Appellate Court's order, remand the suit to the Subordinate Judge with directions to have the plaint amended by striking out the names of the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and the prayers for partition and possession and by making any further consequential alterations (the amendments to be made either through the plaintiffs or by the Court itself) and to proceed with the trial of the suit as so amended, costs hitherto abiding.

This civil miscellaneous appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections put in by the 1st and 2nd respondents came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 29th and 30th November 1916.

Mr. N. S. Rangasami Aiyangar, for Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The primary principle is that in a suit on a contract only parties to the contract are necessary parties and not others. My first point is that none but the parties to a contract in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract to sell land are necessary parties. A prayer for possession and partition is in some cases added in a suit to enforce specific performance and thus parties in possession are necessary parties to such a suit. It would be absurd to extend that rule to cases of this kind. In the present case, the parties added are other members of a joint Hindu family to which the vendor belonged. Until he establishes his right to a conveyance he has no right at all against the party in possession.

A cause of action for enforcing specific performance is different from a cause of action for possession. The right to a relief for possession arises only on the execution of a conveyance. The two causes of action are distinct and different. The English cases of Tasker v. Small (6), Fry on Specific Performance, De Hoghton v. Money (14), Chadwick v. Maden (15), West Midland

Railway Company v. Nixon (16) and Howard v. Miller (17) clearly support my view.

A right under a contract of sale is quite distinct from a right to possession which arises immediately on the execution of a conveyance.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and K. N. Kumaraswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The new Code of Civil Procedure has altered the law on the point. Under the present Code of Civil Procedure such joinder of parties is not illegal. The use of the words "where if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise", in rule 3 of Order I, has entirely altered the law on the point. Under the old Code the words were "in respect of the same matter" and these were replaced by the words "by the same act or series or acts or transactions." This alteration is taken from rule 1 of Order XVI of the Rules of the Supreme Court. In England also the rule as to joinder of causes of action was amended, but the rule as to joinder of parties remained the same.

Even in England exceptions to the rule that none but parties to the contract are necessary parties to a suit for enforcing specific performance, are recognised, for instance, Bishop of Winchester v. Mid-Hants Railway Company (18).

In a suit for enforcing specific performance of a contract to sell lands, when the vendor refuses to convey it cannot be said that a right to sue for possession does not arise at the same time and this is covered by rule 3.

Lakshmi Venkayamma v. Venkatanarasimha (19), Madan Mohan Singh v. Gaja Prosad Singh (2) are in point.

is not inapplicable to a case of this kind. That section is not merely confined to other persons joining in the execution of a sale-deed.

Mr. N. S. Rangasami Aiyangar in reply.—The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as to joinder of parties do not apply to cases of enforcing specific performance of a contract to sell.

OPINIONS.

WALLIS, C. J.—As regards the second question my answer is that, in a suit for specific performance of a contract by a member of an undivided Hindu family to sell his share, it is not permissible to join the other members of the family as defendants merely with a view to obtaining partition and possession of the alleged vendor's share as against them. It may, I think, be taken as the settled and salutary practice of this and other Courts in India, where parties properly sued for specific performance of a contract for sale of land are in possession of the land, to allow a prayer for possession to be added to the prayer for specific performance, thereby obviating the necessity for filing a fresh suit for possession to which there could be no defence. Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1). It is, however, in my opinion quite a different thing to allow a stranger to make the members of a joint Hindu family defendants in a suit for a partition, until he has established his right to sue for partition by obtaining a transfer from one of the members of the family.

The other members of the family were no parties to the alleged contract and, therefore, were not proper parties to the suit in so far as it is a suit for specific performance, and it would, in my opinion, be a distinct hardship to them to force them to defend a suit for partition which would not lie if the plaintiff failed to prove his contract. Partition suits often involve a great variety of complicated questions and it would not be satisfactory to deal with such a suit as a mere appendage to a suit for specific performance of a contract by a co-sharer to sell his share. The rule in Tasker v. Small (6) is not merely technical but well founded in principle. In De Hughton v. Money (14) Turner, L. J., observed: "Here again his case is met by Tasker v. Small (6), in which case it was distinctly laid down that a purchaser cannot, before his contract is carried into effect, enforce against strangers to the contract equities attaching to the property, a rule which, as it seems to me, is well founded in principle, for if it were otherwise, this Court might be called upon to adjudicate upon questions which might never arise, as it might appear that the contract either ought not to be, or could not be performed." Other cases in which the same rule was applied are Wood v. White (20), Chadwick v. Maden (15) and West Midland Railway Co. v. Nixon (16). We have not been referred to any authority to show that these authorities are no longer applicable under the existing rules of procedure, or in support of the proposition that it is permissible to bring suits against persons against whom there is no cause of action at the date of suit. On the other hand the judgment of Lord Parker in Howard v. Miller (17) seems to be in accordance with the view I have taken.

As regards Bishop of Winchester v. Mid-Hants Railway Company (18), which was cited before us, that was a suit by an unpaid vendor to obtain specific performance by payment and to enforce his vendor's lien by obtaining possession of the property and by sale, if necessary, and for a Receiver, and it was held that the London and South Western Railway who were in possession as lessees from the defendants were properly joined, as their possession would be affected by the decree sought for. In that case, the plaintiff claimed as on the date of suit to be entitled to recover possession both against his vendees and their lessees by reason of his vendor's lien. They were necessary parties to the suit only in so far as it included a claim to enforce the lien, a necessity which is clearly explained by Lord Romilly in Attorney-General v. Sittingbourne and Sheerness Railway Company (21).

RANGAYYA REDDY v. SUBRAMANYA AIYAR.

As to section 27 of the Specific Relief Act, that section merely provides against what persons' contracts may be specifically enforced. They include not only (a) the parties to the contract and (b) parties claiming under them by title subsequent other than transferees for value and without notice, but also (c) "any person claiming under a title which though prior to the contract and known to the plaintiff might have been displaced by the defendant. As an illustration of specific performance being enforced in this way against a person claiming under a title prior to the contract, we are given the case of two joint tenants each of whom owns an undivided moiety which he may alienate during his lifetime but which in default of alienation devolves on the survivor. All that the illustration shows is that, if one of the joint tenants contracts, as he is entitled to do, to sell his share and dies before performing his contract, specific performance of that contract may be enforced against the other joint tenant. The section and the illustration, in my opinion, have no bearing on the question before us, which is whether persons who are strangers to the contract and against whom it cannot be specifically enforced can be properly joined as defendants and partition claimed against them as co-parceners of the vendor.

As regards the first question, I agree with the opinion of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., which I have had the advantage of reading.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The questions referred depend, in my opinion, for their answer on the provisions of Order I of the Civil Procedure Code, and section 27 of the Specific Relief Act. Rule 3 of Order I, Civil Procedure Code, which is directly applicable is in these words: "All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits was brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise."

Rule 1 relates to the joinder of plaintiffs and is in identically the same words as rule 3 with 'plaintiffs' substituted for 'defendants' and with the necessary alterations to suit the case of plaintiffs. Comparing them with the corresponding provisions of the Code of 1882, it is clear that the Legislature by replacing the words 'in respect of the same matter' of the old Code with the words "in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions", followed by the qualifying proviso—"where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise"—has materially widened the scope of the rules relating to joinder of parties. This is evident both from the more comprehensive nature of the language of the new rules and the history of the legislation on the subject.

The new words are taken from rule 1, Order XVI, of the Rules of the Supreme Court of 1896 where they were introduced because of the decision of the House of Lords in Smurthwaite v. Hannay (22) holding, in reversal of the judgments of Esher, M. R., and Kay, L. J., in the Court of Appeal, that the rule related only to joinder of parties in respect of the same cause of action and not to joinder of causes of action. This was exactly section 26 of the Indian Code of 1882, which contained the very words "in respect of the same cause of action." The amended rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules of 1896 was evidently intended to carry out the view expressed by Lord Esher, M. R., that if in a case like Smurthwaite v. Hannay (22), where "the different causes of action and claims all arise out of the same transaction" more than one plaintiff was not allowed to join, it would be lamentable waste of time and money. In fact the English Rule Committee and following them, the Indian Legislature, went further in permitting such joinder, not merely with respect to right to relief arising out of the same transaction but a series of transactions.

In England while rule 1 was amended, rule 4 which dealt with the question of joinder of defendants was allowed to remain as it was before 1896. Nevertheless the Court of Appeal in Compania Sansinena v. Houlder (23), holding that the alteration of rule 1 made it clear that Order XVI did not deal solely with joinder of parties and that rule 4 must be interpreted in the light of rule 1, laid down that the power to join several defendants in the same action extended to cases where the subject-matter of complaint as against the several defendants is substantially the same although the causes of action against them respectively are, technically, different in form, and the several liabilities alleged against them respectively are to some extent based on different grounds. The Indian Legislature, however, provided against all difficulties of interpretation by enacting rule 3 in the same words as rule 1. By section 28 of the old Code the right to relief was required to be 'in respect of the same matter,' under rule 3 it is sufficient if such right exists 'in respect of or arises out of the same transaction or series of transactions' subject only to the condition that there be any common question of law or fact to be decided. It does not matter whether there are more than one and technically different causes of action [Compania Sansinena v. Houlder (23)] or the liabilities of the several defendants are different, rule 4 (b); nor is it necessary that every defendant should be interested in all the reliefs claimed in the suit (rule 5).

But it is argued that these rules do not affect the question whether to a suit for specific performance strangers to a contract may be joined as defendants and it is contended that it is governed by the rule laid down by Lord Cottenham in Tasker v. Small (6).

It is perfectly clear, however, that even in England where the general rule still is that the parties to the contract are the necessary and sufficient parties to the action as held in Tasker v. Small (6), there are many real or apparent exceptions to this rule which is after all a rule of convenience and good sense (See Fry's Specific Performance, section 176 and section 192). Some of the exceptions were recognised under the former practice of the Court of Chancery itself, while the Rules of the Supreme Court have largely enlarged the powers of the Court in joining any party whose presence may be necessary (see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 27, notes to section 141, page 79, and Fry, section 192). It has thus been held in England that persons claiming adversely might be made defendants, a person who by virtue of an antecedent contract with the vendor claimed an interest in the purchase-money was a proper party to a suit for specific performance, in the case of purchases from a voluntary settlor when the contract was sought to be enforced by a purchaser not only the vendor but the trustees of the settlement and the persons beneficially interested under it were properly made defendants, and in some cases where a portion of the relief claimed might affect the person in actual possession of the property that person may properly be made a party to an action for specific performance of the contract (see the summary of cases in Fry, sections 175, 180, 181, 185, 187, 188, 189, 192, and 210, and 27 Halsbury's Laws of England, section 141 and notes thereto). Bishop of Winchester v. Mid-Hants Railway Company (18), was a case of the last class where Stuart, V. C., held: "Ordinarily a person not being a party to the contract ought not to be brought before the Court. But it is otherwise where possession is sought by the bill, and the person in possession will be affected by the decree."

That in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of immoveable property possession can also be asked for and obtained as against the vendor is well established by the rulings of this Court as well as of the other Indian High Courts. See Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jegiraju (1), where the learned Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., say: "It is the practice in this and other Courts to allow a claim for possession to be included in a claim for specific performance of a contract for the sale of immoveable property and we are not prepared to question it." And it was not argued before us that as against the vendor himself partition could not be obtained in such a suit although delivery of possession might be, at any rate any such distinction would be altogether untenable. That a buyer of a Hindu co-parcener's share cannot ask for joint possession but only for partition cannot surely make his position any worse.

The real ground on which objection to the joinder in this case of defendants Nos. 2 to 5, who are the co-parceners of the 1st defendant who contracted to sell his share in certain items of the family property to the plaintiff, is based on the fact that the right to partition does not arise until after the conveyance has been executed under the decree of the Court. This objection, it may be pointed out, primarily raises the question as to what reliefs can be obtained along with specific performance and relates to the joinder of defendants only inferentially. I do not see why we must say that the right to ask both for specific performance and for possession did not arise at the time when the vendor refused to carry out the bargain and give the vendee possession of the property.

I may observe, however, that it does not follow that because in a suit for specific performance the plaintiff does not ask for delivery of possession, Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure would be a bar to a future suit for possession. For ordinarily the vendor is either not interested in denying or cannot deny the plaintiff's right to obtain delivery of possession of the property if the latter has a right to enforce the contract and the question, therefore, of the purchaser's right to possession is seldom raised at a time when the very contract of sale or the plaintiff's right to enforce it is still in dispute.

That by virtue of section 54, Transfer of Property Act, no interest in immoveable property is created by the contract of sale itself does not at all affect the question. It is sufficient for the plaintiff to say that by the contract he obtained the right to acquire the property with the aid of the Court, the execution of a registered instrument and delivery of possession being the means by which the right is to be enforced. The decision of the Privy Council in Lakshmi Venkayamma v. Venkatanarasimha (19) is based on this principle. I think it would be unreasonable to hold that the right to possession does not arise out of the contract so as to be covered by the words of rule 3 [see Madan Mohan Singh v. Gaja Prosad Singh (2)].

Nor can it make any difference that the right to one relief, that is, possession, is contingent on the plaintiff establishing his right to another relief, namely, execution of a proper conveyance by the defendant. There are many other examples of such suits: e. g., suits for establishing right to and to recover immoveable property and for mesne profits, for setting aside alienation on ground of fraud or undue influence and other cases of that description.

I am also of opinion that section 27, clause (c), of the Specific Relief Act applies as illustrated by the two examples appended to it, especially the second case which is as follows: "A and B are joint tenants of land, his undivided moiety of which either may be alien in his lifetime, but which, subject to that right, devolves on the survivor. A contracts to sell his moiety to C, and dies. C may enforce specific performance of the contract against B." This illustration, which is undoubtedly covered by the terms of the section, is substantially the present case and shows that a purchaser from a co-parcener can enforce specific performance of his contract against the other co-parceners. That being so, the only question is whether the joinder of prayer for possession or partition is permissible, and I have already tried to show that it is.

As for the suggestion that the joinder of parties other than the vendor as contemplated by section 27 is for the purpose of compelling them to join in the conveyance, it is not necessary to express any opinion upon it on this reference. All that I wish to say on that point, as it is raised in Sadasiva Aiyar, J.'s judgment, is that in some cases it may be necessary to order persons other than the vendor to join in the execution of the deed of sale. And that, I may observe, was the kind of question that was really mooted in Tasker v. Small (6) and the other English decisions of that category. In Howard v. Miller (17) also, all that was decided was that no decree for specific performance could be given against a person who was not a party to the agreement. Anyhow, I fail to see that because defendants Nos. 2 to 5 might or might not be asked to join in the conveyance, it follows in any way that partition might not be obtained as against them in the same suit.

It is obvious that to require the purchaser first to enforce specific performance of the contract of sale and after he has obtained a decree to that effect, to institute a separate suit for partition, would be a wholly unnecessary multiplication of suits resulting in a mere waste of time and money. In some cases, where, for instance, a co-parcener or tenant, in-common who had been excluded from his share sold to a bona fide purchaser shortly before the lapse of the period of limitation, the purchaser might lose the whole bargain through no fault of his own. As, in my opinion, the terms of Order I of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 27 of the Specific Relief Act, negative such a narrow construction and there is nothing in reason or principle to warrant it, I would answer both the questions in the affirmative. There is no decision exactly in point, but in so far as the cases in Bugata Appala v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1) and Narasinga Row v. Rangasami Thevan (7) may be regarded as laying down any general rule that in a suit for specific performance, a person in possession other than the vendor cannot be joined as a defendant, I should hold with the greatest deference to the learned Judges concerned in those decisions, that such a general proposition is not sustainable. It is mainly based on the observations of Lord Cottenham in Tasker v. Small (6), without sufficient regard being had to the subsequent relaxations of the old rule in later decisions of the English Courts and the changes effected in the rules of the Supreme Court of England.

If the Court thinks that the claims against several defendants should be separately tried in any cases covered by rules 3, 4 and 5 of Order I on grounds of convenience, it has ample power to order separate trials and it is the obvious intention of the Legislature, as is to be collected from the provisions of Order I, that subject to this power, all claims arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions shall be tried together if they are so connected as to give rise to any common question of fact or law.

It may be pointed out that in this particular case the further allegations that the 1st defendant fraudulently compromised the previous suit for partition instituted by his co-parceners (defendants Nos. 2 to 5) in order to deprive the plaintiffs of the fruits of their purchase and that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 have been acting in collusion with him with knowledge of the contract of sale, make defendants Nos. 2 to 5 necessary parties to the action.

For these reasons, I agree with the conclusion of Oldfield, J.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—As I agree generally with the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., I do not propose to discuss the question at length. The answer to the questions referred to us appears to me to depend upon well settled principles. To a suit for specific performance of a contract the parties to the contract or their representatives are necessary parties, others bound to perform it are proper parties, and no others can be made parties, Howard v. Miller (17). Section 27 of the Specific Relief Act specifies the persons against whom contracts can be specifically enforced. As a part of this rule all persons who may be affected by the enforcement of the rights of the plaintiff arising out of the contract may properly be made parties; as for example in Bishop of Winchester v. Mid-Hants Railway Co. (18), which was a vendor's suit for specific performance, where the plaintiff sought relief by way of declaration of lien for unpaid purchase-money and enforcement of that lien by the appointment of a Receiver and injunction, the purchaser's lessees were held proper parties. It is also settled that in a suit by the buyer for specific performance of a contract of sale of immoveable property, the plaintiff is entitled not merely to call for a conveyance from the vendor, but also seek possession of the property from the vendor, by compelling him to perform all his obligations under the contract of sale, namely, to give the buyer such possession of the property as its nature admits. Ordinarily and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the buyer would be entitled to possession at the time fixed for completion of the sale and if he accepts the title and offers to pay the purchase money, he would be entitled both to call for a conveyance and to possession of the property from the vendor; and in a suit for specific performance the buyer may be entitled to damages in addition to specific performance for the failure of the vendor to give possession at the time agreed [see illustration of the third paragraph in section 19 of the Specific Relief Act. Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash (24)]. This right of the buyer,

RANGAYYA REDDY v. SUBRAMANYA AIYAR.

I apprehend, is a right in personam against the vendor and arises out of the contract for sale and is different from the title or the right of property which the purchaser obtains on the execution of the conveyance, which enables him to sue in ejectment all persons in possession including his own vendor. If this is the correct view, the fact that a buyer when suing for specific performance of a contract of sale does not seek recovery of possession would not prevent him from seeking that relief on his title which gives him another cause of action. My only doubt is whether the obligation under the contract of sale to give possession is one which is capable of being specifically enforced, and whether the proper relief is not damages for breach of the contract to give possession till execution of the conveyance, after which date the purchaser would be entitled to mesne profits from the person in possession, whether such person is the vendor or a stranger without title. Whether a suit for possession based on the obligation under the contract of sale can be brought against a subsequent purchaser with notice of the contract who has obtained possession as such purchaser need not be considered now. In Fateh Chand v. Narasingh Das (8) it was held and in Goffur v. Bhikaji (25) it was assumed that it can be.

In the present suit the contract of sale was to sell the 1st defendant's share in certain items of immoveable property, which formed part of the co-parcenary property belonging in common to himself and the other defendants in the case. It is now settled so far as this Court is concerned that this contract, even if completed by a conveyance, would not entitle the plaintiff to joint possession with the other co-parceners—that in fact he is not entitled to any sort of possession—but that his purchase, if completed, would enable him to bring a suit for partition in which, if the Court making a division considers it fair having due regard to the rights of other co-parceners to allot the property sold to the vendor, the vendee standing in his shoes may obtain that property. It is obvious that the 1st defendant, the vendor, was under no obligation to place the plaintiff in joint possession of any family property and no other person, even if bound to perform the obligation of the contract, can be under that obligation.

It was said that in the case of a contract to sell his share of the joint family property by a member of the co-parcenary, there is a contractual obligation on his part to divide himself off from the other members and place the vendee in possession of the property which may be allotted in a fair partition. Without an express stipulation in the contract, I am unable to imply any such obligation from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act or any other law governing the relation of vendor and vendee. Even in the case of tenants-in-common, where one tenant-in-common sells his share in specific items there appears to be no such obligation (see Freeman on Co-Tenancy, section 199, at page 329).

The right to sue for partition does not arise till after the legal title is transferred and when the suit was instituted in the present case there was no right to sue for partition at all. This conclusion, apart from any question of joinder of parties or causes of action, which can only arise if there is a right to relief against one or more at the time of the institution of the suit, is enough to answer the second question in the negative [see De Hoghton v. Money (14), especially the observations at page 170 of the report].

The first question stands on a different footing; and an answer to that would depend on, whether defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are subsequent transferees of the property agreed to be sold to the plaintiff. The compromise in the previous litigation, which is challenged in the present suit as a fraud on the rights of the plaintiff under his contract of sale, does not in terms purport to be a transfer of the 1st defendant's share of the property agreed to be sold to the plaintiff; he as a member of a Mitakshara joint Hindu family had no definite share in any particular item of the family property. In fact what defendants Nos. 2 to 5 say is that they have only converted their partial interest in the whole of the family properties into a full interest in some of them, and that no agreement by the 1st defendant can affect their prior rights in the family property. They in no way dispute the contract of the 1st defendant with the plaintiff. It is not said that the value of the property allotted to the 1st defendant is less than the value of his share.

But a partition involves the release of the interest of the other co-parceners in the properties allotted to one of them and though by virtue of their prior title defendants Nos. 2 to 5 may be entitled to a release from the 1st defendant of his interest in the properties, the subject of the present suit, if these properties were allotted to them in a fair partition without being affected by the contract of sale which can only operate subject to their rights, yet if the partition is proved to be a fraudulent design to defeat the rights of the plaintiff under his contract of sale, by the 1st defendant giving up the chance of the suit properties or a share in them being allotted to him in a fair division, I think that defendants Nos. 2 to 5 in such a case may fairly be treated as subsequent transferees with notice. In Fateh Chand v. Narsingh Das (8), which is perhaps the nearest to the present case, under the form of a compromise one of the defendants got a transfer for money of whatever interest the other defendant had in the property agreed to be sold. It was held that he was a subsequent transferee. The difference between that case and this is obvious; but that, I think, makes no difference in principle. The answer to the 1st question must, therefore, be in the affirmative.

In the view I have taken, there is only one cause of action, namely, that for specific performance in this case, the other cause of action, viz., for partition not having accrued on the date of the suit. If there was an existing cause of action for partition on the date of the suit, the question whether the two causes of action, one for specific performance and the other for partition and possession, can be joined in one suit, would depend not only on the provisions of Order I, rules 3 and 5, which primarily regulate the joinder of parties but also of Order II, rules 3 and 4, which provide for joinder of causes of action.

OF 1915.

April 2, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 13—Tenant, status of—Decree in favour of stranger, admissibility of.

A decree (whether obtained by the plaintiff's predecessor or a stranger), in which it was found that the defendants-tenants had a holding in a certain estate on a certain rental, is admissible under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act for the purpose of showing that the defendants held a holding in that estate on that rental. [p. 433, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Jessore, dated the 12th August 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, Jessore, dated the 14th December 1914.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"This appeal arises out of a suit for rent from 1313 to 1316. For the first three years the plaintiff has claimed $\frac{1}{2}$ rd of the alleged entire jama and for 1316 he has claimed the entire rent, on the allegation that on partition of the present estate the entire mauza to which the jama in suit appertains fell to the plaintiff's share.

The defendants inter alia denied the relationship of landlord and tenant and contended that they held no lands of Mudafat, Ambika Dasi stated in the plaint.

The learned Munsif dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appealed but the defendants did not appear in this Court though they were served with notices.

The only question for trial is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant has been established between the parties?

FINDING.—To prove the claim the plaintiff tendered a rent-decree alleged to have been obtained by one co-sharer Jogendra Nath Rai and a cheque book and he examined two witnesses. The learned Munsif held that the co sharer's decree was not admissible in evidence.

In my opinion it could be admissible in evidence, provided the plaintiff could prove that the decree-holder was his co-sharer. There is no evidence to show that the said decree-holder was ever co-sharer of the plaintiff. There being no evidence to connect the link, the plaintiff cannot avail of the decree.

* * * From the evidence in the case I find that the claim could not be proved and the suit was rightly dismissed. Ordered that the appeal be dismissed ex parte."

Babus Surendra Madhab Mallik and Satis Chandra Bose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 12th August 1915, affirming a decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover rent for the years 1313 to 1316 B. S. He sued as a 5-annas 4-pies co-sharer and he alleged that the defendants had a holding of which the rent was Rs. 17. The estate in which the plaintiff was a co-sharer bore tauzi No. 250 of the Jessore Collectorate. The plaintiff is a person who has purchased this share in the month of September 1906. In support of his claim the plaintiff gave in evidence a decree obtained by another co-sharer also of a 5-annas 4-pies share in which it was found that the defendants had a holding in the estate of which the Tauzi number was 250 of the Jessore Collectorate, and that the rent of that holding was Rs. 17 per annum. It is quite clear that to prove these facts the decree in the other suit was a relevant document. There cannot be any doubt about it whether the decree was by a predecessor of the plaintiff or by a stranger, under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act that decree is admissible and, no doubt, it is an important document. The learned Judge in the primary Court thought that the decree was not admissible at all. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court held that the decree could only be given in evidence if the plaintiff could prove that the person who had obtained it was his co-sharer. What I understand the learned Judge meant is that the plaintiff had got to prove that Jogendra, i.e., the person who had obtained the decree and the present plaintiff were co-sharers in the estate at one and the same time and that otherwise the document would not be admissible in evidence. That, I do not agree, was the proper view at all. This document was obviously admissible under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act for the purpose of showing that the defendants held a holding in this estate Tauzi No. 250 and that the rent of the holding was Rs. 17. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court to have the appeal re-heard after due attention being given to the decree obtained by Jogendra. Costs of this appeal and of the lower Appellate Court will abide the result of the re-hearing by the learned Subordinate Judge.

SMITHER, J.—I agree that the decree is admissible in evidence and the case must, therefore, go back.

Case sent back.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

TUDBALL, J.—The question which arises in the present case for decision is one which is covered by a decision of this Court. It clashes somewhat also with a more recent decision in very similar circumstances which is to be found reported as Anand Sarup v. Chawwa (1). Under the circumstances I think it admissible to refer the case to a Bench of two Judges for decision. I order accordingly.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case was decided in both the Courts below on the admission that the defendant was in possession of the land as a licensee and the plaintiff was a licensor. This was not in accordance with the actual pleadings of the parties. In the plaint the plaintiff alleged a tenancy. The defendant alleged, on the other hand, a license, but apparently, as we see from the judgment of the Court of first instance, it was subsequently admitted that the defendant was in possession of the land as a licensee. Clearly that was the position which the plaintiff appellant took up in the lower Appellate Court also and it is the position which is taken up in the one ground in the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court. The Courts below have decided the case in view of the decision of a Bench of this Court in Dharam Kunwar v. Fakira (2). The plea taken before us is that the defendant having denied the plaintiff's title altogether, his license is liable to be revoked and he should have been ejected. It was in the previous suit between the parties that the defendant denied the plaintiff's title, and in that the question of title was decided in the plaintiff's favour. In the present suit the defendant has admitted the plaintiff's title. The ruling in question is the only ruling to which our attention has been called. It is admittedly against the appellant's contention. It was therein laid down that a licensee in possession does not, like a tenant, by denying the title of the grantor of the license, forfeit the license, and become liable to immediate ejectment. The two Judges who decided that case remarked as follows: "No authority, either from the Indian or English reports, has been cited to us in support of the contention that in such a case a licensee is in the same position as a tenant who denies his lessor's title, and we see no reason why we should extend the rule of forfeiture and make it applicable to a licensee. The grantor of the license has ordinarily power by revocation to put an end to the license and that may be the reason why the same rule has not been made applicable to a licensee denying the title of the grantor of the license as to a tenant denying his landlord's title. It is to be noticed also, as regards Indian legislation, that although the Transfer of Property Act provides for forfeiture of his tenancy by a tenant denying his landlord's title, no such provision has been made regarding a licensee in the chapter of the Easements Act which deals with licenses." It may seem anomalous that a tenant who denies his landlord's title, is liable to forfeiture of his lease, whereas a licensee may deny a licensor's title without any such liability to forfeiture, but it is correct that there is no such provision in the Easements Act such as has been made in the Transfer of Property Act, section 111. In this state of the law we think that it would be proper to accept the ruling in the case mentioned, inasmuch as no good reason has been shown why we should differ from it. We, therefore, follow that ruling and in that view the appeal must fail. We, therefore, dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

FLETCHER, J.—This an appeal from a decision of the learned District Judge of the 24-Perganas, dated the 9th April 1915, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge at MUHAMMAD SHIS V. MAHABIR PRASAD.

Alipur. The plaintiffs were three in number. They brought a suit to recover possession of certain land. The plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were the original tenants of the property, the 1st defendant being the landlord. Certain rents having fallen due by the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 to the landlord, the defendant No. 1, a suit for rent was instituted and an ex parte decree was obtained on the 10th July 1900. The property was then attached and brought to sale and purchased by the defendant No. 1. The sale was confirmed on the 15th August 1900. On the 2nd June 1902, the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 sold their interest to the plaintiff No. 1 and immediately executed a kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff No. 1. On the 18th May 1905 the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 took a lease of the property from the defendant No. 1. On the 26th May 1905 the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 applied to set aside the decree and the sale in execution. On the 18th July 1905, the decree was set aside and the sale fell with it. The first point that has been urged before us, as it was urged in the lower Appellate Court, is that the plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have no title to the land as the plaintiff No. 1 claims through the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 who, on the terms of the lease, had no right to transfer the land. This case depends purely on the terms of the lease, because Mr. Ghose on behalf of the appellants has quite frankly admitted that apart from the terms of the lease the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 would have a right to transfer their interest in the land. That being so, there is not very much to say, because if the plaintiff No. 1 has not got a valid transfer the property has vested in the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 and vice versa. The question of this conveyance may not be so easy, but it seems to me clear that the transfer at any rate had been recognised for some purposes by the landlord before a quarter of the purchase-money had been paid to him. In fact from the very nature of the conveyance, there could not be a quarter of the purchase-money paid to the landlord until there was a transfer and sale to the purchaser because the purchaser was not likely to part with a quarter or the whole of the purchase-money before he had got a proper document executed to him for the transfer of the land. That seems to me to be one answer. The other answer is that in a case of this sort where there is no condition of forfeiture in the lease, a covenant like this cannot restrain the transfer of an interest unless proper conditions are put in for enforcing the rights of the landlord on a breach of the contract. I think the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court that this property has vested in the plaintiffs is clearly right.

The other point of limitation is clearly covered by the decision which Mr. Ghose has been good enough to refer to, namely, the decision reported as Budhu Kumar v. Hafiz Hussain (1). The appeal is, accordingly, dismissed with costs.

The mere omission to disclose in an application for adjudication that a previous application by the same applicant has been dismissed is not a sufficient reason within the meaning of section 15 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for dismissing the application.

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 29th June 1916.

Messrs. S. M. Y. Hasan and Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The order of the Court below is obviously wrong. The petition has been dismissed simply because the applicant did not therein disclose the fact that he had once before applied to be declared an insolvent and that that application had been dismissed. This is not a sufficient reason within the meaning of section 15 of the Act. The act of filing an application by a debtor under the Act is in itself an act of insolvency. We, therefore, allow the application, set Mortgage by way of conditional sale—Proprietary rights of mortgagee, when called into existence—Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act (I of 1900). Sch.—Alienation—Suit to recover land alienated—Limitation, commencement of.

In a suit to recover possession of ancestral land alienated by a male proprietor during his lifetime, limitation runs primarily from the date on which the alienation is attested. [p. 447, col. 1.]

The proprietary title of a mortgagee is called into existence only when the right of redemption is extinguished. [p. 447, col. 1.]

Plaintiffs sued for possession of certain lands alleging that an alienation thereof by their father was without consideration and necessity. It appears that the original alienation was a mortgage executed in November 1897, which recited that if the property was not redeemed within two years it should be deemed to be sold. The mortgage not having been redeemed, the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession on the 9th March 1901. This suit was compromised on the understanding that if the mortgagor failed to redeem within a further period allowed to him the mortgagee was to get possession. The mortgagee accordingly took possession on the 19th August 1901, mutation of the proprietary right being effected on the 29th June 1903. On the 31st of March 1915, the mortgagor's sons instituted the present suit for possession:

Held, that the alienation by sale which the plaintiffs sought to attack not having been mutated till the 29th June 1903, time began to run from that date and the plaintiffs' suit was, therefore, not barred. [p. 447, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 8th January 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Sialkot, dated the 15th July 1915, dismissing the claim and remanding the case for decision on the merits.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Bhagat Govind Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case may be stated as follows:—

In November 1897, Devi Singh, a Rajput, mortgaged certain land to Jagat Ram, a Mahajan. The deed contained a condition that the property mortgaged would be deemed to be sold if not redeemed within two years.

On the 28th July 1898, Jagat Ram obtained mutation as of an ordinary mortgage. The mutation proceedings contained no mention of the clause of conditional sale.

On the 12th January 1900 the mortgagee instituted proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 and on the 9th March 1901, as the mortgage had not been redeemed, he instituted a suit for possession. The alienor raised certain objections regarding the validity of the notice, but at the next hearing the parties arrived at a compromise under which the alienor was allowed a short further period within which to redeem and failing redemption within that period the alienee was to get possession.

The alienor again failed to redeem and Jagat Ram took possession on the 19th August 1901, mutation of the proprietary right being effected on the 29th June 1903.

Devi Singh died not long afterwards. On the 31st March 1915, his four sons instituted the present suit for possession alleging that the alienation by their father was without consideration or necessity. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit of the three elder plaintiffs on the ground that the defendant had obtained possession in 1901, but he held that the suit of the youngest son Kirpa was within time because he was still under twenty-one years of age on the day when the suit was instituted.

It would have been very much more convenient if the Subordinate Judge had decided the whole suit before dismissing that of the three elder plaintiffs. The reason which he gave for holding their suit to be barred by time was incorrect and they appealed to the District Judge, who accepted the appeal and remanded the suit stating that he left all questions other than that of limitation to be decided by the Court of first instance.

The defendant has now preferred a second appeal to this Court. The District Judge pointed out quite correctly that in a suit of this kind to recover possession of ancestral land alienated by a male proprietor during his lifetime limitation runs primarily from the date on which the alienation was attested. He appears to have been of the opinion that the plaintiffs could not attack the mortgage for the reason that mutation of the mortgage was effected more than twelve years before the suit was instituted, but that they could at least attack the sale as the mutation of proprietary rights was effected within twelve years of bringing the suit. He also remarked that the suit was not barred, regarded as a suit for redemption.

I may remark here that I do not understand why this suit should be regarded as one for redemption. The plaintiffs did not pay the Court-fee necessary for such a suit. They did not admit the amount of the mortgage-debt but merely stated that if the sale was set aside, they would be willing to pay any such sum as was found to have been incurred for a necessary purpose.

The main question is, however, whether the plaintiffs are in time to attack the sale. Counsel for the defendant-appellant urges that the alienation was complete when the deed of mortgage was executed and that the rights of the mortgagee ripened into those of absolute owners without any further action on the part of the alienor. The fact remains, however, that the alienation by sale which the plaintiffs now seek to attack was not mutated until 1903 and that mutation of proprietary rights was obviously necessary. The proprietary title of a mortgagee [see Atar Singh v. Ralla Ram (1)] is called into existence only when the right of redemption is extinguished, and it is created by the proceedings which took place under Regulation XVII of 1806. In my opinion, therefore, the District Judge was right in holding that so far as the sale is concerned time runs from the 29th June 1903.

It appears to me that it is doubtful whether he was equally correct in holding that the plaintiff could not attack the mortgage apart from the condition of sale, as it is difficult to imagine any case in which the intention not to preserve a mortgage can be more strongly indicated. The plaintiffs, however, appear to have accepted that particular finding as they have not appealed to this Court.

Accordingly the result of the findings of the District Judge appears to be this that, if the plaintiffs can succeed in setting aside the sale, they will be entitled to take possession on payment of the amount of the mortgage-debt. The appeal fails and is dismissed. Costs will be costs in the suit.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Suit filed in wrong Court—Good faith—Limitation, saving of.

A suit which ought to have been filed in the Court of Small Causes was filed in the Court of a Munsif and the munsarim of that Court certified that the plaint was one within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Munsif. A few days afterwards the Munsif transferred the case to another Court which decreed the suit ex parte. On an application by the defendant the ex parte decree was set aside and on trial of the suit the Munsif returned the plaint to be filed in the proper Court, as the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction to try it. The plaint was filed in the Small Cause Court next day and the plaintiff was met with a plea of limitation:

Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiff had acted throughout in good faith he was entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act. [p. 448, col. 1.]

Civil revision from the decision of the Court of Small Causes, Agra, dated the 6th July 1916.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this application arises was filed in the Court of the Munsif of Agra on the 20th June 1914. The suit is one for the recovery of Rs. 350 odd from the defendant, price of bricks supplied. The munsarim of the Court certified that the plaintiff was one within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Munsif of Agra. A few days later, the Munsif of Agra transferred the case to the Court of the Munsif of Fatehabad. That Court proceeded to try the case and gave the plaintiffs an ex parte decree on the 12th August 1914. On the 17th of September 1915, the plaintiffs took out execution, whereupon the defendant applied to have an ex parte decree set aside and to have the suit re-heard. This application was granted on the 20th of September 1915 and the suit was re-tried. On the 23rd February 1916, the Munsif of Fatehabad came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had been filed in the wrong Court and directed the plaintiff to be returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. The next day the plaintiff was filed in the Court of Small Causes at Agra. The defence to the suit in that Court was one of limitation, and it is quite clear that the suit is barred by limitation unless the plaintiffs can call in aid the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, excluding the time the suit was pending in the Courts of the Munsifs of Agra and Fatehabad. The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes holds that section 14 cannot apply to this case because, as he says, "nothing was done with due care and attention." He says that "the Small Cause Court existed in Agra for a long time, and no one specially Pleaders and clerks are ignorant of this. The mistake was not accidental but was due to inattention and gross negligence." It seems to me there is nothing whatever on which to found this finding. I have not the slightest doubt that the plaintiffs thought honestly that the suit was properly filed in the Court of the Munsif of Agra. That Court itself acted on this supposition, and so did the Court of the Munsif of Fatehabad. Apparently when the defendant applied to have the suit restored on the 17th of September 1914 he took no such plea that the suit had been filed in a wrong Court, because if he had, the Court would have had no jurisdiction to go on with it. It seems to me, therefore, clear that the plaintiffs acted throughout in good faith and, therefore, they are entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. The plaintiff is so worded that it might lead to an honestly mistaken view of law that the suit was one for an account. I, therefore, allow this application, set aside the decree of the Court of Small Causes at Agra and remand the suit to that Court with directions to re-admit it on to its file of pending cases and proceed to dispose of it on the merits. Under the circumstances, however, I think the plaintiffs ought to pay the costs of the defendant throughout.

JUDGMENT.—On the 19th February 1909 the plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery on a bond against two defendants. One of the defendants could not be served at the time, and on the 10th March 1909 the Court consigned the suit to the record room making a reference to the provisions of Order IX, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code.

In 1912 the plaintiff instituted a second and fresh suit on the same cause of action against the same defendants. The Additional District Judge dismissed the second suit, holding that the first suit was still pending. The plaintiff appealed but the Additional Divisional Judge upheld the finding of the first Court. The plaintiff has now preferred a second appeal to this Court.

In our opinion the decision of the lower Court is quite right. It was impossible for the Court to dismiss the first suit under Order IX, rule 5. The meaning of the Subordinate Judge was, no doubt, loosely expressed, but all that he can have intended was to keep the case pending until the provisions of Order IX, rule 5, could be employed. The first suit was never actually dismissed.

Nor are we able to agree with the Counsel for the appellant that even if the first suit is still pending, the second should be kept pending also until the first suit is decided. If the first suit is decreed the second must necessarily be dismissed, and if the first suit is dismissed the same result will follow.

We have been informed by Counsel for the appellant that after the decision of the Additional Divisional Judge his client made an application to the Court of first instance to proceed with the first suit and that this application was rejected. He should now make a fresh application and the Court should proceed to dispose of the original suit.

The present appeal is, however, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant obtained a decree against the second defendant who is a karnavan of the tarwad directing him either to execute a kanom or to pay damages. The kanom was not executed and the 1st defendant in execution of the decree for damages sold the property and bought it. The Subordinate Judge has held that the decree is not binding on the plaintiff's tarwad. He says that there is reason to believe that the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant acted in collusion but no such case was made. However that may be, he points out that the decree was a personal decree against the 2nd defendant and not a decree against the tarwad. That being so, it was for the 1st defendant to show that the decree was obtained, as a matter of fact, against the tarwad for money borrowed for tarwad necessity. This view of his law is borne out by the Full Bench decision of this Court in Vasudevan v. Sankaran (1). There is no evidence to show that either the 2nd defendant was sued in his capacity as karnavan or that as a matter of fact the agreement to execute the kanom was for tarwad purposes.

JUDGMENT.

BEACHCROFT, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant before us. He applied under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of rent payable by the defendant. The defendant claimed that he was a raiyat holding at fixed rates. The First Court found that the tenant was not a raiyat holding at fixed rates and it assessed rent at the rate of Rs. 2-8 0 on the whole of the tenant's holding, it also gave an enhancement on account of the rise in prices. Both sides appealed to the Special Judge. The plaintiff appealed against the decision as to the rate of rent and the defendant appealed against the decision as to status. The learned Judge held that the presumption of section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act should apply in this case, and applying that presumption he held that the defendant was a raiyat at fixed rates. Some old papers appear to have been filed in the case dating back to 1264, 1275 and 1276. The papers of 1275 and 1276 show that the tenant was holding at the same rate at which he was holding at the time of the institution of the suit. The paper of 1264, however, shows a different rate. This paper, it appears, was neither signed, nor sealed, nor is there any evidence to show that it was written by any particular person, and in that state of facts the learned Judge held that section 90 of the Evidence Act did not apply.

The first argument addressed before us is that the learned Judge is wrong in so deciding and that the Judge ought to have presumed that the document was written by the person whose duty it was to write such documents. In my opinion, this argument cannot be sustained. Section 90 of the Evidence Act provides that the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of a document, which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person, is in that person's handwriting. As already stated, the document has not been signed, nor does the document purport to be in the handwriting of any particular person. We are asked to go beyond the presumption specified in section 90 of the Act. The first point, therefore, cannot succeed.

The next point taken is that the tenancy was created subsequently to the Permanent Settlement and that, therefore, the presumption raised in section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply. As regards that, it is a sufficient answer to say that the learned Judge refused to accept the evidence which bore on the question of the creation of the jote subsequently to the date of the Permanent Settlement; and, that being his finding, the provisions of section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act apply. The result then is that the learned Judge's decision as regards the status of the defendant must be upheld.

It is then argued that the learned Judge has not dealt with the appeal of the plaintiff as regards the rate of rent to be assessed. The learned Judge points out that there has been some increase in the area from the date of the earliest papers, which he accepts and he assesses rent in respect of the excess area. He does not, in so many words, accept the rate which is settled by the Assistant Settlement Officer, viz., Rs. 2-8-0 per kur, but as he does not interfere with the rent so settled, it is obvious that he intended to uphold the rent thus settled.

Then it is further urged that the Judge ought to have entered into a discussion of the evidence in regard to rent because the landlord claimed some higher rate than Rs. 2-8-0. As regards that all I need say is that it does not appear that that question was argued before the learned Special Judge.

In my opinion, this appeal fails and must, therefore, be dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiffs for setting aside a sale-deed executed by their father, defendant No. 2, on the 14th of May 1913 in favour of the first defendant and for possession of the property comprised in the sale. The ground upon which they brought the suit was that the sale was not for an antecedent debt or for family necessity. They also alleged that the defendant No. 2, the father of the plaintiffs, had been duped by the guardian of the first defendant and had been induced to execute the sale-deed without receiving any part of the consideration for the sale. The Court of First Instance dismissed the claim on the ground that it had not been proved that the sale had been made for immoral or illegal purposes. This judgment of the Court of First Instance was set aside by the lower Appellate Court. That Court held that there was no legal necessity for selling joint family property and that part of the consideration, viz., Rs. 262-7-0 which had been withheld by the vendee for payment of two prior mortgage-debts had not been paid. As to the remainder of the consideration the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that it had not been proved that the vendor, the father of the plaintiffs, had not received it and he held that the plaintiffs could only recover the property comprised in the sale on condition of paying to the vendee Rs. 537-9-0, the balance of the consideration. The plaintiffs have preferred this appeal and it is contended on their behalf that the Court below was wrong in attaching to its decree a condition that the plaintiffs should pay to the vendee the balance of the consideration which purported to have been paid in cash to their father. In our opinion this point is concluded by authority in this Court. It has been held in a number of cases that a sale for an antecedent debt or for the payment of an antecedent debt is binding on the sons and that if the consideration for a sale made by the father was not for any of the purposes mentioned above the sons were entitled to recover the property. It is urged, however, that the amount of consideration paid in cash to the father must be deemed to be the father's debt and the sons cannot recover the property sold by the father unless they refund to the vendee the amount so paid. This view is no doubt supported by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das (1). That case was dissented from by a Bench of this Court in Ram Dayal v. Suraj Mal (2). In Manbahal Rai v. Gopal Misra (3), to which one of us was a party, it was stated in the judgment that the consideration paid in cash to the father could not be regarded as an antecedent debt or as a debt of the father and the same view was repeated in the case of Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (4). In the case of Ram Dayal v. Suraj Mal (2), it was clearly ruled that the sons were not liable to refund to the purchaser the portion of the consideration which had been paid in cash to the father at the time of the sale but which was not required for the necessity of the family. The reason why we feel ourselves unable to agree with the decision of the Calcutta High Court to which we have already referred is that money paid to the father as consideration for the sale at the time of the sale cannot be regarded as a debt of the father until the sale has been set aside and the right of the vendee to get back the sale consideration from the father has accrued. The amount so paid may at some subsequent time become a debt of the father but until this event arises it cannot be deemed to be a debt for which the sons at the time when they get the sale set aside can be held liable. There are other cases decided by this Court in which the same view was practically held, but we deem it unnecessary to refer to them in detail. The result is that we allow the appeal, vary the decree of the Court below by striking out from it the provision that the plaintiffs should refund to the purchaser Rs. 537-9-0 as a condition precedent to their obtaining possession. The plaintiffs' claim is, therefore, decreed in full. The appellants will get their costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale. The objections preferred under Order XL1, rule 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure fail, and are dismissed with costs. We may note that a preliminary objection was taken by the respondents to the effect that the appeal was beyond time. We overruled the objection as the appeal had been admitted under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

—RESPONDENTS.

Principal and agent—Pro-note executed by general agent—Liability of principal—Evidence—Judgment in criminal trial, value of.

A lady executed a general power of attorney in favour of a relation, which gave him authority to borrow money on her behalf, but only for necessity. The said relation borrowed money on a promissory note, in which he described himself as a relation and agent of the lady, who was no party to its execution. The note described that the money was borrowed to meet the funeral expenses of one of her relatives and of her husband, who was the brother of the executant, and for personal expenses:

Held, that the lady was not liable on the note, inasmuch as it could not be inferred that the money was borrowed on her behalf, or if so borrowed was borrowed for necessity. [p. 453, col. 2; p. 454, col. 1.]

A judgment in a criminal trial is by itself evidence only of the conviction or acquittal which it records, and of no other matter. [p. 455, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 13th April 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, Sitapur, dated the 30th August 1915.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Appellant.

Syed Nabi Ullah and Babu Kanhaiya Lal, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—Syed Nazir Ahmad borrowed Rs. 600 on 15th February 1912 from Lalta Prasad and executed on that date a promissory note for Rs. 600 in favour of Lalta Prasad. Syed Nazir Ahmad was the brother of Bashir Ahmad deceased who was the husband of Musammât Muhamdi Begam. After the death of Bashir Ahmad, Nazir Ahmad acted as his sister-in-law's general agent. He subsequently married her. Their relations became strained in the year that the money was borrowed. Musammât Muhamdi Begam refused to live with Nazir Ahmad. He sued her for restitution of conjugal rights. She prosecuted him criminally for embezzlement. He was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment by a Criminal Court on 16th July 1912.

MUHAMDI BEGAM v. DURGA PRASAD.

His conviction and sentence were affirmed on appeal. Nazir Ahmad has since divorced Muhamdi Begam. Lalta Prasad died after execution of the promissory note and was succeeded by Durga Prasad and Devi Dayal.

The two latter instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Sitapur on 30th January 1915 on the basis of this promissory note against Musammât Muhamdi Begam and Nazir Ahmad. The learned Munsif granted them a decree against Nazir Ahmad alone and dismissed the suit as against Musammât Muhamdi Begam. Nazir Ahmad did not appeal to the District Judge. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge against the exemption of Musammât Muhamdi Begam. The learned District Judge allowed their appeal. Musammât Muhamdi Begam comes to this Court in second appeal.

The promissory note in question was admittedly not executed by Musammât Muhamdi Begam. It purports to borrow Rs. 600 to defray the expenses of the fatiha ceremonies of Bashir Ahmad, and the fatiha and chaliswan of Musammât Fatima Bibi, and for private expenses, and it is signed by Nazir Ahmad who describes himself as the brother-in-law and agent of Musammât Muhamdi Begam. If the promissory note stood alone, it would be impossible to pass a decree upon it against Musammât Muhamdi Begam. She never executed it, and there is nothing in its contents to show that she in any way benefited by it. The plaintiffs-respondents endeavoured to make her liable under its terms by evidence to the following effect. They asserted that she had directly authorized Lalta Prasad to advance the money explaining that it was for herself. The evidence on this point has been disbelieved by both Courts and their finding that it is unreliable is final. The plaintiffs next proved that Musammât Muhamdi Begam had executed a general power of attorney on 9th February 1912 in favour of Nazir Ahmad which gave him authority to borrow money on her behalf. I find that this power-of-attorney was executed by Musammât Muhamdi Begam, that she understood its contents, and that under its terms Nazir Ahmad was authorised to borrow money on her behalf, but only for necessity. This qualification is very important. If it was proved that the money was borrowed for the necessity of the lady, she would be bound under the terms of the general power of attorney. But there is nothing to prove from the document itself that it was borrowed for her necessity. As the document stands, the money might have well been borrowed by Nazir Ahmed in his personal capacity. A general agent of another person who borrows money and describes himself as general agent may be borrowing either for his principal or for himself. The circumstance that Nazir Ahmad described himself as the brother-in-law of the lady could not legally convey to the mind of any one that he was borrowing money on her behalf. The description is undoubtedly not an usual one. But I can draw no legal conclusion from it to the effect that merely by the use of this description the lender would understand that the money was being borrowed on behalf of the lady.

We next come to the question whether the description of the purposes of the loan in the promissory note would show that the money was being borrowed on behalf of the lady. A portion of the money was taken for the expenses of the fatiha ceremonies of the deceased Bashir Ahmad. It is undoubtedly a pious duty of a Muhammadan widow to perform to the best of her ability according to her means such ceremonies on account of her deceased husband. But it is also a pious duty of a male Muhammadan to perform such ceremonies on behalf of his deceased brother, and as Bashir Ahmad was not only the husband of the lady but also the brother of the executant, the circumstance that Nazir Ahmad borrowed a portion of the money for the ostensible purpose of defraying the expenses of these ceremonies would raise no legal inference that he borrowed that amount on behalf of Musammât Muhamdi Begam. The case of the expenses for the ceremonies on behalf of Musammât Fatima Bibi is slightly different. Musammât Fatima Bibi was a relative of Musammât Muhamdi Begam and not a relative of her husband and his brother. But that circumstance would not create a legal inference that the lender knew that the money was being borrowed on behalf of Musammât Muhamdi Begam. He was in a position to know that Bashir Ahmad was the husband of Musammât Muhamdi Begam and the brother of Nazir Ahmad, for Nazir Ahmad had described himself as the brother-in-law of Musammât Muhamdi Begam who, the creditor knew, was the widow of Bashir Ahmad, (it is in evidence that Bashir Ahmad had had dealings with Lalta Prasad), but there is nothing on the record to show that Lalta Prasad had any knowledge as to who Musammât Fatima Bibi was, and the point remains, could money borrowed to defray the expenses of the ceremonies on behalf of that lady be considered as borrowed for legal necessity? I cannot answer that question in the affirmative. The last amount borrowed was ostensibly for private expenses. But the promissory note does not state whose the private expenses were and they would appear from the terms of the document to be the private expenses of the executant Nazir Ahmad.

A further point remains, however. The learned District Judge found that the contents of the judgments of the Criminal Courts showed that Musammât Muhamdi Begam had prosecuted Nazir Ahmad for the embezzlement of this very sum of Rs. 600 which he had obtained by execution of the promissory note, and that it was on that charge that Nazir Ahmad was convicted. He, therefore, arrived at the conclusion that, if Musammât Muhamdi Begam claimed the money which was borrowed on that promissory note, and prosecuted Nazir Ahmad for embezzlement, she must be considered to have accepted liability under the terms of the note. It was for this reason mainly that he decided the case in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. I have now to see on what evidence the learned District Judge arrived at this conclusion. The complaint of Musammât Muhamdi Begam on which these criminal proceedings were instituted was never proved. Musammât Muhamdi Begam was examined on commission. There is nothing in her evidence to show that she prosecuted Nazir Ahmad in respect of the embezzlement of this sum of Rs. 600. She says, ".....I learnt of Lalta Prasad's debt from Sakhawat Ali in the course of the trial of Nazir Ahmad whom I had prosecuted for embezzlement. Sakhawat Ali told me that Nazir Ahmad has borrowed Rs. 600 from Lalta Prasad. Have you given him permission to do so? I said 'I know nothing of it'.....Nazir Ahmad embezzled the income of my village and took away my moveables for which I prosecuted him twice." Then she stated in cross-examination, "I had stated in Criminal Court that I knew not whether Nazir Ahmad had or had not brought any money from Lalta Prasad. I had also said that I neither asked him to borrow nor did he give anything to me. I did not prosecute Nazir Ahmad for this Rs. 600. I do not know if he was convicted for embezzling this sum. I had prosecuted him for embezzling the income of my estate and he was convicted."

It is thus clear that there is nothing in the lady's evidence to show that she prosecuted Nazir Ahmad in respect of the embezzlement of this sum. In the present suit the plaintiffs called as a witness a certain Ishri. His evidence was disbelieved by both Courts. They also called Abul Hasan to prove the mukhtarnama given by Musammât Muhamdi Begam to Nazir Ahmad. Durga Prasad one of the plaintiffs then gave evidence himself. That evidence has not been believed. They then called a certain Chhote Lal who gave no evidence of value and Paragi Singh who also gave no evidence of value. There is nothing in the evidence called by Musammât Muhamdi Begam to show the charge on which Nazir Ahmad was convicted except the lady's own statements. There is thus no evidence upon which the learned District Judge has based his finding that Nazir Ahmad was convicted on a charge of embezzlement of this sum of Rs. 600 except the copies of the judgments of the Deputy Magistrate who heard the case, the Sessions Judge who heard the appeal, and the Judicial Commissioner who heard the revision. These judgments, if they were admissible in evidence, would certainly go to show that Nazir Ahmad was convicted on a charge of embezzlement of this sum of Rs. 600, although I should not be disposed to draw from them the conclusion which the learned District Judge drew, that the circumstance of his prosecution on the charge discloses the acceptance by Musammât

KAJU MAL v. PARMA NAND.

Muhamdi Begam of liability under the promissory note. But apart from that fact, these judgments are not admissible in evidence to prove that the prosecution was on that charge. They cannot be so admitted under any provision of the Indian Evidence Act. The provisions of section 42 have no application. The judgments are conclusive evidence to show that Nazir Ahmad was convicted but they are not admissible in evidence to show even that Musammât Muhamdi Begam was the prosecutrix. It was for the plaintiffs-respondents to establish by evidence other than the contents of the judgments that Musammât Muhamdi Begam prosecuted Nazir Ahmad upon this charge. It was easy for them to adduce evidence upon such a point and they abstained from doing so.

I have considered whether in the circumstances of the case I should allow the plaintiffs-respondents the exceptional indulgence of permitting them to adduce further evidence to establish this point now. But I have after consideration decided not to do so. In the first place they ought to have known the legal requisites of success in such a matter. But apart from that fact even if the judgments were admissible in evidence I do not draw from them any conclusion to the effect that Musammât Muhamdi Begam accepted liability under the promissory note in the criminal proceedings or that anything which she did in those proceedings establishes her liability.

The case thus stands that the plaintiffs-respondents, even if they were allowed to utilize the contents of documents which are not admissible in evidence, have failed to establish the liability of the lady. They no doubt are in an unfortunate position, as the man who executed the promissory note is an exceedingly dishonest person, and there is reason to suppose that he will not be likely to satisfy the decree. But they have largely to thank themselves for their own difficulties in this matter. They clearly lent him the money without communicating with the lady or without satisfying themselves of his reliability or responsibility. They have been given a decree against him which they will have to execute as best they can. But Musammât Muhamdi Begam is on my finding in no way responsible for the satisfaction of the promissory note.

I, therefore, allow her appeal, dismiss the decree as against her, and direct that the plaintiffs-respondents pay their own costs and those of Musammât Muhamdi Begam in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b)—Letter reciting certain facts and delivery of possession, whether compulsorily registrable.

A letter reciting certain facts and saying that the writer has given possession of certain property to a certain individual and has ceased to have anything to do with it, is not an instrument which of itself operates or purports to create or declare any right, title or interest in the property and does not, therefore, require registration. Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Kangra at Dharamsala, dated the 22nd February 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, third Class, Dehra, District Kangra, dated the 30th November 1914, dismissing the claim.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.
Lala Durga Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which the present appeal arises was brought by Parma Nand, plaintiff-respondent, for possession of a shop which he alleged had been sold to him by Ghaplia and of which Kaju Mal, defendant-appellant, was said to have taken wrongful possession. The plaintiff claimed under an unregistered deed of sale, dated the 23rd September 1912, whereas Kaju Mal based his title on an alleged oral sale of the 22nd April 1911, followed by possession. The First Court found that the sale in favour of the defendant was proved, that he had been in continuous possession since the date of the sale and that the sale to the plaintiff was a fictitious one. On these findings it dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court on appeal held that, though the defendant pleaded an oral sale, he really relied upon a document, dated the 22nd April 1911, as evidence of the sale, that consideration for the sale was over Rs. 100 and that as the instrument purported to convey rights in property of the value of more than Rs. 100 its registration was compulsory, and, as it had not been registered, it was not admissible in evidence. The Court, therefore, ruled that the document must be excluded from consideration and that the defendant must fall back on the oral evidence of the alleged sale which evidence it, however, pronounced to be unsatisfactory and not out-weighting the documentary and oral evidence relied upon by the plaintiff. It, therefore, accepted the appeal and decreed the plaintiff's claim. In second appeal by the defendant it is urged that the document in question did not require registration. It is also pointed out that the lower Appellate Court has not come to any finding as to whether the defendant was in possession of the property, and, if so, what the effect of that possession was. It is argued that defendant was in possession at the time of the sale to the plaintiff and that such possession was a notice to the latter and is prima facie evidence of the defendant's title. I have carefully considered the document of the 10th Besakh Sambat 1968, corresponding to 22nd April 1911, it is written in Hindi and is really a letter, as it purports to be from Ghaplia to Shah Kaju; it is only a sort of memorandum, and is quite an informal document; it recites certain facts and states that the writer has to-day given possession of the shop and has put Shah Gauri and Kaju in possession, that the writer has nothing to do with the shop in future and it has been sold. This document is not in my opinion an instrument which of itself purports or operates to create or declare any right, title or interest in the shop in question. It is merely a letter reciting certain facts. I hold that such a document does not require registration. I also note that this objection was not raised in the First Court and the document was received in evidence without apparently any objection being raised. Besides the document there is ample oral evidence of the sale of Kaju. I also see no reason to doubt that the vendee obtained possession; the subsequent sale to the plaintiff was by an unregistered deed and cannot have any priority over the sale to the defendant. Counsel for the appellant referred inter alia to Imam Buksh v. Pokhar (1), Hassan v. Fazal (2) and Jodh Singh v. Sundar Singh (3), as authority for the proposition that the defendant's title should be presumed from his peaceful possession of the property, and that in any case the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the defendant was not the owner of the property. It is unnecessary to discuss this argument because of my finding that the document of the 22nd April 1911 does not require registration and that the defendant appellant has fully proved his sale by the evidence produced by him.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore the decree of the First Court with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

SAIFU KHAN v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

1916, reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 30th April 1915.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT—The appellant in this case one Saifu Khan was the 4th defendant in a suit, which was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur by the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad in his capacity of Manager of the Court of Wards of Ajudhia Estate. The first three defendants in the case were Pir Bakhsh Khan, Fida Husain Khan and Chand Khan, and the suit was brought for the purpose of enforcing a surety bond by attachment and sale of a 1 anna 1 pie under-proprietary share situated in a village called Sewa. It appears that the first defendant Pir Bakhsh Khan in the month of January 1906 took a lease of a certain village belonging to the Ajudhia Estate for the year 1313 to 1322 Faali. He executed a kabuliyat in favour of the estate agreeing to pay a yearly rent of Rs. 2,275 and it was alleged in the second paragraph of the plaint that Pir Bakhsh got possession under the terms of this kabuliyat. In the third paragraph of the plaint it was stated "that with a view to ensure the realization of the lease money aforesaid the defendant No. 1 (that is the lessee), and his own brothers the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 executed a surety bond on the 18th of June 1906 by which they hypothecated a 1 anna 1 pie under proprietary share of the village Sewa to secure the payment of one year's rent amounting to Rs. 2,275." The other paragraphs of the plaint set out that the lessee Pir Bakhsh fell into arrears and that consequently the suit was brought in order to enforce the terms of this contract of indemnity. The position of the 4th defendant Saifu Khan with respect to this claim is as follows. It appears that the Raja of Hasanpur, who is the 5th defendant in the case, is the superior proprietor of this village of Sewa in which the under-proprietary share in suit is situated. The Raja obtained a decree for arrears of rent against a number of the under-proprietors in the village including the first three defendants and in execution of his decree he had caused the under-proprietary right in the village to be sold, property which included the share which is now in dispute. The Court of Wards had a decree against Pir Bakhsh for the arrears of rent which were owing from him; and claiming to be interested in the under-proprietary share which had been hypothecated under the deed of indemnity above mentioned the Deputy Commissioner, in the course of the execution proceedings taken by the Raja of Hasanpur, applied to have this property either exempted from sale, or failing that, to have it notified at the time of the sale that the property was subject to an encumbrance in favour of the Court of Wards. This application of the Court of Wards to the Revenue Court which was executing the Raja's decree was unsuccessful. The property was brought to sale and was purchased by the defendant appellant Saifu Khan. The present suit, therefore, has been brought for enforcement of the indemnity bond and the plaintiff Court of Wards claims to be entitled to bring this under-proprietary share to sale for the purpose of realizing the amount secured by the deed of indemnity. A number of pleas were put up by the defendant Saifu Khan. Shortly stated his defence was to the effect that he had purchased the property free from all encumbrances and that the Court of Wards had no right to call for a sale of this property in order to satisfy a claim based upon the deed of indemnity. With regard to this deed the only plea which Saifu Khan put forward in his written defence was that he had no knowledge whatever of it. Another defence was in the form of a suggestion or assertion that the plaintiff was in some way estopped from maintaining this suit. After the written pleadings had been put in Court statements were made from time to time by the Counsel employed by the parties. Issues were framed and issue No. 2 (a) reads as follows. "Is the security deed genuine and valid?" On the 16th April 1915 after these issues were framed it seems that the Pleader for Saifu Khan made an admission that the deed which was being sued upon was a genuine deed and that he would not, therefore, require proof of its execution. When the Subordinate Judge came to decide the case he was of opinion that the deed was invalid to the extent of two-third of the share hypothecated inasmuch as no consideration for its execution was proved. In the course of his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge remarks that although the Pleader engaged by the defendant Saifu Khan had admitted the genuineness of the document he still contested its validity. The result was that the claim was dismissed. In appeal this decree of the Court of First Instance has been reversed by the learned District Judge of Fyzabad. In his opinion the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the deed of indemnity was void for want of consideration. The Judge was of opinion that the defendant appellant Saifu Khan was bound to raise a definite plea attacking the validity of the document in suit. He held that no such definite plea had been put forward and that in reality there was no issue between the parties with regard to this matter. He refers in the course of his judgment to the provisions of Order VIII, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and says that Saifu Khan was bound to expressly raise the plea of want of consideration in his written statement of defence. With regard to the other points which were debated before the learned Judge he held that there was no bar to the entertainment of the suit on the other grounds which were put forward by Saifu Khan in his statement of defence. There are nine grounds set out in the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court but only two points have been argued before me by Mr. Wasim, the learned Counsel for the appellant. The first five grounds of the memorandum of appeal relate to the question of the validity of this deed of indemnity. The argument with respect to this point is that the learned Judge was wrong in not investigating the question of want of consideration. The only other ground which has been pressed upon my attention by the learned Counsel is with reference to the plea taken in the ninth ground of the memorandum of appeal. It was argued that when the Raja of Hasanpur obtained his decree against the under-proprietors including Pir Bakhsh and his brothers the Court of Wards which had taken an encumbrance of the property belonging to these under-proprietors was under a liability to satisfy the decree obtained by the Raja the superior proprietor. In this connection reference was made to section 154 of the Oudh Rent Act. It is contended that as the Court of Wards did not satisfy the decree the present suit is not maintainable. I am unable to accept this argument. It may be the case that the Court of Wards as an encumbrancer of under-proprietary property was liable to the Raja. It does not appear, however, that the Raja made the Court of Wards any party to the suit in which he claimed arrears of rent from Pir Bakhsh and the others and in any case I fail to see how it can be said that the mere fact that the Court of Wards did not satisfy the Raja's decree is any bar to its making the present claim on the basis of this deed of indemnity. So far as this point is concerned the appellant has, in my opinion, no case. I have come to the conclusion, however, that I must send the case back for a decision upon the question of the consideration which passed between the persons who are parties to the bond of indemnity executed in the month of June 1906. I have already mentioned that the learned Judge has referred to Order VIII, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure in his judgment. I might also refer to Order VI, rule 8, which lays down that where a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the same by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such a contract. It was, however, to be remembered in the present instance that the defendant-appellant Saifu Khan was no party to this deed of indemnity and this being so it seems to me impossible to insist that he should have set up pleas based upon facts which could not possibly be within his knowledge. How, it may be asked, was Saifu Khan to raise a plea to the effect that no consideration moving from the Court of Wards had passed to the ex-ecutants of this deed of indemnity. It is quite clear, as I have already mentioned, that this document was executed behind Saifu Khan's back and without his knowledge and when he stated in the second paragraph of his written statement that he had no knowledge of the terms of the document or the circumstances in which it came to be executed he said all that could be expected from him in the circumstances. Referring to section 127 of the Contract Act we find that anything done or any promise made for the benefit of the principal debtor may be a sufficient consideration to the surety for giving the guarantee. If this case is to be decided upon the strict law of pleadings it seems to me that the learned Judge should have insisted upon a strict observance of the law by the plaintiff himself. If we examine the plaint which was filed in this case we find no allegation made by the plaintiff that any consideration moved from the plaintiff to the first three defendants in connection with the execution of this contract of indemnity. Order VI, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, lays down that the forms in Appendix A when applicable, and where they are not applicable, forms of a like character, as nearly as may be, shall be, used for all pleadings. In Appendix A to the Code, form No. 12, we have a form of plaint which is to be followed in a suit brought against a surety for payment of rent; and in the second paragraph of this pattern plaint we find an allegation made by the plaintiff "that the defendant (that is the surety) agreed, in consideration of the letting of the premises to the lessee, to guarantee the punctual payment of rent." Similarly we find in form No. 18 in the same Appendix (a case of a suit on a bond for the fidelity of a clerk) an allegation that consideration passed from the plaintiff to the defendant. It seems to me clear, therefore, that in cases of the present kind it is the intention of the Legislature that the fact of consideration having been given should be alleged in the plaint. Another point may be noticed here. I have already stated that the kabuliyat which was executed by the first defendant Pir Bakhsh was signed by him on the 9th of January and was registered on the 15th of January 1906. I take it from the allegation contained in the second paragraph of the plaint that Pir Bakhsh obtained possession immediately after this deed had been registered. That may not of course be the real meaning of what is said in paragraph 2, but at any rate it is the apparent meaning. Then we find in paragraph 3 that the indemnity bond upon which the plaintiff relied was executed on the 18th of June 1906, that is to say about six months after the kabuliyat had been executed by the principal debtor and presumably six months or thereabouts after he had been admitted to possession. Prima facie therefore it would appear from these statements contained in the plaint that there was no consideration for this contract and the learned Counsel for the appellant has referred in this connection to illustration (c) attached to section 127 of the Contract Act. In these circumstances it may well be contended that it was not necessary for the appellant Saifu Khan to raise, even if he could, any definite plea that the bond in suit was void for want of consideration, that fact being apparent upon the statement of the case made by the plaintiff himself. I think there can be no doubt that the question of the validity of this document was one which ought to have been tried out in the Court of First Instance. The Subordinate Judge has, as I have mentioned, decided this question adversely to the plaintiff. At the same time he was guilty, I think, of error in not allowing the plaintiff an opportunity of producing evidence to show that notwithstanding what appeared in the plaint there was in fact good consideration for the bond. I cannot agree with the learned Judge of the Court below that the issue relating to want of consideration for the bond was not a matter which was to be inquired into in the Court of First Instance.

I remit the following issue for trial to the Court of the learned Judge:—

What consideration, if any, moved from the plaintiff to the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in connection with the execution of the indemnity bond dated the 18th of June 1906?

The plaintiff will be given an opportunity of adducing any evidence he may choose to bring bearing upon this issue and the defendant-appellant ought to have an opportunity of producing evidence by way of rebuttal. The learned Judge will return his finding on this issue within two months from the date of the receipt of this order of remand and fifteen days to run from the date of his finding will be allowed to the parties to file objections if they so desire.

This appeal has already been before me and by my order of the 16th of January last an issue was remitted for trial to the learned District Judge of Fyzabad. The question which the learned Judge was asked to determine was whether or not any consideration moved from the plaintiff to the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in connection with the execution of the indemnity bond dated 18th June 1906. The finding of the learned Judge is that there was consideration for this bond of indemnity. He finds as a matter of fact that actual possession of the property in respect of which the lease had been executed was not delivered to the lessee Pir Bakhsh Khan until the indemnity bond in suit, namely the bond of 18th of June 1906, had been executed and accepted as adequate security. A petition of objection was lodged against the finding of the learned District Judge but Mr. Wasim has very candidly informed me that he is unable to challenge the finding. In view of that finding the appeal must be dismissed. The order, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where in a suit for rent, the question as to what is the rent annually payable for the holding is directly raised and decided by the Court, the decision operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties or their representatives, unless it is shown that the rent has been subsequently changed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 10th September 1915, affirming that of the Munsif at Satkania, dated the 18th February 1915.

Babus D. L. Kastgir and Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant.

Babus Khitish Chandra Sen and Prabodh Ch. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The plaintiff stated that the rent was Rs. 6-11-0 per year, while the defendant said that it was Rs. 5-14-6.

It appears that there was a previous rent suit in which also the plaintiff claimed Rs. 6-11-0 as rent of the holding. The defence was the same. As in the present suit, an express issue was raised as to the amount of the jama payable by the defendant. In that suit, the Court, upon a consideration of the evidence, came to the conclusion that Rs. 5-14-6 was the rent payable for the holding per year.

The present suit is for the period immediately succeeding that for which the previous suit was brought. In this suit the plaintiff again claims rent at the rate of Rs. 6-11-0 per year. The Courts below have held that the decision in the previous suit operates as res judicata.

We think that the decision of the Court below is right. As we have said, the question as to what is the rent payable for the holding was directly raised and decided in the previous suit. The plaintiff says that he had no knowledge of the kabuliyat which he has now produced and from which he wants to show that Rs. 6-11-0 which he claims as rent, includes the price of a goat which the defendant's predecessor-in-title agreed to pay. Practically the plaintiff wants to produce additional evidence or urge an additional ground in support of his contention that Rs. 6-11-0 constitute the annual rent. The yearly rent was expressly determined in the previous suit to be Rs. 5-14-6 and it has not been shown nor even suggested that the rent has been subsequently changed.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Pre-emption—Mortgage by conditional sale—Decree absolute—Possession—Cause of action—Limitation.

A mortgage by way of conditional sale was executed on the 3rd of June 1909. A decree absolute was made with respect to the mortgage on the 13th of June 1914, and possession was given on the 26th of February 1915. A suit for pre-emption with respect to the property was instituted on the 5th of October 1915. The custom of pre-emption as proved by an entry in the wajib-ul-arz referred to transfers and not to any order of Court making a decree absolute or granting possession:

Held, that the suit was barred by time inasmuch as the plaintiff's right, if any, accrued at the time of the original transfer, i.e., in 1909 and not at the time at which possession was given under the decree absolute, as there was no right to get possession as the result of the decree absolute or the order for possession of the Court. [p. 462, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 13th September, 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.—All that the wajib-ul-arz provides is that the right of pre-emption is given in the case of transfers and the first offer should be made as detailed therein. There is no provision as to any right of pre-emption arising upon the order of the Court for making a decree absolute or granting possession. Thus the plaintiff got no right of possession as the result of the decree absolute on the order for possession of the Court. Any right which accrued to the plaintiff accrued at the time of transfer in 1909. The suit is barred by time.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents, contended that the point argued by appellant's Counsel did not arise as the defendant-appellant admitted the right of pre-emption. He had no right now to raise that plea. He cannot go behind his admissions. He then referred to judgments of the lower Court.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen was not called to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The facts are that as far back as the 3rd of June 1909, there was a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The decree absolute was made on the 13th of June 1914. Possession was given on the 26th of February 1915. The present suit was instituted on the 5th of October 1915. The plaintiff alleged his cause of action to have arisen not at the date of the original transfer but on the date at which possession was given under the decree absolute. The custom as proved by the entry in the wajib-ul-arz refers to transfers (intikal) and provides that the first offer must be made as therein set forth. There is no reference in the entry to any right of pre-emption upon the order of the Court for making a decree absolute or granting possession. The question in the Court below was when did the plaintiff's cause of action, if any, arise. The Court of First Instance held that the cause of action, if any, arose on the 3rd of June 1909, the date of the transfer, and that the suit was barred by limitation. The lower Appellate Court thought otherwise. The defendant comes here in second appeal. It is contended that there was no right to get possession as the result of the decree absolute or the order for possession of the Court and that the plaintiff's right, if any, accrued at the time of the original transfer, that is, in 1909. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that this plea is not open because in the Court below the right of pre-emption was admitted. It seems to us that what was admitted in the Court below was that there was a right of pre-emption as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz and that this custom had reference to voluntary transfers by co-sharers and that if the plaintiff's rights were under this custom, his suit was clearly barred. In our opinion it cannot be contended for one moment that the defendant admitted in the Court below that there existed a right of pre-emption by reason of the fact that there had been an order absolute in a foreclosure suit and an order for possession following thereon. The last paragraph but one of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court clearly shows that the defendant's Pleader in that Court never intended to make any such admission. We think that the only custom which was proved in the present case was the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz. The plaintiff's right, therefore, if any, arose in 1909, and the suit ought to have been brought within one year from that date. We allow the appeal set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of First Instance with costs in this Court and in the Court below. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

The plaintiff brought a suit in the alternative, first of all, to recover a particular land on the footing that a legal partition had been made between the parties, and if the partition was not legal, then he asked to be put in joint possession with the defendants. The case went to trial without any application by the defendants under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to exclude one of the causes of action from the trial. The Trial Court awarded the plaintiff a decree for joint possession, which was affirmed in appeal without any objection having been made to the frame of the suit.

Held, that in second appeal the defendant could not urge that the whole of the proceedings culminating in the decree for joint possession should be put an end to on the ground that contradictory causes of action ought not to have been tried together. [p. 463, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 9th August, 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, Jhenida, dated the 3rd August 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Bireswar Bagchi, for the Appellants.
—The defendants are the appellants. The plaintiff's case was that he had been in possession of a specific portion which fell to his share on partition and that he was dispossessed from his share by the defendants.

His prayers were two, viz., (1) for the recovery of his share from which he had been dispossessed, or in the alternative (2) a decree for joint possession. The Courts below disbelieved the plaintiff's story of partition and separate possession but gave him a decree for joint possession. My submission is that when his main case failed he should not have been given a decree for joint possession. In view of the findings of the Court below his remedy lay in a suit for partition. See unreported Letters Patent Appeal No. 125 of 1915.

[FLETCHER, J.—In the plaint the alternative prayer was made, and so the lower Courts could allow such a prayer.]

But the alternative prayers made in the plaint are contradictory and inconsistent, and when the plaintiff's main case for recovery of khas possession failed, the alternative prayer for joint possession should not have been allowed.

[FLETCHER, J.—Was this point taken in the lower Courts?]

I am not sure of that.

[FLETCHER, J.—In second appeal you cannot raise any point not taken in the lower Courts.]

It is a pure question of law, and your Lordships can allow it to be raised for the first time in second appeal. The two cases set up in the plaint are contradictory and inconsistent, and your Lordships have held in many cases that such contradictory cases should not be allowed to be set up. Even according to the finding of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for joint possession.

Babu Makunda Behari Mullick, for the Respondents, not called upon in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants against a judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore affirming a decision of the Munsif of Jhenida. The plaintiff brought a suit in the alternative, first of all to recover certain particular specified land on the footing that a legal partition had been made between the parties and, if the partition was not legal, then he asked to be put in joint possession with the defendants. This is not a case where the plaintiff sued to recover a particular land on the footing that there had been a partition and that case having failed the Court awarded a decree for joint possession. The plaintiff set out his case from the outset and the defendants had notice of the alternative case. They might have applied to the Court under the provisions of the Code to exclude one of the causes of action from the present trial. They, however, did not do so. The case went to trial and was argued in both the lower Courts without any objection, and now in the second appeal we are asked to put an end to the whole of the proceedings on the ground that contradictory causes of action ought not to be tried together. We think there is no force in this contention. Having regard to the fact that the case was tried in that way without any objection in the first Court on the settlement of issue the objection urged in this appeal was not raised and in the lower Appellate Court where the present appellants were also the appellants they raised no point excepting the two mentioned by the learned Judge in his judgment as matters for determination and these matters having been determined in the suit against them, the appellants cannot now in the second appeal raise a matter which has not been considered by the lower Courts. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the learned Judge of the Court below declining to review his judgment should not be set aside. The Judge in the Court below had all the materials before him. He said that the judgment he delivered was all right and he saw no reason to interfere with it and, therefore, declined to grant a review. We cannot interfere with the discretion of a Judge as to whether he should or should not review his judgment. The argument that has been put forward that the application is made not against the order of the learned Judge on the review but against the original order cannot be assented to for one moment. As a matter of fact, the Judge in the original judgment said that the plaintiffs were in serious default. Notwithstanding that they were given time to rectify the default; but they did not do so. The Judge having considered these matters said that he declined to review his judgment. We see no reason to interfere with the judgment of the learned Judge. The Rule is, therefore, discharged. We make no order as to costs.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This and the connected Appeal No. 1128 of 1915 arise under the following circumstances. Two mortgages were made in favour of one Govind, since deceased. The purchaser of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor paid into Court the amount due upon the two mortgages under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. The present suit has been brought by the plaintiffs alleging that they and Govind constituted a joint Hindu family and that accordingly the defendant No. 1, the daughter of Govind, had no interest therein. The Court of First Instance found that the family was joint but nevertheless dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appealed contending that if the finding that the family was joint was accepted, then the suit ought to have been decreed. The defendant Musamat Kausa filed an objection to the finding that Govind and the plaintiffs were joint. The lower Appellate Court apparently accepting the finding of the Court of First Instance that the family was joint, held that it lay upon the plaintiffs to prove that the money advanced on the mortgages were out of joint family funds. He declined to record any finding on the question of jointness or separation. We think that if the family was found to be joint and if it was proved that there was joint family property belonging to the family, then the onus of showing that the money advanced on these mortgages was the self-acquired property of Govind would lie upon the defendant his daughter. Before finally deciding the appeal we think it necessary to refer issues to the Court below. We accordingly refer the following issues:—

(1) Were plaintiffs and Govind members of a joint Hindu family and did they own joint property?

(2) Was the money advanced on these mortgages the separate property of Govind?

In dealing this last mentioned issue the Court will bear in mind what we have said above as to the onus of proof. The Court will decide these issues on the evidence already on the record. Ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

BHUPENDRA KUMAR v. PYARI MOHAN ROY.

JUDGMENT.

IN No. 1905 OF 1913.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of the learned District Judge of the Twenty-four Parganahs modifying a decision of the Subordinate Judge at Alipur. The present suit was instituted as long ago as the 9th April 1903, and is, therefore, slightly more than eleven years old to-day, and I think that the delay in the proceedings casts no credit either on the Courts or on the parties engaged in the litigation. The suit was a suit for possession brought by the plaintiff as the assignee of a lease granted by the defendant No. 3 in the month of June 1899, and the suit was principally brought against the contesting defendant who had obtained a lease from the same lessor in August 1899, his property adjoining the property let out to the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title. The case as decided by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court in the judgment now under appeal is this:—The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the defendant was acting in good faith when he encroached upon and cleared the lands of the plaintiff and that he had done so in the belief that the property was included in his share and that, so far as I gather from the reasons given by the learned Judge, was partly, if not, largely, due to the failure of the plaintiff or his predecessor to fulfil one of the terms of the lease which was granted to him, namely, that the boundaries should be demarcated between the plaintiff's predecessor and the defendant. But the learned Judge made a finding that the evidence did not establish that the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-interest were aware of the encroachment that had been made by the defendant. The learned Judge, however, seems to have considered that that point was immaterial and he declared a charge on the property in favour of the defendant and declared the plaintiff's right thereto subject to the charge so created. The plaintiff appealed against that decision.

The first point is whether the learned Judge was right in the view that he took, namely, that having come to the conclusion that knowledge of the plaintiff or his predecessor had not been established to the satisfaction of the Court, whether the mere fact that the defendant had encroached and spent money in good faith was sufficient to entitle him to a charge on the plaintiff's property. The case is not governed by section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, but it comes within the general rule as laid down in the well-known case of Ramsden v. Dyson (1). That rule has been adopted and followed in India in more than one case. The fact that the learned Judge found that the plaintiff or his predecessor had no knowledge or that, at any rate, the evidence did not establish such knowledge is sufficient to take the present case out of that rule, and, therefore, the judgment appealed from cannot be supported on the ground on which the learned Judge rested his decision. But the case does not rest there. There are other provisions in the law in this country governing the obligations of persons enjoying the benefit of a non-gratuitous act. Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act is a statutory enactment with reference thereto. That section provides that where a person lawfully does anything for another person or delivers anything to him not intending to do so gratuitously and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of or to restore the thing so done or delivered. It is argued on the part of the plaintiff that this section only applies when the person lawfully doing the thing for another person knows who the other person is. There is no warrant for such limitation being put on the section and the illustrations to the section negative the view that the person lawfully doing the thing for another person knew the name of the other person. It is quite clear that the two illustrations presuppose that the person doing the thing did not know the name. The first illustration of the tradesman having the goods at the wrong house is a clear case where the tradesman did not know the name of the person, or, at any rate, if he knew his name, he made a mistake as to the person bearing that name. There is no foundation for the argument put forward by the learned Vakil

(1) (1866) 1 H. L. 129; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 506; 14 W. R. 926.

SHUPENDRA KUMAR V. PYARI MOHAN ROY.

for the appellant as regards the meaning of this section. The question is whether the present case comes within the terms of that section. The section is very wide and, of course, there must be some limitation. But it cannot be suggested in the present case that the clearing of the jungle was not done lawfully. It is quite clear from the findings made by the learned Judge that the defendant did not intend to do so gratuitously. The evidence also shows without doubt that the plaintiff has enjoyed the benefit of the money laid out by the defendant in clearing the jungle and making the land fit for cultivation. I think the case clearly comes within the terms of section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. The difference between section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 70 of the Indian Contract Act is that, in cases coming under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act and under the rule laid down in Ramsden v. Dyson (1), the defendant gets a charge on the property, but, in cases under section 70 of the Indian Contract Act, the plaintiff is bound to make compensation to the defendant for the amount spent; and, therefore, the decree in this case, instead of declaring a charge in favour of the defendant, should declare that the plaintiff is entitled to recover possession upon payment of the amount that was found to be due to the defendant by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. I think, on the findings made by the learned Judge the defendant is entitled to recover the money which he has laid out in improving and rendering fit for cultivation the land of the plaintiff. If the defendant be deprived of the amount spent by him on the land, it will be a great hardship on him. The argument that has been put forward on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that this is, in fact, a case of the defendant having improved his own land has no foundation. The land was dense jungle and had no value unless and until the property was cleared and made fit for cultivation. It is not suggested that the property could have been cleared and made fit for cultivation at any lesser sum. If the defendant loses the benefit of the money spent by him for clearing this considerable piece of land, it would be a great hardship. Therefore, on the findings made by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, I think the case comes within the terms of section 70 of the Indian Contract Act and the plaintiff is entitled to obtain the decree given in his favour by the lower Appellate Court, subject to the variation I have mentioned.

Two other points were raised in this appeal which were touched upon somewhat lightly. It is hardly a matter of surprise when we find that the points were not referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The first point was that, in ascertaining the amount of compensation allowed to the defendant, the defendant ought to have been charged by way of mesne profits. The point was not referred to in the judgment of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court and presumably for the reason given in the Munsif's judgment, namely, that, if the defendant be charged by way of mesne profits, he ought to be allowed interest on the amount he laid out. It is sufficient to say that the point was not raised in the Court of Appeal below, and it is much too late to raise it now in this Court in second appeal. The second point was that the defendant ought to have been also charged with the value of the timber that was cut and removed from the land in order to make it clear. There is nothing in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court about this point at all. We do not know whether the timber was of any value or whether it was merely under growth which was wholly valueless and would fetch nothing and would rather require money to be spent to remove it from the land. The point was, however, not raised in the Court of Appeal below and it cannot be taken here now in second appeal.

In the result, the judgment appealed from must be affirmed and the present appeal dismissed with costs, subject to the variation that I have already mentioned.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

This appeal is not pressed and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1621
OF 1915.

April 20, 1917.

Present:—Justice Sir Charles Chitty,
Kt., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.JNANENDRA MOHAN SEN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT*versus*HARI RAM RABHA AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Appeal decided on new case not made out in pleadings, re-hearing of—Remand.

Where an Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit affirming the decision of the primary Court on a case which was neither set up by the plaintiff nor by the defendant and was absolutely inconsistent with the defendant's case:

Held, that the judgment of the Appellate Court could not stand and that the case should be remanded to the Appellate Court for a re-hearing of the appeal. [p. 468, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Subordinate Judge, Dhubri, Assam Valley District, dated the 31st March 1915, affirming that of the Extra Assistant Commissioner and Munsif, Goalpara, dated the 19th December 1913.

FACTS.—The plaintiff was the appellant in this case. The suit was for recovery of possession after declaration of title to 8 bighas of land with mesne profits. The land in dispute was a part of a large plot of 54 bighas lakheraj lands, originally held by the lakherajdars from whom Rani Abhoyesswari Debi, pro forma defendant, purchased it in 1908. The Rani in her turn gave a settlement of the said 54 bighas to the plaintiff, from whom the defendant No. 1 took a sub-lease of the 8 bighas on condition to pay rent in kind. The defendant No. 1 used to pay rent in paddy, and on his failure to pay rent, the plaintiff brought a suit against him for rent. In that suit the defendant alleged that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the plaintiff. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit for rent, holding that the plaintiff had failed to establish the relationship of landlord and tenant between himself and the defendant. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover khas possession of the land from the defendant No. 1, the Rani being made pro forma defendant. In this case also the defendant pleaded that he was not a tenant of the plaintiff, but a tenant holding directly under the Rani.

The Court of first instance found that the settlement was in favour of the plaintiff, and that the defendant had failed to prove his tenancy under the Rani. But the Court, relying on the deposition of one of the defendant's witnesses, found that one Chakar had an occupancy right in the disputed land, and so long as Chakar did not abandon his holding, the plaintiff was not entitled to take possession of the land. The evidence relied upon was to the effect that Chakar who was holding the land in dispute, while leaving the country for some military service, asked the defendant No. 1 to remain in possession of the land till he returned, that Chakar employed defendant No. 1 as his agent, and that the defendant paid rent in his absence. The Court held, there was no surrender of the holding by Chakar.

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred an appeal and the lower Appellate Court held that the settlement was made by the zemindar in favour of the plaintiff, when Chakar was in possession of the land and had a claim to that land, and that the zemindar had no right to settle the land ignoring Chakar's right to the land, so long as no default was made in payment of rent.

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Saty Charan Sinha), for the Appellant.—In this case the lower Court altogether decided upon a new case, which was not made out either by the plaintiff or by the defendant. In the written statement, the defendant alleged that he was a tenant of the Rani and he produced witnesses to support his case. The Court, on the deposition of one of the defendant's witnesses, came to the conclusion that the defendant was the agent of Chakar, who held the land prior to the settlement made in favour of the plaintiff, and that the defendant No. 1 who was the agent of Chakar in his absence, had a right to the land by virtue of his agency, as Chakar's interest and right to the land could not in any way be prejudiced by the settlement made by the Rani in favour of the plaintiff. This is an altogether new case, which the plaintiff never alleged, nor the defendant in his written statement set up. The question was whether the defendant No. 1 was the direct tenant of the Rani or not,

JNANENDRA MOHAN SEN V. HARI RAM RABHA.

The Court had no jurisdiction to decide a new case which the plaintiff never urged nor the defendant alleged.

[CHITTY, J.—The Court may pronounce judgment not on the case made out by the plaintiff or the defendant but on the evidence produced by the parties.]

The Court cannot decide a case which is not made out in the pleadings nor upon evidence which is not given for the finding of an issue raised. In the written statement the defendant No. 1 stated that his predecessors were holding the land from the Rani and no plea of Chakar's holding the land and his deriving the title to the land in dispute from Chakar was set up.

Moreover, the entire holding of 54 bighas was settled with the plaintiff by the Rani, and by that Chakar, who was holding 8 bighas of the land in question, becomes my tenant.

Refers to Order VIII, rule 2. The defendant cannot make a new case.

Babu Gobinda Chander Dey Roy (with him Babus Abaninath Bhattacharya and Purno Chunder Roy), for the Respondents.—These are questions of fact. Even if the finding is wrong, in second appeal the questions of fact are not to be interfered with.

JUDGMENT. — This appeal arises out of a title suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendant Hari Ram Rabha. Plaintiff sought to eject the defendant from about 8 bighas of land, on the ground that he was a trespasser and that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. It appears that the defendant No. 2 Rani Abhoyeswari Debi purchased certain lakheraj land in 1901. In 1902 plaintiff took settlement from the Rani of the whole 54 bighas of that land. In 1910 he brought a suit against the defendant for rent of the 8 bighas of which the defendant was in possession. In that suit defendant denied the relationship of landlord and tenant and the suit was dismissed on the ground that no such relationship existed. Plaintiff accordingly brought this suit in ejectment against the defendant. Defendant's case as put forward in his written statement was that he was a tenant of the Rani under a settlement from the lakherajdars who had sold to the Rani. Evidence was recorded and amongst other witnesses for the defendant one Chakar Mech was examined. It appears that this Chakar Mech had left the locality in 1304 when he joined the military police and he had not been there since.

The Court of first instance found that there was a settlement in favour of the plaintiff by the Rani, though the learned Munsif threw some doubt on that settlement on the ground that the officer in charge of the Rani's affairs who had the making of the settlement was the plaintiff's father. The Munsif also found that the defendant failed to prove his tenancy from the time of the lakherajdars, but he came to the conclusion that the disputed area was held by Chakar Mech as a recorded tenant under the lakherajdar and formed part of his holding. He was further of opinion that Chakar had acquired occupancy rights in his holding before he enlisted in the military police in 1304 and that he had made over the land to Hari Rabha to hold on his account, on a verbal understanding that on Chakar's retirement from the military police he would get it back. During his absence Hari Rabha was to pay rent to the lakherajdar. It has been found also by both the Courts that in one instance, at any rate, Hari Rabha paid rent for Chakar's holding to the Rani (Exhibit A). On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have accepted the findings of fact arrived at by the first Court without much consideration of the evidence.

The error that is apparent in the Subordinate Judge's judgment is that he has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on a case which was not that of the plaintiff and was not that of the defendant. So far from its being the case of the defendant, it is absolutely inconsistent with it. The learned Judge has dismissed the suit on a view of Chakar's status which is inconsistent with defendant's own plea, contrary to what Chakar himself claims and which the plaintiff has had no opportunity of contesting.

Under these circumstances we do not think that the present judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge can be supported. We are accordingly compelled to set aside his decree and remand the case to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a rehearing of the appeal. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 10, 14, 15, 22—Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), ss. 2, 3—Primogeniture sanad, applicability of—"Successor," meaning of—Lineal primogeniture, rule as to succession by—Hindu Law—Will, interpretation of—Will executed by talukdar in favour of person who would not have succeeded under the Act, effect of—Absolute estate conferred by Will—Devise, lapse of, by death—Ulterior disposition becoming operative on death of first devisee during lifetime of testator—Transfers made by persons having no title, effect of.

One G. was the owner of a taluka to whom a primogeniture sanad was granted. He was succeeded by his son who died leaving two sons, D. B. and S. B. On the death of D. B., S. B. succeeded to the taluka and in 1895 executed a Will, to the effect that after his death his wife was to succeed to the entire taluka as full proprietor and that upon her death the taluka was to go to his mother D. K. as absolute owner and on her death intestate to his daughter S. K. and her heirs. Adoption was also permitted to the widow and failing her to the mother. The wife of S. B., the last talukdar, died during the lifetime of her husband. On the death of S. B. in 1899 his mother D. K. succeeded to the taluka under the terms of the Will of 1895. She made certain mortgages affecting the villages included in the taluka during her lifetime and died in 1906. After her death S. B.'s daughter S. K. came into possession of the taluka, alleging that her mother D. K. had executed a Will in her favour in 1902, and she also executed certain transfers regarding portions of the taluka property. In 1911 two collaterals of the husband of D. K., viz., S. B. S. and K. S. instituted two suits for recovery of the entire taluka against the daughter S. K., alleging that she took nothing under the Will of 1895 and was not, therefore, entitled to the estates. S. B. S. claimed the whole estate on the ground that he was the nearest male heir according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. K. S. claimed to be the nearest male relative and ignored the rule of lineal primogeniture. The daughter S. K. died during the pendency of the suit and the question was as to what interest D. K. took under the Will and which of the plaintiffs was entitled to succeed. K. S. died during the trial of the case and S. S. and D. S. were brought on the record as his legal representatives. Subsequently D. S. relinquished his rights in favour of S. S., who thereafter remained as the sole plaintiff in the suit brought by K. S.

(8) that the transfers made by D. K. were binding on the reversioners, whereas those made by S. K. were inoperative and of no effect. [p. 485, col. 2.]

Messrs. Muhammad Nasim, Muhammad Wasim, the Hon'ble Mirza Sami Ullah Beg and Babu Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The five appeals which are dealt with in this judgment arise out of two suits brought by rival claimants for the taluka of Mohammadpore in the Bara Banki District. It is not disputed before us that a primogeniture sanad was granted to Thakur Ganga Bakhsh Singh, who was also known as Ganga Singh, after the summary settlement in regard to that estate. He was accordingly entered at No. 51 in list No. 1, and at No. 26 in list No. 3, of the lists prepared under section 8 of Act I of 1869.....lists of which the Court will take judicial notice, and which the Court will regard as conclusive evidence that the persons named therein are such talukdars, under section 10 of the Act. He was, therefore, by the operation of the Act a talukdar, the succession to whose estate was to be regulated by the rule of primogeniture. Thakur Ganga Bakhsh Singh was succeeded by his son Sheo Singh, who died leaving two sons, Dan Bahadur Singh and Sher Bahadur Singh. Dan Bahadur Singh succeeded to the taluka, and was himself succeeded by his brother Sher Bahadur Singh, who died on the 10th of June 1899, leaving him surviving his mother Musammât Dilraj Kuar and a daughter Musammât Sheoraj Kuar. His wife Musammât Harpal Kuar had died in his lifetime as had one of his daughters. After his death mutation was effected in favour of Musammât Dilraj Kuar who executed certain mortgages, hypothecating property comprised in the taluka. Musammât Dilraj Kuar died on the 12th April 1906, and on her death mutation was effected in favour of Musammât Sheoraj Kuar, who was in possession of the taluka at the time the present suit was filed.

Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh instituted his suit on the 8th June 1911, on the allegations that Musammât Dilraj Kuar had come into proprietary possession of the taluka by right of inheritance as a Hindu widow without any power of alienation, and that after her death he, Thakur Sitla Bakhsh, was entitled to succeed according to the rule of lineal primogeniture laid down in the sanad. He alleged that Musammât Sheoraj Kuar was a mere trespasser; and he joined as defendants with her three batches of transferees, some from Musammât Dilraj Kuar and some from Musammât Sheoraj Kuar.

On the 10th June 1911 Kirat Singh brought his suit on the allegation that Sher Bahadur Singh died without making a valid Will, that the eldest nearest male relative was entitled to succeed, that Musammât Dilraj Kuar did succeed to the estate for life, and that on her death Musammât Sheoraj Kuar took unlawful possession of the estate. He attached to his plaint a pedigree which, he claimed, showed him to be as the nearest reversioner of the aforesaid Sher Bahadur Singh. Subsequently each of the rival claimants added the other claimant as a defendant in his suit. Kirat Singh impleaded the transferees from Musammât Dilraj Kuar and Musammât Sheoraj Kuar, but he omitted to sue among the transferees Musammât Bishan Dei and Musammât Prag Dei who were impleaded by Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh.

As the case proceeded, it became apparent to both the parties that Sher Bahadur Singh had executed a Will on the 1st December 1895. On behalf of Sitla Bakhsh Singh, the execution of the Will was admitted, but his plaint was allowed to stand as before. Kirat Singh plaintiff died in the course of the proceedings and his two brothers, Sitla Singh and Debi Singh, were brought on the record in his place. By an application on their behalf their plaint was amended. The words "without making a valid Will" were struck out, and the allegation was added that Sher Bahadur Singh made a Will in favour of his wife and his mother, that his wife dying in his lifetime, his mother became the owner and possessor of the property on his decease, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to the property according to Hindu Law, as also in consequence of the legal effect of the above-mentioned Will, also according to the provisions of Act I of 1869, and the rule of lineal primogeniture. This amendment had the effect of considerably enlarging the scope of the suit, as it was first brought, and the ground upon which Kirat Singh had sued was relegated as a last possible alternative.

On behalf of Musammât Sheoraj Kuar, the main defendant to the suits, it was alleged that Musammât Dilraj Kuar had taken an absolute estate under her son's Will, and that she had herself executed a Will which conferred an absolute estate upon Musammât Sheoraj Kuar, who was, therefore, owner and in possession of the estate. The transferees from Musammât Dilraj Kuar pleaded that she had an absolute estate, and that, if she had only a life-estate, even then the transfers in their favour were good as having been made for legal necessity. The transferees from Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar supported her plea that she had an absolute estate under the Will of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar. It was further argued on their behalf that even if Musammatt Dilraj Kuar only enjoyed a life-estate under her son's Will, even then Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar came in under that Will as a remainderman with an absolute estate. As an alternative, these transferees claimed at least the right to retain possession of certain lands as mortgagees from Musammatt Dilraj Kuar.

The learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the pedigree set up by Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh. He found that Musammatt Dilraj Kuar took an absolute estate under her son's Will, and that as she was a person who would not have succeeded according to the provisions of Act I of 1869 to the estate, had the transferor died intestate without having made any transfer, section 15 of that Act applied. He went on to find, therefore, that the ordinary law must govern the succession, but that by reason of the Crown Grants Act that law must be found to be that set out in the sanad, that the rule of lineal primogeniture, therefore, applied and that Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh was entitled to succeed. He upheld some, but not all, the transfers made in favour of various defendants, and he dismissed the suit of Kirat Singh.

Sital Singh and his brother have appealed against the decree dismissing their suit. They have also appealed against the decree in favour of Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh; while the encumbrancers, who are three parties, have also filed three separate appeals as to the extent of their interest in the disputed property. In these last three appeals cross-objections have been filed by Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh, urging pleas similar to those on which his suit was based.

In the course of suit, Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar died, leaving a husband Gajraj Singh. An application was made by Thakur Sitla Singh and Thakur Debi Singh, in the suit in which they were defendants, on the 23rd April 1912 that her husband Gajraj Singh should be brought on the record in her place. It was opposed by the other rival plaintiff who contended that if Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar had a life-estate, that estate terminated with her, and if she was a trespasser since the death of her mother in 1906, her trespass ended with her death. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to implead Gajraj Singh as her legal representative. It appears that at the time when the suits were instituted, the Mohammadpur Taluka was temporarily under the management of the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, having been attached by reason of arrears of revenue under the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901). On the death of Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar, the taluka continued to be in the management of the Deputy Commissioner until the arrears of Government revenue were satisfied. Subsequently by an order of the Board of Revenue dated the 11th January 1915, to which Gajraj Singh was an unsuccessful party, possession was made over to Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh [Sitla Bux Singh v. Gajraj Singh (1)]. Meanwhile Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh had also obtained in his favour a decree from the Civil Court which is the subject of these appeals. The action of one of the rival plaintiffs in opposing the application to bring Gajraj Singh on the record as that of the other in failing to implead him in his case appears to have been somewhat ill-considered, but that was their lookout. We have in these cases to adjudicate on the rights of the parties, such as are actually before us. So far as the transferees from Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar are concerned, they have no interest in raising such an objection; for their rights in the properties transferred to them can be determined, without the legal representative, if any, of Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar being brought on the record. The other parties have not taken or pressed this objection at the hearing. As pointed out in Orr v. Muthia Chetti (2) and Sarala Sundari Dasi v. Sarada Prosad Sur (3), the possession of a receiver or of the

SITAL SINGH v. SITLA BAKHSH SINGH.

Government under such circumstances can only be regarded as custodia legis or possession held for the rightful owner. Gajraj Singh admittedly never got possession. If it be found that Musammot Sheoraj Kuar was an absolute owner, the plaintiffs would in any case have no right to sue. If, on the other hand, it be found that she held a life estate or was a trespasser, her life estate or trespass ended with her death. The non-joinder of Gajraj Singh is, therefore, of no practical importance in these cases.

Before proceeding, however, to consider the principal matters of contention between the parties to these appeals it will be well to set out clearly the facts which are admitted by the parties before us. It is admitted that Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh of one branch and Kirat Singh, Sital Singh and Debi Singh of another branch are equidistant and would be entitled to share half and half, if the ordinary law applies. It is conceded too that if the law of lineal primogeniture applies Thakur Sitla Bakhsh Singh will be entitled to succeed, to the exclusion of the rest. It is also admitted that Sher Bahadur Singh executed a Will on the 1st December 1895, though the effect of that Will is in dispute. It is admitted further that Musammot Dilraj Kuar is not a person who would have succeeded to the estate according to the provisions of Act I of 1869, if the testator had died intestate without making a transfer. The mother does appear among the persons to whom the estate may descend, under section 22 of the Act as amended by U. P. Act III of 1910 (the Oudh Estates Amendment Act); but it is admitted that the property in dispute vested before that Act came into force. It is admitted that if by Sher Bahadur Singh's Will Musammot Dilraj Kuar took an absolute estate, Musammot Sheoraj Kuar would not be entitled to succeed to her under that Will, and that her position would be that of a trespasser. It is admitted that, according to the ordinary law, which, apart from Act I of 1869, would apply to the family, daughters are excluded from inheritance. Finally, both the claimants to the estate accept such liability to transferees as the learned Subordinate Judge has decreed.

It will be convenient first to come to a definite finding as to the position of Musammot Sheoraj Kuar before we commence to discuss the existence of encumbrances and the rights, if any, of the various encumbrancers.

The Will of Sher Bahadur Singh dated the 1st December 1895 created a devise in favour of his wife Musammot Harpal Kuar, and laid upon her certain instructions. It further provided that on her death intestate the estate should descend to Musammot Dilraj Kuar and on her death intestate to Musammot Sheoraj Kuar and her heirs. Adoption was also permitted to both the widow, and failing her the mother. It is argued that as Musammot Harpal Kuar died in the lifetime of the testator, the Will became inoperative, that in any case the Will did not confer anything more than a succession of life-estates, and that Musammot Dilraj Kuar did not possess an absolute interest, which she could have conveyed to her transferees or to Musammot Sheoraj Kuar.

In his Will, the testator, after reciting that he had a wife, Musammot Harpal Kuar, two daughters, Musammot Sheoraj Kuar and Musammot Raghuraj Kuar, declared: "After me, my wife shall be the full proprietor and possessor of the entire ilaqa left by me, and the whole of my property moveable and immoveable, but it shall not be competent to her to execute any deed of any description in favour of her personal relations. I do by this written instrument authorise her to adopt either of my daughters, or if a son is born to either of them, the daughter's son, or any other boy of my family; and the adopted son aforesaid shall from the date of adoption acquire all those rights, subject to the terms of the deed of adoption (hasb sharayat tabniyatnama), as my own son, had any been in existence, would have acquired on my death." The Will then proceeded to provide for the maintenance of his mother, Musammot Dilraj Kuar, and set out that if a son was born to the testator after the execution of the Will, that son would be the owner of the entire property in accordance with Act I of 1869.

It is obvious from the above provisions that what was given to Musammāt Harpal Kuar was a contingent interest to vest in her after the death of the testator, in case no son was born to the testator meanwhile and remained alive at the time of his death. Musammāt Harpal Kuar did not, however, survive the testator and the devise in her favour consequently lapsed on her death.

But the Will contained an ulterior devise in favour of Musammāt Dilraj Kuar in the following terms: "On life no one can depend, hence I declare also this, that if my wife dies without performing the marriages of my daughters and without making a Will, then my mother, Musammāt Dilraj Kuar, shall be the owner (malik) of the whole of the property left by the deceased (matruka mutwaffia), and to her the terms and conditions of clauses 1, 2, 3 and 4 of this Will shall be applicable. On her dying intestate, both of my daughters shall become owners (malik) of the estate and the property, moveable and immoveable, left by the deceased (matruka mutwaffia); and thereafter issue in due order (alat-tartib) shall get it."

There seems to us no doubt that in the above circumstances the Will must operate in favour of Musammāt Dilraj Kuar. Section 92 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), which has been extended to talukdari estates in Oudh by section 19 of Act I of 1869, provides that if the legatee does not survive the testator the legacy cannot take effect, but shall lapse and form part of the residue of the testator's property, unless it appears by the Will that the testator intended that it should go to some other person. Illustration (d) to this section is at any rate to some extent applicable to the present case. "A sum of money is bequeathed to A for life, and after his death to B. A dies in the lifetime of the testator. B survives the testator. The bequest to B takes effect." There can be no doubt from the resumé of the Will given above that the testator did not contemplate intestacy if his wife should predecease him. Reliance is placed upon the use of the words "matruka mutwaffia" in connection with the ulterior bequests, and it is argued that from those words the Court must take it that Sher Bahadur Singh only contemplated Musammāt Dilraj Kuar succeeding to the property if that property were left by Musammāt Harpal Kuar, on her death; and that, therefore, as the property never vested at all in Musammāt Harpal Kuar, owing to her death in the testator's lifetime, Musammāt Dilraj Kuar cannot succeed. There is evidence to show that Sher Bahadur Singh personally dictated this Will. Its language is inartistic, but as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Parthasarathy Appa Row (4) and Thakur Vasonji Morarji v. Chanda Bibi (5), a testator is very often ignorant of legal phrases proper to express his intentions or of the legal steps necessary to carry them into effect, and a Court would be justified in refusing to allow defects in expression in these matters to prevent the carrying out of the testator's true intentions.

The testator was very evidently anxious to avoid intestacy but it is noteworthy that he did not alter the Will in spite of the death of his wife in his lifetime, doubtless because he knew that there were ulterior dispositions still available to carry out his intentions. The words "matruka mutwaffia" were obviously used to describe and identify the property which, on the supposition that Musammāt Harpal Kuar survived the testator, was to go in the first instance to her, and on her dying intestate, to Musammāt Dilraj Kuar. In Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (6), their Lordships of the Privy Council had to deal with a case in which a bequest was made by a person in favour of his widowed daughter-in-law with an ulterior disposition in favour of her daughters as heirs to her estate, and the conclusion at which their Lordships arrived was that the daughters inherited the estate on the death of the former by virtue of the ulterior disposition made in their favour, and not as heirs of the first legatee who held a life-estate. In Parakkal Arippayil Kader v. Parakkal Arippayil Pakkremmer (7), a case similar to the present one came up for decision; and it was held that the death of the legatee in the lifetime of the testator merely accelerated the ulterior disposition, though the ulterior disposition was described, in the manner described in this case, as a devolution of the estate held by the prior legatee.

Had Musammatt Harpal Kuar survived the testator, the gift over or ulterior disposition in favour of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar would, as pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge, have been treated as void. The authorities dealing with the matter have been discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge at great length, and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. Her death in the lifetime of the testator had the effect of making the ulterior disposition in favour of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar operative, and Musammatt Dilraj Kuar, therefore, became entitled to the estate on the testator's death.

The next point to consider is the nature of the estate acquired by Musammatt Dilraj Kuar under the Will. It is necessary for a consideration of this question that the provisions of the Will should be set out at greater length than we have seen necessary above. Let it be remembered that clauses, 1, 2, 3 and 4 are made applicable to Musammatt Dilraj Kuar by clause 8 of the Will. In clause 1 Sher Bahadur Singh sets out that his wife shall be malik and in possession of the whole of his property moveable and immoveable, the taluka. To this devise there is in this paragraph no qualification whatever; and this is one of the four clauses which are distinctly made applicable to Musammatt Dilraj Kuar in the event of her taking the estate. In paragraph 2 Sher Bahadur Singh says: "it shall be incumbent upon the aforesaid wife to keep up the maintenance (guzara) of my bhawaj (sister-in-law)." This sister-in-law is the widow of the previous talukdar Dan Bahadur Singh, who died without leaving any issue. This clause is also made incumbent upon Musammatt Dilraj Kuar.

Clause 3 provides that the aforesaid legatee is to perform the marriages of both the daughters at proper places according to the custom obtaining in the family, and to mete out the same treatment as it is the duty of parents to do both before and after the marriages. This clause is also made incumbent upon Musammatt Dilraj Kuar. So far it is fairly plain sailing. Clause 4 prescribes: "After me my wife shall be full proprietor and in possession of the entire ilaga left by me and the whole of my property moveable and immoveable; but it shall not be competent to her to execute any deed of any description in favour of her personal relations. I do by this written instrument authorise her to adopt either of my daughters, or, if a son is born to either of them, then the daughter's son, or any other boy of the family; and the adopted son aforesaid shall, from the date of adoption, acquire all those rights, subject to the terms of the deed of adoption, as my own son, had he been in existence, would possess." Clause 6 prescribes that the wife shall maintain the respect and dignity of the family and keep the tenantry contented, while clause 7 indicates that the Will shall have no operation, if a son were born to the testator and be alive at his death. Clause 5 refers to the maintenance of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar in the event of the wife succeeding to the estate and it is evident that this clause would have to be omitted where Musammatt Dilraj Kuar were succeeding. In making clauses 1, 2, 3 and 4 applicable to Musammatt Dilraj Kuar by clause 8, Sher Bahadur Singh says that in the event of his wife dying, without performing the marriages or making a Will, his mother shall be the owner and malik of the whole of the property left by the deceased, and on his mother dying without making a Will (bila wasiyat faul kare), both of his daughters will become malik (owners) of the estate and the property, moveable and immoveable, left by the deceased.

The power to make a Will indicates that Sher Bahadur Singh intended to confer on his wife, had she survived, and also on his mother, if his wife died intestate, an absolute estate. The power to impose any terms on the rights of the adopted son in the deed of adoption also indicates that the ladies could reserve their rights or powers in the estate, if they chose, when making the adoption. Such a reservation would not be illegal [Visalakshi Ammal v. Sivaramien (8)]. The restraint imposed on the ladies against their executing any deed of any description in favour of their personal relations is an indication that the testator recognized that the power of transfer was less likely to be abused by them in favour of strangers than in favour of their personal relations, and he was, therefore, willing to leave them free to dispose of the property bequeathed otherwise, if they chose. A limited restraint of that character can have no other meaning. The use of the words "malik" (owner) in clause 8 and "malik kamil" (full proprietor) in clause 4, which was made applicable to the mother without any restraint except the one restraining transfers in favour of personal relations, is also consistent with the above view. In Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (9) it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the use of the word malik implied absolute ownership, unless there was anything in the context or surrounding circumstances to qualify such meaning. In this case, as in the one which their Lordships were considering, the context and the powers conferred strengthened the presumption that the word was intended to bear its proper technical meaning. In Tikram Singh v. Chet Kunwar (10), where a Will was made by a person in favour of his wife declaring her to be the lawful owner of his property after his death, just as he was, with power to make a bequest in favour of any person she chose, it was held that the testator transferred to his wife the full power of ownership such as he himself possessed, and that the power to execute a Will in the way he himself could, indicated that his widow was to have an absolute estate.

A limited restraint on alienation implies a power to alienate outside the limits of that restraint, and as pointed out by Jarman, such restraint is valid, if it is limited to a particular member or class of persons (Jarman on Wills, Volume 1, page 562, and Majumdar's Hindu Wills, pages 348 and 349).

It is contended on behalf of Sitla Bakhsh Singh that the restraint on the diversion of property by transfer to the personal relations of the legatee, read with the power of adoption given to the legatee, indicated that the testator intended to confer a succession of life-estates, and to prevent his property from going outside the family. But had that been his intention, it is unlikely that he would have confined the restraint on alienation only to the personal relations of the legatee. A power to make a bequest is, moreover, inconsistent with an intention to confer successive life-estates; and so is a power to make an adoption. In the present case, the legatee was not directed by the Will to make an adoption. The testator gave permission to adopt, and at the same time recognized the right of the legatee to impose such terms as she thought fit in the deed of adoption. The decisions in Musammatt Salta v. Kashi Nath (11) and Punchoo Money Dossee v. Troylucko Mohiney Dossee (12), relied on on behalf of Thakur Sital Singh, do not apply, because in those cases no power to devise was granted by the Will. The circumstances in Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (6) and Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (13) were also different. As pointed out in Toolsi Dass Kurmokar v. Madan Gopal Dey (14), an authority to adopt given by a Will does not necessarily imply in every instance that the widow to whom the authority is given has only a life-estate. The intentions of the testator must be gathered from the terms of the Will itself, which may vary in each instance. In the present case there are several indications, apart from the use of the word malik, in the Will, of a desire to confer an absolute estate, untrammelled by any conditions other than this that the legatee was not to execute any deed of any description in favour of her personal relations. We have no hesitation, therefore, in finding that the estate to which Musammāt Dilraj Kuar succeeded under the Will of Sher Bahadur Singh was an absolute estate, subject to the limitation above described, and as held in Tripurari Pal v. Jagat Tarini Dasi (15), the gift over in favour of Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar was null and void.

We have now to consider whether Musammāt Dilraj Kuar executed a Will on the 26th February 1912 in favour of Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar. We have to consider not only whether she actually executed a Will but whether, if she did, she knew and understood the contents and effect of the instrument. She was a pardanashin lady. The document, purporting to be the Will, which is Exhibit No. A2, purports to have been executed and registered on the 26th February 1902. The case, as put for those who found upon this Will, is that Musammāt Dilraj Kuar produced a draft Will which at a personal interview she asked one Ajudhia Prasad Kayastha, a resident of the town, to write out and explain. Ajudhia Prasad, therefore, faired out the Will, explaining the provisions thereof as he went along. Meanwhile some one had gone to fetch the Sub-Registrar, who appeared before the Will had been executed. He took the Will from Ajudhia Prasad and himself read and explained it word by word. The lady then signed the Will, and it was accepted for registration, and duly endorsed. The Will purports to have been attested by Raghubar Dayal and Chandrika Bakhsh Singh, but only Ajudhia Prasad and Raghubar Dayal have been produced. A grievance was made in this Court that Chandrika Bakhsh Singh was summoned for examination several times on behalf of some of the defendants-appellants but he could not be examined on the date last fixed, as he was unwell; and that the Sub-ordinate Judge did not allow further opportunity for summoning him again and getting him examined. On the 5th May 1916 we passed an order directing the Court below to summon Chandrika Bakhsh Singh, and to allow the defendants appellants to produce him; but when Chandrika Bakhsh Singh appeared they refused to examine him. His examination would probably have thrown a flood of light on the circumstances under which the Will and some other documents to which we shall have occasion hereafter to refer, were executed or obtained, as also on the nature of the negotiations which took place in regard to the proposed marriage of Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar with a son of Sheo Ghulam Singh and the reasons which led to the engagement being broken off. The failure of the defendants-appellants to produce him is an indication that his evidence, if he had been examined, would have been unfavourable to them.

The very circumstances attendant upon the supposed execution and registration of the Will are not to our minds by any means free from suspicion. This lady, Thakurain by caste, was the widow of a talukdar, mother of another talukdar, and was herself the absolute owner of the taluka at the time this Will is supposed to have been executed: yet the only persons who could be found to prove its execution by her are her brother's son, Chandrika Bakhsh Singh, and two Kayasthas. These two latter persons admit that, besides relations, Musammāt Dilraj Kuar had about thirty servants. They say that being pardanashin she did not appear before any of these persons, but that she did appear before them. They both pretend to have been long connected with this Estate. Raghubar Dayal purports to have been paid 2 annas a day seventeen years ago to teach Hindi to Sher Bahadur Singh, a gentleman whom, Raghubar Dayal himself says, was at school for seven or eight years at Nawabganj, and who, from the fact that he is alleged to have himself dictated his Will, had evidently received a considerable education in his youth. Ajudhia Prasad professes to have taught Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar Hindi for a few years, and to have been paid 4 annas a day at the time he did so. Now judging from the manner in which servants are employed upon these big estates, it would be most unlikely that these two persons should have been employed at a daily wage in this manner. It was suggested in argument that there are large estate accounts, and that the names of these two persons do not appear therein. If they had been paid by the month, with or without food, some trace of this would have been found in the accounts; and it is for this reason no doubt that they describe connection in the above manner. Ajudhia Prasad also figures as the scribe of two curious documents, Exhibits E-1 and E-2 of Rs. 50,000 and Rs. 10,000 respectively, executed in 1903, of a receipt, Exhibit C-38 of 1909, which is also particularly doubtful, and of another receipt, Exhibit C-40, purporting to be of about the same date as Exhibit C-38. To these we shall have occasion to refer again. It does not appear whence Musammatt Dilraj Kuar could have obtained this draft. If she had it ready with her, and if it were a fact that she called upon Ajudhia Prasad to explain all the details as he faired the document out, it would follow that she had not studied the draft; and that some person had prepared for her a draft Will which she was having faired out without having considered its provisions. It should have been easy to prove how the draft came into her possession, and who wrote it, and from whom that person who wrote it obtained his instructions. The story as told is not at all a likely one, unless there were something underhand going on. The question again arises how the Sub-Registrar came to be sent for at such a time, when there was no document for him to register. Musammatt Dilraj Kuar is supposed to have been very carefully examining the details of the Will as it was being faired out; and from this it would follow that, if the provisions of this Will were not in accordance with her desire, she would not sign it; and this would make it all the more unlikely that the Sub-Registrar should have been sent for before the document was signed at all. A Sub-Registrar would ordinarily be sent for to receive the presentation of an executed document, and to register it. It is, therefore, surprising that he should have taken an inchoate document from the hands of Ajudhia Prasad and have explained it carefully to the lady at all. This premature arrival of the Registering Officer, together with the unexplained appearance in the lady's hand of the draft which she had not understood, indicates very strongly that there was some one behind the scenes, who had produced a draft of a Will which she was to execute and have registered at once. The above are points of suspicion which at once arise before the Will itself even comes to be looked at.

We now proceed to examine the Will itself. The Will commences by noticing that Sher Bahadur Singh talukdar, the son of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar, had executed a Will on the 1st December 1895 in which he had admitted his wife as the first successor, Musammatt Dilraj Kuar as the next malik and qabiz, if his wife died without making a Will, and after her his two daughters Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar and Raghuraj Kuar, in case Musammatt Dilraj Kuar similarly left no Will. It goes on to recite that on the death of the Thakur Sahab mutation was effected in Dilraj Kuar's own favour, and that she took possession subject to the conditions of clauses 1, 2, 3 and 4 of that Will. It refers then to the fact that she has an authority to adopt according to clause 4, and that she is trying heart and soul to comply with clause 3, so that the marriage of Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar may be performed early according to the custom of the family; and so that Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar shall be malik after her as the Thakur Sahab had in his Will desired, when at the same time he authorised Musammatt Dilraj Kuar to adopt Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar's issue. The Will on this point is in the original obscure, and we have preferred to retain that obscurity in this resume. It continues that Sheoraj Kuar is still a minor, and not yet married, and that it is, therefore, Musammatt Dilraj Kuar's duty as regards clause 4 to make a declaration of her final opinion (izhar rai qatai). Therefore she agrees (that is the word used) that she will remain malik and qabiz during her lifetime, and that after her Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar, etc., shall be malik and qabiz according to the second portion of the 8th clause of Sher Bahadur Singh's Will, and according to this present document; and that after her "her eldest male issue, generation after generation, and her husband shall be proprietor and in possession of the taluka; and the property shall remain in the family of the aforesaid daughter's husband. No one else shall have any rights of any kind in the property left by him, because according to Act I of 1869 *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar has the right to be the legal heir and Thakur Sher Bahadur Singh has in his Will appointed her heir." The document goes on to prescribe that if *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar be a minor at the time of Thakur Dilraj Kuar's death, the Government shall take the Estate under its protection, and the Deputy Commissioner shall select a guardian; if she be not married, he shall have to arrange for her marriage. This is an unusual document. It teems with legal expressions, all of which Ajudhia Prasad states that he explained to the lady, but many of which he, when pressed to do so, was unable to explain himself. References to Thakur Sher Bahadur Singh's Will, with its date, and with the numbers of the clauses, look large in this document and they were, it seems to us, evidently inserted in order to catch the attention of *Musamm*at Dilraj Kuar, and to make her imagine that she was simply carrying out her son's wishes. The early portions of the document seem to suggest that she was about to make an adoption, though she does not do so; and the declarations that along with *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar her husband shall be the heir and that the property shall ever remain in that husband's family, are conveniently sandwiched in between expressions which will attract the lady's attention, such as a reference to the second portion of clause 8 of the Will dated 1st December 1895, executed by Sher Bahadur Singh deceased, and a reference to Act I of 1869 under which *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar is regarded as having a right to be the legal heir. Ajudhia Prasad's scribing certain sale-deeds shows that he is a person who has some measure of understanding as to how documents are to be drafted. Chandrika Bakhsh Singh is the person who was interested in the management of the estate since the death of Sher Bahadur Singh, the person who had interested himself in the money transactions between Dilraj Kuar and Sheo Ghulam Singh and was himself a relation of the lady; and it seems unlikely, therefore, that such a confused document as this Will could have been prepared by one under the superintendence of the other, unless there were some concealed motives.

SITAL SINGH v. SITLA BAKHSH SINGH.

In considering the provisions of this so-called Will, it is impossible not to consider also the facts of certain money-lending transactions, and also the subsequent history of *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar's marriage relations. Thakur Sher Bahadur Singh had borrowed certain moneys from Thakur Mahabir Singh who had left a widow named *Musamm*at Motimala Kuar. *Musamm*at Motimala Kuar had three daughters, *Musamm*at Sarjudei, *Musamm*at Bishundei and *Musamm*at Pragdei. *Musamm*at Sarjudei was married to Sheo Dayal Singh, son of Sheo Ghulam Singh, who was himself a son of Sheodat Singh. *Musamm*at Bishundei was married to Sheopal Singh, brother of Sheo Dayal Singh. These two brothers, therefore, married two sisters, daughters of *Musamm*at Motimala Kuar, to whom the estate of Sher Bahadur Singh was indebted. Sheo Ghulam Singh had a third son Durga Bakhsh Singh. It is alleged that negotiations were in progress to marry *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar to this Durga Bakhsh Singh. Sher Bahadur Singh's transactions with Thakur Mahabir Singh had taken place in 1893 (Exhibit F-1), in 1898 (Exhibit F-2) and again in 1898 (Exhibit F-5). Negotiations for *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar's marriage were suddenly broken off in June or July 1904. The Will under discussion was registered in 1902. It is argued that Sheo Ghulam Singh had been approached with reference to this marriage as early as 1902 and that the present Will was cunningly devised at his instigation to ensure his son's position after marriage. There is no evidence to show when the negotiations about the marriage of *Musamm*at Sheoraj Kuar with the third son of Sheo Ghulam Singh were started, but they were probably started early enough, that, is soon after the death of Sher Bahadur Singh; because *Musamm*at Dilraj Kuar was an old lady, and she was presumably anxious to see that her granddaughter's marriage was arranged in her lifetime. Now Sher Bahadur Singh was heavily indebted. In 1903 two mortgage-deeds were executed on behalf of *Musamm*at Dilraj Kuar in favour of the two sons and one grandson of Sheo Ghulam Singh, Exhibit E-1 for Rs. 50,000 dated the 1st April 1903, and Exhibit E-2 for Rs. 10,000 dated the 2nd April 1903. These were written on succeeding days, and by Ajudhia Prasad. The consideration for this second document was Rs. 10,000 to be taken by the mortgagees towards the expenses of the marriage of Musammât Sheoraj Kuar to Durga Bakhsh Singh, and Rs. 10,000 out of the first document was also to be devoted to that purpose, Rs. 40,000 being borrowed to pay up debts of Sher Bahadur Singh. At the time of registration, Rs. 15,000 was admitted to have been already received, although no receipt was produced; and the balance was supposed to have been paid to Musammât Dilraj Kuar at the time of registration. Debts to an aggregate total of Rs. 28,271-2-3 were paid; and either receipts have been produced, or evidence has been led, showing that payment was duly certified to the Courts in the cases where a decree had been obtained, but in all these cases, the payments were shown as made through the instrumentality of Sheodat Singh, father of Sheo Ghulam Singh, and not through Musammât Dilraj Kuar, to whom the money was supposed to have been paid. Sheo Dayal Singh and Sheopal Singh, the husbands of the two daughters of Musammât Motimala Kuar, both died. When they died is not quite clear; but it is said that the marriage negotiations were broken off, because these two young men having died, Musammât Dilraj Kuar came to the conclusion that this was an unlucky family. Still more so would this have been apparent to Musammât Motimala Kuar, whose two daughters had become widows, through the death of these two young men. But we find that Durga Bakhsh Singh, who was supposed to have been rejected as unlucky by Musammât Dilraj Kuar, was then married to Musammât Pragdei, the sister of the two unfortunate widows. We are inclined to believe that there is something suspicious in the whole tale, and that the real reason for breaking off the connection with Sheo Ghulam Singh's family has been carefully concealed. The result of the rupture was at once apparent. In June 1904 Musammât Dilraj Kuar, losing the support of Sheo Ghulam Singh, was pressed for payment by Musammât Motimala Kuar's family; and documents were executed in the name of the three ladies. Musammât Sarjudei of the three is now dead and is represented by Harpal Singh, her son, who is, it will be remembered, also the grandson of Sheo Ghulam Singh. The first transaction on this occasion was a deed for Rs. 40,000 (Exhibit F-3 dated 8th June 1904). By this deed the three documents Exhibits F-1, F-2, and F-5 were paid off, and Rs. 10,000 were supposed to have been left to pay Sheo Ghulam Singh's descendants, the mortgagees in Exhibits E-1 and E-2. On the same date a second document Exhibit F-4 was executed in favour of the same three ladies for Rs. 6,000 without interest, and all was left to pay the above mortgagees. The reasons for these payments are not stated in the documents. This transaction was followed by a mortgage-deed (Exhibit E-38), dated the 5th July 1904, in favour of Sheo Ghulam Singh's descendants, the mortgagees of Exhibit E-1 and E-2. According to this document the liability to them under the two documents Exhibit E-1 and E-2 had amounted with interest to Rs. 63,375. It is noted that of the money borrowed under these two documents Rs. 27,375 had not been spent, and were returned to the mortgagees; that Rs. 16,000 were to be repaid by Musammât Sarjudei, etc. (see Exhibits E-3 and F-4); and that the balance of Rs. 20,000 was the sum for which this bond was executed. It is a suspicious fact that two documents Exhibits E-1 and E-2 were executed on succeeding days, when one document would apparently have sufficed. And that suspicion is very materially enhanced when we find two documents, Exhibits F-3 and F-4, drawn up in dealing with the representatives of Mahabir Singh. The handing back of the unspent balance is clearly a pretence, when we remember that although the money is said to have been paid to Musammât Dilraj Kuar when Exhibit E-1 and Exhibit E-2 were registered, such debts, as were paid off, were paid off through Sheodat Singh, in whose custody that money had evidently remained. Evidently some serious rupture occurred that led Sheo Ghulam Singh to press for immediate payment of the documents Exhibits E-1 and E-2. It appears to us that, having been satisfied that his son's prospects were good after the execution of this Will in 1902, Sheo Ghulam Singh then arranged in a friendly way to take over the liabilities of the estate by having mortgages executed in favour of his immediate descendants, except the debts due on Thakur Mahabir Singh's mortgages, which were already secured to his daughters-in-law, and about which it was not necessary for him, therefore, to trouble. He paid off those debts, and secured in the mortgage bonds ample provision in cash for himself, as a return for the proposed marriage of his son with Sheoraj Kuar. When the breach occurred, he would have nothing more to do with the Estate and demanded back at once the money which he had paid in clearing the Estate debts. At the time when this was done, fictitious transactions took place. He was paid off: but the opportunity was taken to deceive the lady into executing Exhibit E-38 for Rs. 20,000 when, if anything, only a nominal sum was due, and Exhibit F-3, for Rs. 16,000 too much, and Exhibit F-4 for a fictitious sum of Rs. 6,000. It is noteworthy that it was arranged that if interest were not paid the mortgagees were, under Exhibit E-38, to be entitled to claim possession: Umrao Singh says that Musammatt Dilraj Kuar would not give up possession because so much was mortgaged: and they evidently did not dare to insist lest her eyes be opened: but we find them taking possession, after her death, in 1907. Chandrika Bakhsh Singh had either attested or was present at the time of the execution of most of these documents; and it is possible that had Chandrika Bakhsh Singh been put forward by any party to the case at an early stage, his evidence or a searching cross-examination might have revealed the true nature of many of these transactions, which at present are enveloped either in mystery or suspicion. As it is the impression left by a close study of these transactions and the evidence is that Musammatt Dilraj Kuar was being exploited by Sheo Ghulam Singh and those around her to further their own interests, and that the Will was only the first of a series of transactions worked out between Sheo Ghulam Singh and Chandrika Bakhsh Singh, advantage being taken by them of the intense anxiety of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar to secure an early and satisfactory marriage for her one grand-daughter, Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar. Sher Bahadur Singh had not been dead long, and there was otherwise no occasion why Musammatt Dilraj Kuar should have executed this Will at this particular time. It does not seem to us an unduly strained presumption that, recognising her anxiety, which undoubtedly existed, to see her grand-daughter successfully married, Sheo Ghulam Singh should have said, "I will not enter into negotiations for the marriage of my son to Sheoraj Kuar, unless you make definite disposition of the property, so that he shall be safeguarded."

Looking at it in this way, the so called Will may be taken as the first stage in the marriage arrangements. A draft was then prepared so cleverly that Musammatt Dilraj Kuar should seem to be simply echoing her son's desire. The Will is written in such confused language that we should in any case find it hard to believe that Musammatt Dilraj Kuar could possibly have understood what it all meant or realise that it did not even represent accurately what Sher Bahadur Singh had directed in his Will. Certain prominent phrases therein would attract her attention, and that no doubt is what the framers of the draft had in their mind.

We have examined with care the evidence of Ajudhia Prasad and of Raghubar Dayal, the second Kayastha who is supposed to have identified the lady at the time of registration. There are many discrepancies where discrepancies might not have been expected, and we cannot but think it extremely doubtful whether Ajudhia Prasad and Raghubar Dayal at any rate witnessed any signature of Dilraj Kuar upon this document. In discussing the monetary transactions which took place in 1909 between Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar and certain defendants appellants, we shall show that Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar was also a puppet in the hands of persons who were intent on lining their own pockets at the expense of the estate. This very Ajudhia Prasad Kayastha wrote out two receipts, which seem to us to betray the cloven hoof, in 1909. This continued exploitation of the unfortunate ladies is corroborative to our minds of the mala fides which we find existed in respect of this Will of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar as far back as 1902.

We are not prepared to say that the so-called Will of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar was a forgery. In fact the probabilities are that some kind of document or Will was taken from her. Upon this it is not necessary for us to pronounce a definite opinion, as we are satisfied for the above reasons that if the mechanical execution of the document by Musammatt Dilraj Kuar be taken as proved, she certainly did not comprehend the nature of the document which she was signing.

We now proceed to consider the question of succession to the absolute estate held by Musammatt Dilraj Kuar under the Will of Sher Bahadur Singh. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the succession was governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture laid down in the sanad. Section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), as it stood, before the U. P. Amending Act III of 1910 was brought into force, declared that if any talukdar or grantee shall heretofore have transferred or bequeathed, or if any talukdar or grantee or his heir or legatee shall hereafter transfer or bequeath to any person, not being a talukdar or grantee, the whole or any portion of his estate, and such person would not have succeeded according to the provisions of this Act to the estate or to a portion thereof, if the transferor or testator had died without having made the transfer and intestate, the transfer of and succession to the property, so transferred or bequeathed, shall be regulated by the rules, which would have governed the transfer of and succession to such property, if the transferee or legatee had bought the same from a person not being a talukdar or grantee. Musammatt Dilraj Kuar was not a person who, but for the Will, would have succeeded to the estate of Sher Bahadur Singh either under the sanad or under section 22 of Act I of 1869 before it was amended, as the male paternal kinsmen of Sher Bahadur Singh, who would have been entitled to step in under the rule of primogeniture, were alive. The succession to her in the present instance will, therefore, be regulated by the rules which would have governed the succession to such property, if the legatee had bought the same from a person not being a talukdar or a grantee. The result of the Will, in other words, to put it shortly, is to take the case, for the purposes of transfer or of succession to the property bequeathed, out of the Act. The succession, being regulated as if such property had been acquired from a person not being a talukdar or grantee, is regulated by the ordinary provisions of Hindu Law. On the death of Musammatt Dilraj Kuar, therefore, this property, in which she had an absolute estate, devolved on her husband's heirs in order of their succession to him, she having left no daughter, no son, and no son's son. It is strenuously argued that in considering the ordinary law of succession in cases governed by section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act, reference must be made to the sanad; and this argument is sought to be supported by a reference to the decision of their Lordships in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (16). That case, however, has no application whatever to the circumstances of the present case. In that case their Lordships were discussing section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, which dealing with an intestacy provides in paragraph 11 "or in default of any such agnate, then to such person as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law, to which persons of the religion and tribe of such talukdar or grantee are subject." Where this section has to be applied in a list III or list V case, their Lordships have ruled that by reason of the sanad read with section 8 of Act I of 1869 lineal primogeniture must be taken to be a part of the ordinary law of such talukdar or grantee.

But a case of succession to which section 22, sub-section 11, applies is a case of succession within the Act, a case of succession to the talukdar or grantee. The present case, as we said before, is a case to which section 15 applies, a case which for the purposes of succession is outside the Act, a case which has to be considered, as if the transferor was not a talukdar or grantee.

It is again argued that although the case may be taken outside the Act, yet the effect of the sanad still remains, because of the existence of the Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), and we are referred to certain remarks of their Lordships in Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (17), where they observed: "Whatever force such a contention might otherwise have had appears to their Lordships to be removed by the Act to which their attention was called, Act XV of 1895 (The Crown Grants Act)." It is said that no legislative enactment can prevent the operation of the sanad in view of section 3 of that Act. But section 3 of Act XV of 1895 is now controlled by the explanation appended and alterations made in section 3 of Act I of 1869 by U. P. Act III of 1901, which have been given retrospective operation.

The retrospective enforcement of section 3, as amended, would in this case have the effect not of divesting any estate but of keeping it where it was; for, as laid down in the explanation, the conditions of the sanad relating to succession would be inapplicable in so far as they may be inconsistent with section 15 of the Act, which applies in this case. The amendment of the Act brings the language of the section into line with the interpretation put upon it in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (18) before the Act was amended. The Crown Grants Act was not passed with any idea of superseding or in any way qualifying the provisions of Act I of 1869 or of any particular Act; nor of creating or reviving any particular sanad. It is not an Act having application only to the Province of Oudh, but it is an Imperial Act, extending to the whole of British India. It was enacted to ensure that no question could arise as to the right of the Government, by an executive order, to create a line of succession contrary to the ordinary law. A similar point was raised before a Bench of this Court consisting of Chamier and Wells, A. J. Cs. in Musammatt Parbat Kuar v. Ram Chandrapal Kuar (19), where the point appeared so clear and simple to the learned Judicial Commissioners that an argument as to the effect of section 3 of the Act I of 1869 was simply brushed aside with the remarks: "Upon this we think it is sufficient to say that it is quite clear from sections 2 and 3 of the Crown Grants Act read together that the Act has no such effect." Finding that the succession to Musammatt Dilraj

Kuar is in her husband's heirs, and accepting the fact that section 5 of Act I of 1869 applies, the learned Subordinate Judge disregarded the effect of the amendment of section 3 and relied on the sanad, thinking that the Crown Grants Act had revived it, and proceeded to apply the rule of primogeniture, by holding that the word "successors" in the sanad included legatees.

Act I of 1869 was enacted, as its preamble shows, to remove doubts as to the nature of the rights of the talukdars and others in their estates, and as to the course of succession thereto, and from the time this Act came into force, the nature of those rights, and the course of succession thereto, are provided for and regulated entirely by section 8 and the other sections of the Act.

The sanad might be of some value in the case of an estate which never came under the Act at all, such as the Mahewa case, to which we have just referred, Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (17), or in a case under list III or list V where a reference is to be had to section 22 (11) to discover the heir, as was the case in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (16); but where a case is governed by the provisions of the Act, that is either by section 14 or section 15 of the Act, the provisions of the Act will supersede the sanad, if the sanad is inconsistent with them, by reason of the amendment made to section 3 of the Act. In a case governed by section 15, the ordinary Hindu Law would, therefore, apply and govern the succession to the estate of a Hindu transferee or legatee.

But even if the learned Subordinate Judge had been right in referring to the sanad (and the parties are agreed, though no sanad is forthcoming, that Thakur Ganga Bakhsh Singh's sanad must have been in the ordinary known form of primogeniture sanad, as shown at page 386 of Sykes' Compendium of Talukdari Law), he was not right in extending its operation to legatees. He has not given adequate weight to the interposition of the word but between the first and second clauses of the second paragraph. There can be no doubt that what was created by the sanad was something like an estate in the nature of an entail with a power superadded in the owner to break the entail, or, what might otherwise be described, as an absolute estate or an estate in fee simple with a rule of succession superadded to govern its devolution in case of intestacy.

The owner could break the entail either by a transfer inter vivos or by a Will; and as the history and the circumstances under which the original sanads were withdrawn and fresh sanads containing the rule of primogeniture granted, set out at length in Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Bibi Ummatul Fatima (20), shows, the intention of those who were responsible for framing the sanads and making the grants was that the rule of succession laid down in the sanad was to apply, if the owner had not disposed of the property in his lifetime by transfer or bequest. The words "succeeded," "successor" or "succession" occur in the preamble to Act I of 1869 and in sections 8, 14, 15, 21, 22, 23, 30 and 31 of the Act, which was drafted shortly after the sanads were granted. They are everywhere used to denote intestate succession; and that was also the meaning in which those words were used in the correspondence which passed between the Government of India and the Local Government at or about the time when the sanads were granted.

The learned Counsel who appears for Thakur Sital Singh contends that the word "successor" means in the sanads any person designated by devise as the successor to the whole or unalienated residue of the estate, and not a legatee not so designated; but in an ordinary alienable estate or an estate in fee simple, devolution of which is governed in the case of intestacy by Statute or personal law, there can be no such thing as designation of a successor, unless the successor is a legatee. We are not dealing here with Sovereign state or a principality, and the distinction, pointed out, would, in case no legatee is designated a successor, create practical difficulties of a serious kind. If a talukdar, for instance, for some perverse purpose of his own, makes a Will of the whole or part of an estate in favour of his sweeper, could it have been intended that the rule of lineal primogeniture would be the rule of succession in regard to that property in that sweeper's family? Yet this is the effect of the interpretation which the learned Subordinate Judge has placed on the sanad. Neither party is prepared to endorse it. "Successors" in a list III estate can only mean the procession of single male heirs; and, as their Lordships said in Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh (21), "if the prescribed line of succession is broken by a transfer or bequest of the entailed estate to a person outside the prescribed line, it seems not unreasonable that the father of the entail, such as it is, should no longer apply to the estate."

Our finding, therefore, is that the estate vested, upon the death of Musammam Dilraj Kuar, half upon the branch represented by Sitla Bakhsh Singh, and half upon the branch represented by Sital Singh and Debi Singh. Sital Singh and Debi Singh were originally admitted on the record as the legal representatives of Kirat Singh, but having been brought on the record, they had a right to protect their personal interests both as plaintiffs in the one suit, and as defendants in the other, under Order II, rule 5, read with section 11, explanation IV of the Code of Civil Procedure, irrespective of any rights which they inherited from Kirat Singh. The ground of lineal primogeniture, originally set up by Kirat Singh, has been given up in this Court by his legal representatives; and Mr. Jackson, who had argued the case for Sital Singh, has explicitly confined himself to the rights claimed by him and Debi Singh in their personal capacity, and also as the legal representatives of Kirat Singh under the Hindu Law. Virtually from the time of their arrival on the scene, they have been contending for more than they could have obtained technically as the legal representatives of Kirat Singh, and the opposite parties have all along been opposing their contentions. A formal amendment of the plaint as to the capacities in which the right was claimed was, therefore, allowed, to admit of a complete adjudication of the matters in controversy in these suits, and obviate further litigation in regard to the matter.

In the memorandum of appeal, filed in this Court, Sital Singh claims half the estate in his own right and as the legal representative of Kirat Singh. It appears that Debi Singh has transferred or relinquished his rights in favour of Sital Singh during the pendency of the suit under a registered deed dated the 25th February 1913, of which intimation was given by him to the Court below on the 28th February 1913. Sital Singh has, therefore, become entitled to a half share.

All that now remains is to deal with the position of various transferees from Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar and Musammāt Dilraj Kuar.

The transferees from Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar are defendants Nos. 2 to 4, the appellants in Appeal Nos. 25 of 1913. On their behalf is propounded a sale-deed for Rs. 19,200 (Exhibit C-34) dated the 28th January 1909. Execution of this sale-deed is admitted by the plaintiffs in both suits; but it is urged that, Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar being a trespasser, she had no power to execute this sale-deed, and that any payments made thereunder by the vendees were mere payments as volunteers, and could not be allowed to bind the estate. The details of the consideration of this sale-deed are written as follows:—

Rs. 200 preliminary expenses for execution, registration, etc.,

Rs. 8,000 to discharge a mortgage executed by Musammāt Dilraj Kuar on the 8th January 1901 in favour of the same vendees ;

Rs. 1,200 advance profits in connection with the said mortgage; and

Rs. 9,800, part to be utilized in discharging the decree of one Asharfi Lal and the rest to be held at the disposal of Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar.

The propriety of the mortgage of Musammāt Dilraj Kuar dated the 8th January 1901 (Exhibit C-3) is admitted by the plaintiffs. Musammāt Dilraj Kuar mortgaged with possession a 4 annas share in village Mohsandi and a field No. 387/2 in village Raipur for Rs. 8,000 in favour of these vendees, defendants Nos. 2 to 4, with a condition that they should remain in possession, taking profits in lieu of interest, and that their possession should not be disturbed for twelve years. This mortgage-deed for Rs. 8,000 had been executed in great measure to discharge a prior mortgage executed by Sher Bahadur Singh in favour of Shiam Sunder and Awadh Behari in 1893 (Exhibit C-1). The lower Court has found that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are entitled to remain in possession as mortgagees of 4-annas in village Mohsandi and of the field in village Raipur, until they are redeemed on payment of Rs. 8,000. This, as we have said, is accepted by the plaintiffs; and we have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge that his finding in this matter is correct. It is hardly necessary to quote authorities for the proposition that a mere trespasser has no power to execute sales of land in his possession as trespasser; and that payments made by his transferees, they having no interest to protect, cannot be held binding upon the rightful owner. But at the same time we deem it advisable to make some reference to the details of this sale-deed, because we consider, as we have mentioned in an earlier portion of this judgment, that they go to show that the weakness of this pardanashin lady was being exploited in the interest of some scheming person, and thus go to justify our finding as to the circumstances under which the so-called Will of Musammāt Dilraj Kuar came to be executed. We may consider first Rs. 9,800, which was to be devoted to paying Asharfi Lal's decree, the balance to be held at the disposal of Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar. Now Sher Bahadur Singh had executed a bond in favour of Asharfi Lal on the 1st October 1898 for Rs. 2,000 (Exhibit C-30). Asharfi Lal obtained a simple money decree for no less than Rs. 9,656-2-0 on this bond against Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar on 17th November 1908 (Exhibit C-35). A suspicious alacrity to discharge this decree is betrayed. This sale-deed was executed on 28th January 1909. Rs. 9,800 was left, as if the amount to be paid was uncertain. On the 27th May 1909 an application was made to the Court by Asharfi Lal to certify the receipt of Rs. 8,750, which was Rs. 1,000 less than the amount then due with interest (Exhibit C-36). The Court certified payment on that same day (Exhibit C-37). It is said that Rs. 1,000 too little were paid to him as that sum was required by Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar to pay an urgent revenue demand. Asharfi Lal being examined swore that he had an interview with Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar in May, who asked him to receive Rs. 1,000 less at that time because she had had to pay a Government demand. Exhibit C. 39, tahsil dakhila, is filed which shows that on the 12th July 1909 Rs. 1,523-10-5 were paid for revenue by Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar. This is nearly two months after the time when according to Asharfi Lal she had pleaded with him, on the ground that she had had to pay revenue. This money to pay Asharfi Lal had been left with the vendee; and if it became necessary for a portion of this sum to be diverted to pay revenue, the vendee could have paid it; but we find a receipt Exhibit C-38 dated the 10th July 1909 in the handwriting of Ajudhia Prasad, one of the gentlemen mixed up in the transaction of Musammāt Dilraj Kuars's so-called Will in 1902, for Rs. 1,000 paid to Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar. There would remain, therefore, Rs. 50 to account for; and for this receipt Exhibit C-40 was produced for Rs. 50, supposed to have been executed by Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar on the 17th July 1909; and this also is in the handwriting of the same gentleman. To prove Exhibit C-38 two persons Ram Sarup and Gajadhar were put forward. Their evidence the lower Court has discredited, and, in our opinion, rightly so. Nor do we believe the evidence of Parshan Singh vendee himself, or of Angad Singh. The latter pretends that he saw the money paid to Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar at a time when Tahsil peons were seated waiting for a revenue demand; but even if that was so, it is possible that the payment may have been made out of the profits of the Estate. The property in the possession of Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar yielded her, according to the rent roll of 1316 Fasli, a net profit of about Rs. 14,808 per annum. If Asharfi Lal had agreed to the revenue being paid out of the money left for the satisfactions of his decree, there is no reason why the payment should have been delayed so long. In our opinion these two receipts Exhibit C-38 and Exhibit C 40, if they do represent actual transactions, represent transactions for which no legal necessity is established. The item of Rs. 1,200 representing four years' advance profits is also an unfair item. The mortgagees were by this sale-deed purporting to acquire the equity of redemption. Eight years had passed since the mortgage. In the mortgage-deed, it was arranged that the mortgage should not be redeemed for twelve years. The mortgagees put the annual net profits at Rs. 300, therefore, it was said they take Rs. 1,200 for the profits of the four years for which the mortgage had still to run. Even if it be taken that by remaining for four years longer in possession as mortgagees, they might have made Rs. 1,200 profits, then the mortgagees were themselves liable to pay the same, because they had purchased the equity of redemption; if as purchasers, they redeemed the mortgage four years earlier, they did so in their own interest. In our opinion, the sale effected by Musammāt Sheoraj Kuar in favour of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 is not binding on the heirs of Musammāt Dilraj Kuar, and the payments made by the vendees, other than what was credited in satisfaction of their prior mortgage, were voluntary and did not bind the estate. We agree, therefore, with the learned Subordinate Judge that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, appellants in Appeal No. 125, are entitled to remain in possession as mortgagees of 4-annas of mauza Mohsandi and the field in Raipur under the mortgage-deed executed by Musammāt Dilraj Kuar on the 8th January 1901 until they are redeemed in the ordinary course.

Musammāt Dilraj Kuar was a parlanashin woman, and it is not at all proved that she had any access to any legal advice or to any advice except that of Chandrika Bakhsh Singh, her brother's son. We have already referred to the transactions Exhibit F-3 and Exhibit F-4, which purport to be loans from the daughters of Musammāt Motimala Kuar, now represented by defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7, appellants in appeal No. 129 of 1914, taken to discharge prior encumbrances, Exhibits F-1, F-2, and F-5, the balance of Rs. 10,000 of Exhibit F-3, and the whole of Rs. 6,000 of Exhibit F-4 to be paid to Sheo Ghulam Singh's relations, the mortgagees under Exhibits E-1 and E-2. It appears from the evidence that both Sheo Ghulam Singh and Musammatt Motimala Kuar had extensive account books. But all are suppressed and it is sought to prove these transactions by oral evidence such as the statements of Sheo Charan and Darshan, which are untrustworthy. We agree with the lower Court that Rs. 16,000 must be taken as purely fictitious, and that, therefore, no rights arise out of Exhibit F-4. Exhibit F-3 we agree in upholding to the extent of Rs. 30,000 which is accepted by the plaintiffs in both the suits. The actual possession, therefore, of village Umri can be obtained by the plaintiffs by a formal redemption on payment of the mortgage-money found to be due.

There remains to consider the mortgage bond for Rs. 20,000 (Exhibit E-38), which Musammatt Dilraj Kuar is said to have executed in favour of Sheo Ghulam Singh on the 5th July 1904. To this also we have above referred in some detail. This sum is supposed to represent the balance due under Exhibit E-1 and Exhibit E-2 after deduction of Rs. 16,000 which were to be received from the mortgagees of Exhibit F-3 and Exhibit F-4 and after refund of Rs. 27,375 by Musammatt Dilraj Kuar. We have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge that the account which is supposed to have been made up when this bond was executed is an entire fiction; Musammatt Dilraj Kuar could not have understood, if mechanical execution be taken as proved, the arithmetical intricacies on which this document was based. The oral evidence is of a most unsatisfactory nature. We have been taken through it at great length and we have considered the elaborate comments for and against its reliability which have been pressed upon us; and we agree that the learned Subordinate Judge has rated it as highly as it deserved. The direct evidence, e. g., to prove the execution of Exhibit E-1 and Exhibit E-2 consists of the statements of a pajari, a barber and a servant Ganesh, who drew Rs. 2 a month and his food from the Estate.

It is important to notice, in respect of the transactions evidenced by Exhibit E-1 and Exhibit E-2, that these two documents are simple and not usufructuary mortgages.

The dealings with Parshan Singh etc., and with Thakur Mahabir Singh had been by usufructuary mortgages. Yet only simple mortgages were executed for so large a sum as Rs. 60,000. Umrao Singh says, Musammatt Dilraj Kuar would not consent to a transfer of possession, as so much property was being mortgaged. It seems to us quite evident that the real enormity of the transaction was being concealed from Musammatt Dilraj Kuar and that the perpetrators were careful not to raise the lady's suspicions by suggesting a transfer of the four villages hypothecated. But soon after her death, the mortgagee under Exhibit E-38 obtained possession against the unfortunate Musammatt Sheoraj Kuar, on the ground that interest was unpaid. We do not find it proved that any payments were made out of Exhibit E-1 and Exhibit E-2, save and except Rs. 28,271-2-3, the payment of which is admitted by the plaintiffs. That, and no more, is all that Musammatt Dilraj Kuar was liable to pay under Exhibit E-1 and Exhibit E-2. According to Exhibit E-38, she did re-pay Rs. 27,375. This is a curious sum. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that Rs. 896-2-3 that is to say the balance between Rs. 28,271-2-3 and Rs. 27,375, remains to be adjusted, and for this he would refer defendants Nos. 5, 8 and 9 to a separate suit. The plaintiffs have accepted this position; but there are certain points which we think call for remark. It is most probable that Rs. 27,375 represents the actual expenditure. The mortgagees discharged a large number of debts, and it is probable that in some instances they came to terms with some of the creditors. Again they were put in possession of property, the profits of which were to represent interest on Rs. 50,000 whereas we are finding that the outside figure spent was Rs. 28,271-2-3. And yet again if there remains Rs. 896-2-3 to be adjusted, they have been in possession since the 5th July 1904 in lieu of a debt of Rs. 896-2-3 only, and this may have been more than satisfied out of the usufruct. And this is made the more profitable when we consider the amount of mesne profits which the learned Subordinate Judge has decreed. What the learned Subordinate Judge has found, and the plaintiffs have accepted, is not that a sum of Rs. 896 remains to be paid, but that it remains to be adjusted. We have very little doubt considering all the circumstances, that no payments remain to be made, and we do not, therefore, propose, even if we assume that Musammāt Dilraj Kuar understood or realized the effect of the instrument, to interfere with the equitably just decision of the learned Subordinate Judge that defendants Nos. 5, 8 and 9 cannot be allowed, for the reason that the accounts have not been adjusted, to keep the plaintiffs out of possession. We have found that the preparation of Exhibit E-38, under which these defendants have professed to hold, did not represent a clear or an honest transaction, the amount remaining over in July 1904 for adjustment being no more than Rs. 896-2-3, against which the considerable profits realized, which were intended for the payment of the interest of a much larger but fictitious sum, were to be set off. The learned Subordinate Judge did quite right to adjudge mesne profits against them. No arguments have been addressed to us on the question of the measure of profits, though there is a ground of appeal to that effect. The sum awarded by the lower Court appears to us to be proper, but that sum under our finding will be recoverable by Sitla Bakhsh Singh and Sital Singh in equal shares.

On the above findings we allow the Appeals Nos. 126 and 127 of 1913 in part; we dismiss Appeals Nos. 125, 128 and 129 of 1913; and varying the decrees of the Court below, decree actual proprietary possession of one half of the entire property in dispute and a half share in the mesne profits decreed by the Court below in favour of Sital Singh; the claim of Sitla Bakhsh Singh being to that extent dismissed. The possession over the village Umri and the 4-annas share in Mohsandi and the field in village Raipur will be subject to the mortgagee rights of defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 7 and defendants Nos. 2 to 4 respectively as above indicated. The decrees for possession can be executed against Sitla Bakhsh Singh who is admittedly in possession of the entire property. The appellants in Appeals Nos. 145 and 127 will get their proportionate costs of both the Courts from Sitla Bakhsh Singh. The latter will get his proportionate costs in the said appeal also of both Courts from the said appellants, other respondents bearing their own costs. The other three appeals are dismissed with costs; one set of costs is allowed, recoverable half by Sital Singh and half by Sitla Bakhsh Singh from the appellants in those appeals, the other respondents bearing their own costs. We disallow the cross-objections in appeals Nos. 125, 128 and 129 filed by Sitla Bakhsh Singh; we make no order as to costs thereof.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 4 (12), 70 (3) (j)—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit by water-carrier to recover dues—Village cess.

Village cesses such as haq buha, poochh baki, etc., are cesses leviable by the proprietors of a village from non-proprietary residents or kammis and are dues leviable irrespective of any personal service rendered by them. [p. 488, col. 1.]

A suit by a water-carrier against the proprietary body of the village to recover dues as payment for personal services based upon an entry in the wajib-ul-arz is not a suit to recover a village cess, and is, therefore, cognisable by a Civil and not by a Revenue Court. [p. 488, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the order of the Munsif, first class, with powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, Rohtak, dated the 2nd September 1916 dismissing the suit.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—(1). The plaintiff in this case one Azim claimed to be a saqqa of village Sanghi, Tahsil Rohtak, and sought to recover Rs. 16-8-9 from the defendants, three of the biswedars of the village, on the ground that according to the terms of the wajib-ul-arz he was entitled, as saqqa of the village, to certain specified dues in return for his doing the work of water-carrier at marriages and at the camps of officers on tour. The defendants denied the plaintiff's claim and his suit was dismissed by the learned Munsif on the 2nd of September 1916. Against this dismissal he has preferred this revision and the only point for determination is whether the suit was cognizable by a Civil Court or a Revenue Court.

(2). After hearing Mr. Badr-ud-Din for the petitioner and Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit for the respondents, it seems to me that the correct conclusion is that the suit is cognizable by a Civil Court. Mr. Badr-ud-Din urged that the claim related to "a village cess" within the meaning of section 4 (12) of the Punjab Tenancy Act and that, therefore, Revenue Courts alone could entertain the case under section 77 (3) (i). It seems to me, however, that the definition referred to does not apply. Village cesses such as haq buha, poochh baki, etc., are cesses leviable by the proprietors of the village from non-proprietary residents or kammis and are dues leviable irrespective of any personal service rendered by the claimant. In the present case the plaintiff distinctly alleges that he renders personal service for which, according to the wajib-ul-arz, a fixed payment had been agreed upon; in other words, he is seeking to recover a contribution or due as payment for personal service and clearly, therefore, the definition referred to cannot be held applicable.

(3). In these circumstances I hold that the suit is cognizable by a Civil Court. The learned Munsif had jurisdiction to try the case and there is no reason to interfere with his decision. The petition is, therefore, rejected with costs.

Petition rejected.

The Hon'ble Mirza Sami Ullah Beg and Mr. Haidar Husain, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order, passed by the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki, directing the plaintiff to elect, which of two inconsistent allegations made in the plaint she desired to maintain. The plaintiff sues for possession of certain property, in regard to which a deed of wakf, purporting to have been executed by her, has been produced in evidence by the defendants. Her allegation is that she did not execute that deed, and that the defendants, who were related to her, deceived her and falsely told her that in order to facilitate the management of her property and especially in view of the opposition of her paternal relations and as a matter of expediency, she should get a deed completed, suggesting thereby that the deed in question was obtained from her without her being actually told what it was by fraud and undue influence. There is nothing necessarily inconsistent in these allegations, but the learned Subordinate Judge treated them as inconsistent, and directed the plaintiff to elect which of those allegations she was going to maintain. In his order the learned Subordinate Judge states that of the two allegations, namely, that the deed was not genuine and that if it was genuine, its execution was obtained by fraud and undue influence, the plaintiff should stand by one so that the fair trial of the suit may not be embarrassed, relying obviously on the provisions of Order VI, rule 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which empowers a Court at any stage of the proceedings to order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleadings, which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit. But, as laid down by Bowen, L. J., in Knowles v. Roberts (1), the rule that the Court is not to dictate to the parties how they should frame their case is one that ought always to be preserved sacred, subject to this limitation that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleadings, which have been laid down by the law, and introduce what is unnecessary or tends to prejudice, embarrass, and delay the trial of suit.

There is nothing in the allegation made in the plaint in the present case that can be regarded as likely to embarrass, delay or prejudice the trial, for what the plaintiff asserts is that she did not execute the deed of wakf, on which the defendants rely, and that what was represented to her was that in order to facilitate the management of her property and obviate the opposition of her paternal relations she might, as a matter of expediency, get a deed completed. What kind of deed she had consented to execute or was induced to execute is not clear from the pleadings. It is not for the Court to direct the plaintiff to amend her plaint, because she has made certain allegations, which to the defendants may appear embarrassing. The decisions, relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge, are inapplicable to the circumstances of the present case. We do not know what portion of the allegations made in the plaint the learned Subordinate Judge would direct to be struck out, in case the plaintiff fails to elect, and the procedure adopted by him seems to us to be more likely to embarrass the trial of the suit than are the plaintiff's pleadings as they stand. Ordinarily, we are not inclined to interfere in revision with an interlocutory order, passed in a suit or other proceeding, but in this case the decision arrived at by the Court below will hamper the trial of the case materially, and, unless the order already passed by that Court remains abortive, may render a fresh trial of the case necessary.

We, therefore, allow the application, set aside the order passed by the Court below, and direct that the trial should be allowed to proceed according to the allegations made in the plaint. No order is made as to the costs of this proceeding.

Revision accepted.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale—Consideration, non-payment of, whether renders sale void—Intention.

Mere want of payment of consideration does not render a sale void, unless it is shown that it was the intention of the parties that title should not pass until consideration is paid. But the intention of the parties can be judged not merely from what they say or do at the time of the sale, but also from their subsequent conduct. [p. 490, col 1.]

Where a purchaser paid down a small fraction of the price in the first place, and this went in sale expenses, not into the vendor's pocket, and the balance of the price was promised to be paid on mutation, but for 9½ years he made no attempt to enforce the sale or to obtain mutation of names:

Held, that the presumption was that the purchaser had given up all his rights in respect of the sale. [p. 490, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—(1). The land belonged to Bakhsha, but was under mortgage to defendant's father for Rs. 32 and 8 chauths of wheat. On 12th June 1916 Bakhsha sold the land to plaintiff by unregistered deed. The vendor took Rs. 2-4-0 cash for sale expenses, Rupees 20-8-0 was to be paid at mutation and the rest was to redeem the mortgage. Ten days later Bakhsha sold the land to defendant's father by registered deed. Plaintiff sues to redeem.

(2). The first Court decreed the suit, holding that the registered-deed could not be given the preference as it was proved that the purchaser bought with knowledge of the former sale.

(3). The learned District Judge on appeal dismissed the suit, holding that the sale to plaintiff was incomplete for want of payment of consideration.

(4). Mere want of payment of consideration will not render the sale void, unless it be shown that it was the intention of the parties that title should not pass until consideration was paid. But the intention of the parties can be judged not merely from what they said or did at the time of the sale, but also from their subsequent conduct. In the present case plaintiff paid down the paltry sum of Rs. 24.0 in the first place; and this went in sale expenses, not into the vendor's pocket. So far as is apparent from the record, plaintiff made no attempt to get mutation of names attested, nor took action of any sort till nearly 9½ years afterwards when he brought this suit. Lala Hargopal says his instructions are that plaintiff did apply for mutation of names but in vain. Then why did he not at once seek to establish his position by a suit to redeem, or if he did not want to redeem, by a suit for a declaration of title? The defendant's father is now dead, and according to respondent's Pleader (though this is not on the record) Bakhsha too is now dead. Why should plaintiff have kept silent all these years? Plaintiff's Counsel does not suggest that plaintiff was not aware of the re-sale to defendant's father; he only says his instructions are that plaintiff and defendant are near relations (defendant's Pleader denies this) and living in the same village, and that plaintiff waited in hopes of an amicable settlement. All I can say is that 9½ years is a very long time to wait.

(5). In my opinion the probabilities are that though a sale deed had been executed, plaintiff gave up his rights and allowed Bakhsha to re-sell to defendant's father.

(6). I uphold the decision of the learned District Judge dismissing the suit, and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale alleged to have been entered into by the defendant No. 5 as the guardian of defendants Nos. 2 to 4, who were minors, against the defendants Nos. 2 to 5, and also against defendant No. 1 who had purchased the property from the said defendants. The Court of First Instance dismissed the claim for specific performance of the contract but directed a refund of the earnest money against defendant No. 5. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge, without entering into the merits of the case, dismissed the appeal on the ground that the suit for specific performance of the contract against the minors was not maintainable on the authority of the case of Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed (1). That case, however, has no application to the facts of the present case. There the manager of an infant's estate entered into an agreement to purchase certain property on behalf of the minor, and their Lordships held "that it is not within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or within the competence of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property" and that "as the minor was not bound by the contract there was no mutuality" and he could not on attaining his majority obtain specific performance of the contract. In the present case, the guardian of the minors, who had been appointed as such under the Guardians and Wards Act, entered into an agreement to sell the property with the sanction of the District Judge. He was, therefore, quite competent to sell the property. It is true that the Court, when authorizing the guardian to sell the property, directed him to sell it for Rs. 1,000. That obviously means that the guardian was to sell the property for not less than Rs. 1,000; and the guardian entered into the agreement to sell the property to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,300, which was clearly for the benefit of the minors. The contract, therefore, under these circumstances, was a valid one and enforceable against the minors. That being so, the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside.

We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send the case back to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal on the merits. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Decree set aside; Case sent back.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 25th March 1916, confirming that of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, dated the 23rd September, 1915.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Appellant.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question which arises for determination in these four appeals is one of the construction of a document of compromise, Exhibit 12. In order to understand how the present suits have arisen it is necessary to refer to certain facts antecedent to the time of the present litigation. Four suits were brought in the Court of the Munsif of Musafirkhana in the Sultanpur District by Muhammad Ewaz Ali Khan, who is the Talukdar of the Mohan a Estate. Muhammad Ewaz Ali Khan died after the suits had been instituted and is now represented by his heir Yar Muhammad Khan. The claim in each instance was to recover a sum of Rs. 70-5-0 by way of contribution, the case for the plaintiff being that he had been obliged to pay a certain annuity by way of maintenance to a lady named Musammât Zainab-un-nissa. He stated that under the terms of a decree which was passed in this Court in the year 1905 on the basis of a compromise, the four sets of defendants who were impleaded in the four suits respectively were liable to contribute to the sums he had paid on account of this annuity. The defendants denied their liability, their case shortly being that they were under no obligation to contribute to the payment of any annuity to the heirs of Musammât Zainab-un-nissa. This lady, it may be remarked, died on 6th March 1913. Both the Courts below dismissed all four suits holding that the defendants were not liable to contribute to this payment, and hence these four second appeals.

Before coming to the terms of the document which regulates the rights of the parties it is necessary to refer to the following facts:—Muhammad Ewaz Ali Khan was talukdar and the present respondents were either under-proprietors or heritable lessees holding certain lands in four villages named Sadipur, Mardanpur, Chak Naib, and Kalyanpur. On 12th July 1888 eight of these under-proprietors or lessees executed a hiba-bil-ewaz in favour of Musammât Zainab-un-issa in consideration of a sum of Rs. 10,000. In this document the donors were described as being the holders of a perpetual lease. The estate of the talukdar was at this time under the control of the Court of Wards and a suit was brought by the Deputy Commissioner representing the Court of Wards in order to set aside this deed of gift, the allegations being that the deed had been executed in fraud of the right of the estate and in order to defeat proceedings which the Court of Wards had been taking for ejectment of the donors. The relief asked for was either a cancellation of this deed of transfer or a decree for pre-emption on payment of a sum of Rs. 10,000. The suit was dismissed in the Court of the District Judge of Rae Bareilly. There was an appeal to this Court and on 27th August 1893 the litigation was put an end to by means of a compromise which was entered into between the plaintiff and Musammât Zainab-un-nissa. By this compromise the plaintiff talukdar gave up his claim for cancellation of the deed of transfer. Zainab-un-nissa agreed to confess the claim for pre-emption. Out of the sum of Rs. 10,000 which was payable to her on account of pre-emption she gave up a sum of Rs. 3,000 odd in exchange for the grant by the plaintiff of an annuity, which was fixed at Rs. 250 a year and which was to be a charge on the talukdar's estate. A certain sum was left with the talukdar to pay off certain mortgages on the property which had been executed before the date of the deed of gift. The balance amounting to Rs. 4,000 odd was paid to Zainab-un-nissa in cash. In addition to Rs. 250 just mentioned the plaintiff undertook to pay a further allowance of Rs. 50 a year to Zainab-un-nissa. This undertaking was expressed to have been given "freely, without consideration and quite apart from the merits of the case." Judgment was given accordingly, but it is to be noted that the judgment did not bind a number of the donors who had been impleaded in the litigation and who were no parties to the compromise. It is admitted now that the four sets of defendants who are impleaded in the present suits are persons who are not bound by this decree which was passed in the year 1893. After the talukdar got this decree he went to the Revenue Court and asked for mutation. This application was opposed by the donors who, as already mentioned, were not bound by the decree I have just referred to. The result of the proceedings in the Revenue Court was that the talukdar only got mutation in respect of a five-annas four-pies share. Mutation was refused in respect of ten annas eight pies, which represented the shares of the donors who were not bound by the decree. The upshot of this was that another suit was brought by the talukdar against these donors, in which he claimed possession of the property which was left with them. This case eventually came before this Court and was decided by a compromise which was filed here on 16th November 1905. The document of compromise which is in English is a lengthy document and was obviously drawn up with great care and presumably in consultation with the legal advisers of the parties who were prosecuting the litigation in this Court. Under the terms of the compromise the plaintiff talukdar was to get possession of four annas eight pies out of ten annas eight pies in suit. The remaining six annas were to be left with the defendants-respondents as under-proprietors with a right of transfer, subject to an annual payment of rent amounting to Rs. 565 odd. This rent was to be payable by the four sets of defendants in equal shares, each share amounting to Rs. 141-4-6. A further term in the agreement was that the defendants agreed to pay a certain sum of Rs. 112-8-0 every year to the plaintiff for payment to Musammât Zainab-un-nissa. The exact words of the clause in the agreement relating to this payment may be reproduced here—

“(b) That the defendants-respondents agree to pay to the plaintiff-appellant annually along with the rent of the aforesaid villages Rs. 112-8-0 for payment to one Bibi Zainab in respect of her maintenance, which is charged upon the said villages in dispute. The entire guzara payable to her is Rs. 300 and the item of Rs. 112 8-0 payable by the defendants is a proportionate amount of the six-annas share held by the defendants.”

It is upon the language of this last clause that the plaintiff claims in the present suits that the defendants are liable to contribute to payments which he has made in respect of the annuity, which he undertook to pay under the decree which was passed in the month of August 1893. In the 7th paragraph of each of the plaints it was stated that Musammât Zainab-un-nissa died on 6th March 1913, leaving three sons as her heirs, and it was alleged that the plaintiff had paid the annuity to these sons up to the end of September 1914. The claim covered payments which were made in respect of the years 1320, 1321, and kharif 1322 Fasli. The defendants' case is that they were not liable to pay any maintenance to the heirs of Zainab-un-nissa. They also take their stand upon the language of clause (b) of the sulahnama, Exhibit 12, which has been quoted in extenso above. Both the Courts below have held that there is nothing in the language of this clause which imposes any liability on the part of the defendants to contribute to the payment of any sum made after death of Zainab-un-nissa. The argument here has been that the Court is entitled to look at the language of the previous deed of compromise of the year 1893 and also the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances, and to infer from all this evidence that when it was stated in the document Exhibit 12 that the defendants were to contribute to the maintenance payable to Musammât Zainab-un-nissa they meant to declare that they were liable to pay that maintenance not only to her but to her heirs in perpetuity. Clearly if this contention of the plaintiff is to be allowed, we should be introducing a new term into this document of compromise and into the decree in which the terms of the compromise were embodied. It is obviously one thing to say that certain persons are liable to contribute to the payment of a sum to be made to a lady and another thing to say that they are liable to contribute to the payment of that sum to her and her heirs for ever. It seems to me that the contention put forward by the learned Counsel, who appeared on behalf of the appellant, is untenable and my opinion is that no extrinsic evidence was admissible in this case for the purpose of adding to, varying or contradicting the terms of the sulahnama of 1905 or of the decree which was passed upon it and which now regulates the rights of the parties. The general rule is that where the language of a document is clear and applies without difficulty to the facts of the case, no extrinsic evidence can be admitted for the purpose of affecting its interpretation. I fail to see in what way it can be contended that there is any ambiguity in the language of the sulahnama which we are now considering. We have it stated clearly that the defendants in that case agreed to pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 112-8-0 for payment to Zainab-un-nissa in respect of her maintenance. This language is clear enough and seems to me to show that nothing more could have been contemplated than contribution to payments made to the lady in her lifetime. If there was any intention in the mind of the parties to make the responsibility for contribution continue for ever or for as long as there were any heirs of Zainab-un-nissa in existence, nothing could have been easier than to have said so. Again in referring to the language of the clause relating to this payment we have it set out that the entire guzara “payable to her” is Rs. 300 a year. There is nothing said here about any payment to be made to her heirs. I can see no difficulty, therefore, in applying the language of this deed to the existing facts, and, this being so, no question of interpretation or construction arises so as to render it necessary to resort to any other evidence for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the parties. The learned Counsel referred to the well-known case of Balkishen Das v.

RAJ KUMAR MISSRA v. RAMA NATH SINGHA.

W. F. Legge (1). There no doubt it was laid down that in dealing with the case which was before their Lordships of the Privy Council, namely, the interpretation of two contemporaneous deeds, the case must be decided on a consideration of the contents of the documents with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as might be required to show in what manner the language of the documents is related to existing facts. But, when we observe that extrinsic evidence is only to be called into aid when there is any necessity to show the manner in which the language of the deed is related to existing facts, if no such evidence is required there can be no reason to admit any other evidence except what is to be found within the four corners of the document itself. In order to justify the reception of extrinsic evidence there must be some doubt or ambiguity in the language of the document. In the case of the document which I am now considering it does not appear to me that there is any ambiguity or doubt whatever which necessitates the admission of any other evidence for the purpose of ascertaining its meaning. And so I fail to see how it can be maintained that there is any justification for referring to the terms of the compromise of 1893 in order to ascertain the meaning of the later compromise of 1905. If it is argued that evidence of conduct is admissible, this would not help here for no conduct can be imputed to the present defendants-respondents in respect of a document of compromise to which admittedly they were no parties. But I prefer to base my decision on the broad ground that the document in suit being free from all ambiguity no other evidence than the terms of the document itself is admissible for the purpose of varying its meaning in the manner desired by the present plaintiff. I hold, therefore, that the decision of the Courts below is correct and must be upheld. This was the only ground upon which the case was argued before me and it must fail. I notice that in 5th paragraph of the memorandum of appeal in each case it is pleaded that in any case the Courts below should have allowed the plaintiff any amount of maintenance paid to Musammat Zainab-un-nissa during her lifetime. This point has not been discussed before me and I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the learned Counsel thought that he was not in a position to support it. The result is that all four appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Lease, construction of—Agreement not to vary rent until actual measurement—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 52, applicability of.

Where by a permanent lease, a piece of land described as a plot of one thousand bighas, then in jungly state, was let out rent free for six years and thereafter at a progressive rent rising to 8 annas per bigha, and the lease provided that the tenant shall pay Rs. 500 every year, and after the rent-free period and the period of progressive rents were over, on a measurement being made....., for land found to be in excess the tenants should pay additional rent at the above rate from the time of the measurement and should from that time get an abatement at the above rate for land which was found to be less, and the tenant or his heirs or successors should never have to pay any additional jama for the above lands, and the landlord or his heirs and successors should never receive or be entitled to receive any additional jama:

Held, (1) that upon a proper construction of the lease what was demised was the land lying within the boundaries mentioned in the schedule to the lease at Rs. 500 per annum, with an option to the tenant or the landlord to have an actual measurement made of the land, and until that was done the rent was fixed at Rs. 500 per annum; [p. 495, col. 2.]

(2) that section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply because the lease was a permanent one, but that when the measurement would be actually made the tenant or the landlord would get the benefit of section 52 according as the measurement showed the land to be less or more than one thousand bighas. Appeals against the decrees of the Additional District Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 17th December 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Barnipur, dated the 8th of April 1913.

Babus Hiralal Chakeraburtty and Sita Ram Banerjee, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—These two appeals are preferred by the defendant against a judgment of the learned Additional District Judge of the 24-Pergannahs modifying the decision of the Munsif of Baruiipur. The suits were brought for rent by the landlords. The defence was that there was a deficiency in the area demised and that, therefore, the tenant was entitled to abatement. The defendant's holding is governed by a permanent lease, and by that permanent lease was let out a piece of land described as a plot of 1,000 bighas then in a jungly state rent free for six years and thereafter at a progressive rent rising in the year 1305 to 8 annas per bigha. The lease provided: "I shall pay Rs. 500 every year according to the kists stated below and shall hold with sons, grandsons", etc., the ordinary form. Then the lease provided: "After the rent-free period and the period of progressive rent are over, on a measurement being made with a claim of 80 cubits, each cubit measuring 18 inches, for the land found to be in excess I shall pay additional rent at the above rate from the time of the measurement and shall from that time get an abatement of the above rate for the land which is found to be less. I or my heirs or successors shall never have to pay any additional jama for the above lands and you or your heirs and successors shall never receive or be entitled to receive any additional jama." The point that has been raised is this: It is said that, on a measurement being made, it was found that the tenant was not in possession of 1,000 bighas. The question is, whether on the construction of the lease on the contract that the tenant had entered into, namely, to pay Rs. 500 for the piece of land being let and appertaining to Gheri No. 11 as per boundaries stated below, what was demised was with a fixed rent of Rs. 500 with option to either party at any time after the expiration of the rent-free period and the period of progressive rent to apply to have a measurement made and the actual amount of rent adjusted, or whether the land was let out at the rate of 8 annas per bigha subject to deduction on account of the diminution in area. Upon a proper construction of the lease, it appears that until one or other of the parties applied for a measurement the rent was fixed at Rs. 500 per annum.

The next point that was raised was that the case was governed by section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the terms of the lease, so far as it was attempted to make the tenant pay rent for more land than he was in possession of, were in excess of the powers given by the Bengal Tenancy Act. This is a case to which section 52 does not apply because it is a permanent lease. Under the terms of that lease what was demised was this land lying within the boundaries mentioned in the schedule to the lease at Rs. 500 per annum, with option to the tenant or the landlord to have an actual measurement made of the land, and until that was done the tenant had to pay at the rate mentioned; and it was provided that either party might apply for a measurement. When the measurement is made, the tenant, of course, gets the benefit of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if the measurement shows that the land is less than 1,000 bighas and the landlord gets the benefit if it is shown that the land is more than 1,000 bighas. I think the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the land was let out to the defendant at Rs. 500 a year until a measurement was made. In that view I think the decrees of the lower Appellate Court are correct. The present appeals, therefore, fail and must be dismissed with costs.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2270 OF 1914.

Musammât RADHA RANI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

GUJAR MAL—PLAINTIFF AND Musammât SHIB DEVI—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Alimantion—Sale—Suit for declaration that sale shall not affect plaintiff's reversionary rights—Sale, whether can be converted into mortgage—Decree, proper—Necessity—Appeal, second—Vague and unsatisfactory findings.

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that a sale-deed in respect of a certain house executed by defendant No. 2, in favour of defendant No. 1, was null and void and shall not affect their reversionary rights. The First Court dismissed the suit, holding that the sale was for necessity. The District Judge on appeal held that necessity was proved only for Rs. 800 out of the total sale price of Rs. 2,000 and gave plaintiffs a decree to the effect that the sale should be converted into a mortgage for Rs. 800, which should be liable to redemption after the death of the alienor. The vendee preferred a second appeal to the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that whether the sale was for necessity or not, it could not be converted into a mortgage which could be redeemed anywhere within 60 years; [p. 496, col. 2.]

(2) that the proper decree in such a case would be a decree declaring that the alienation shall only affect the reversioners' rights to the extent of Rs. 800, it being open to them to pay down the Rs. 800 and claim to recover the property anywhere within 12 years of succession opening out to them; [p. 496, col. 2; p. 497, col. 1.]

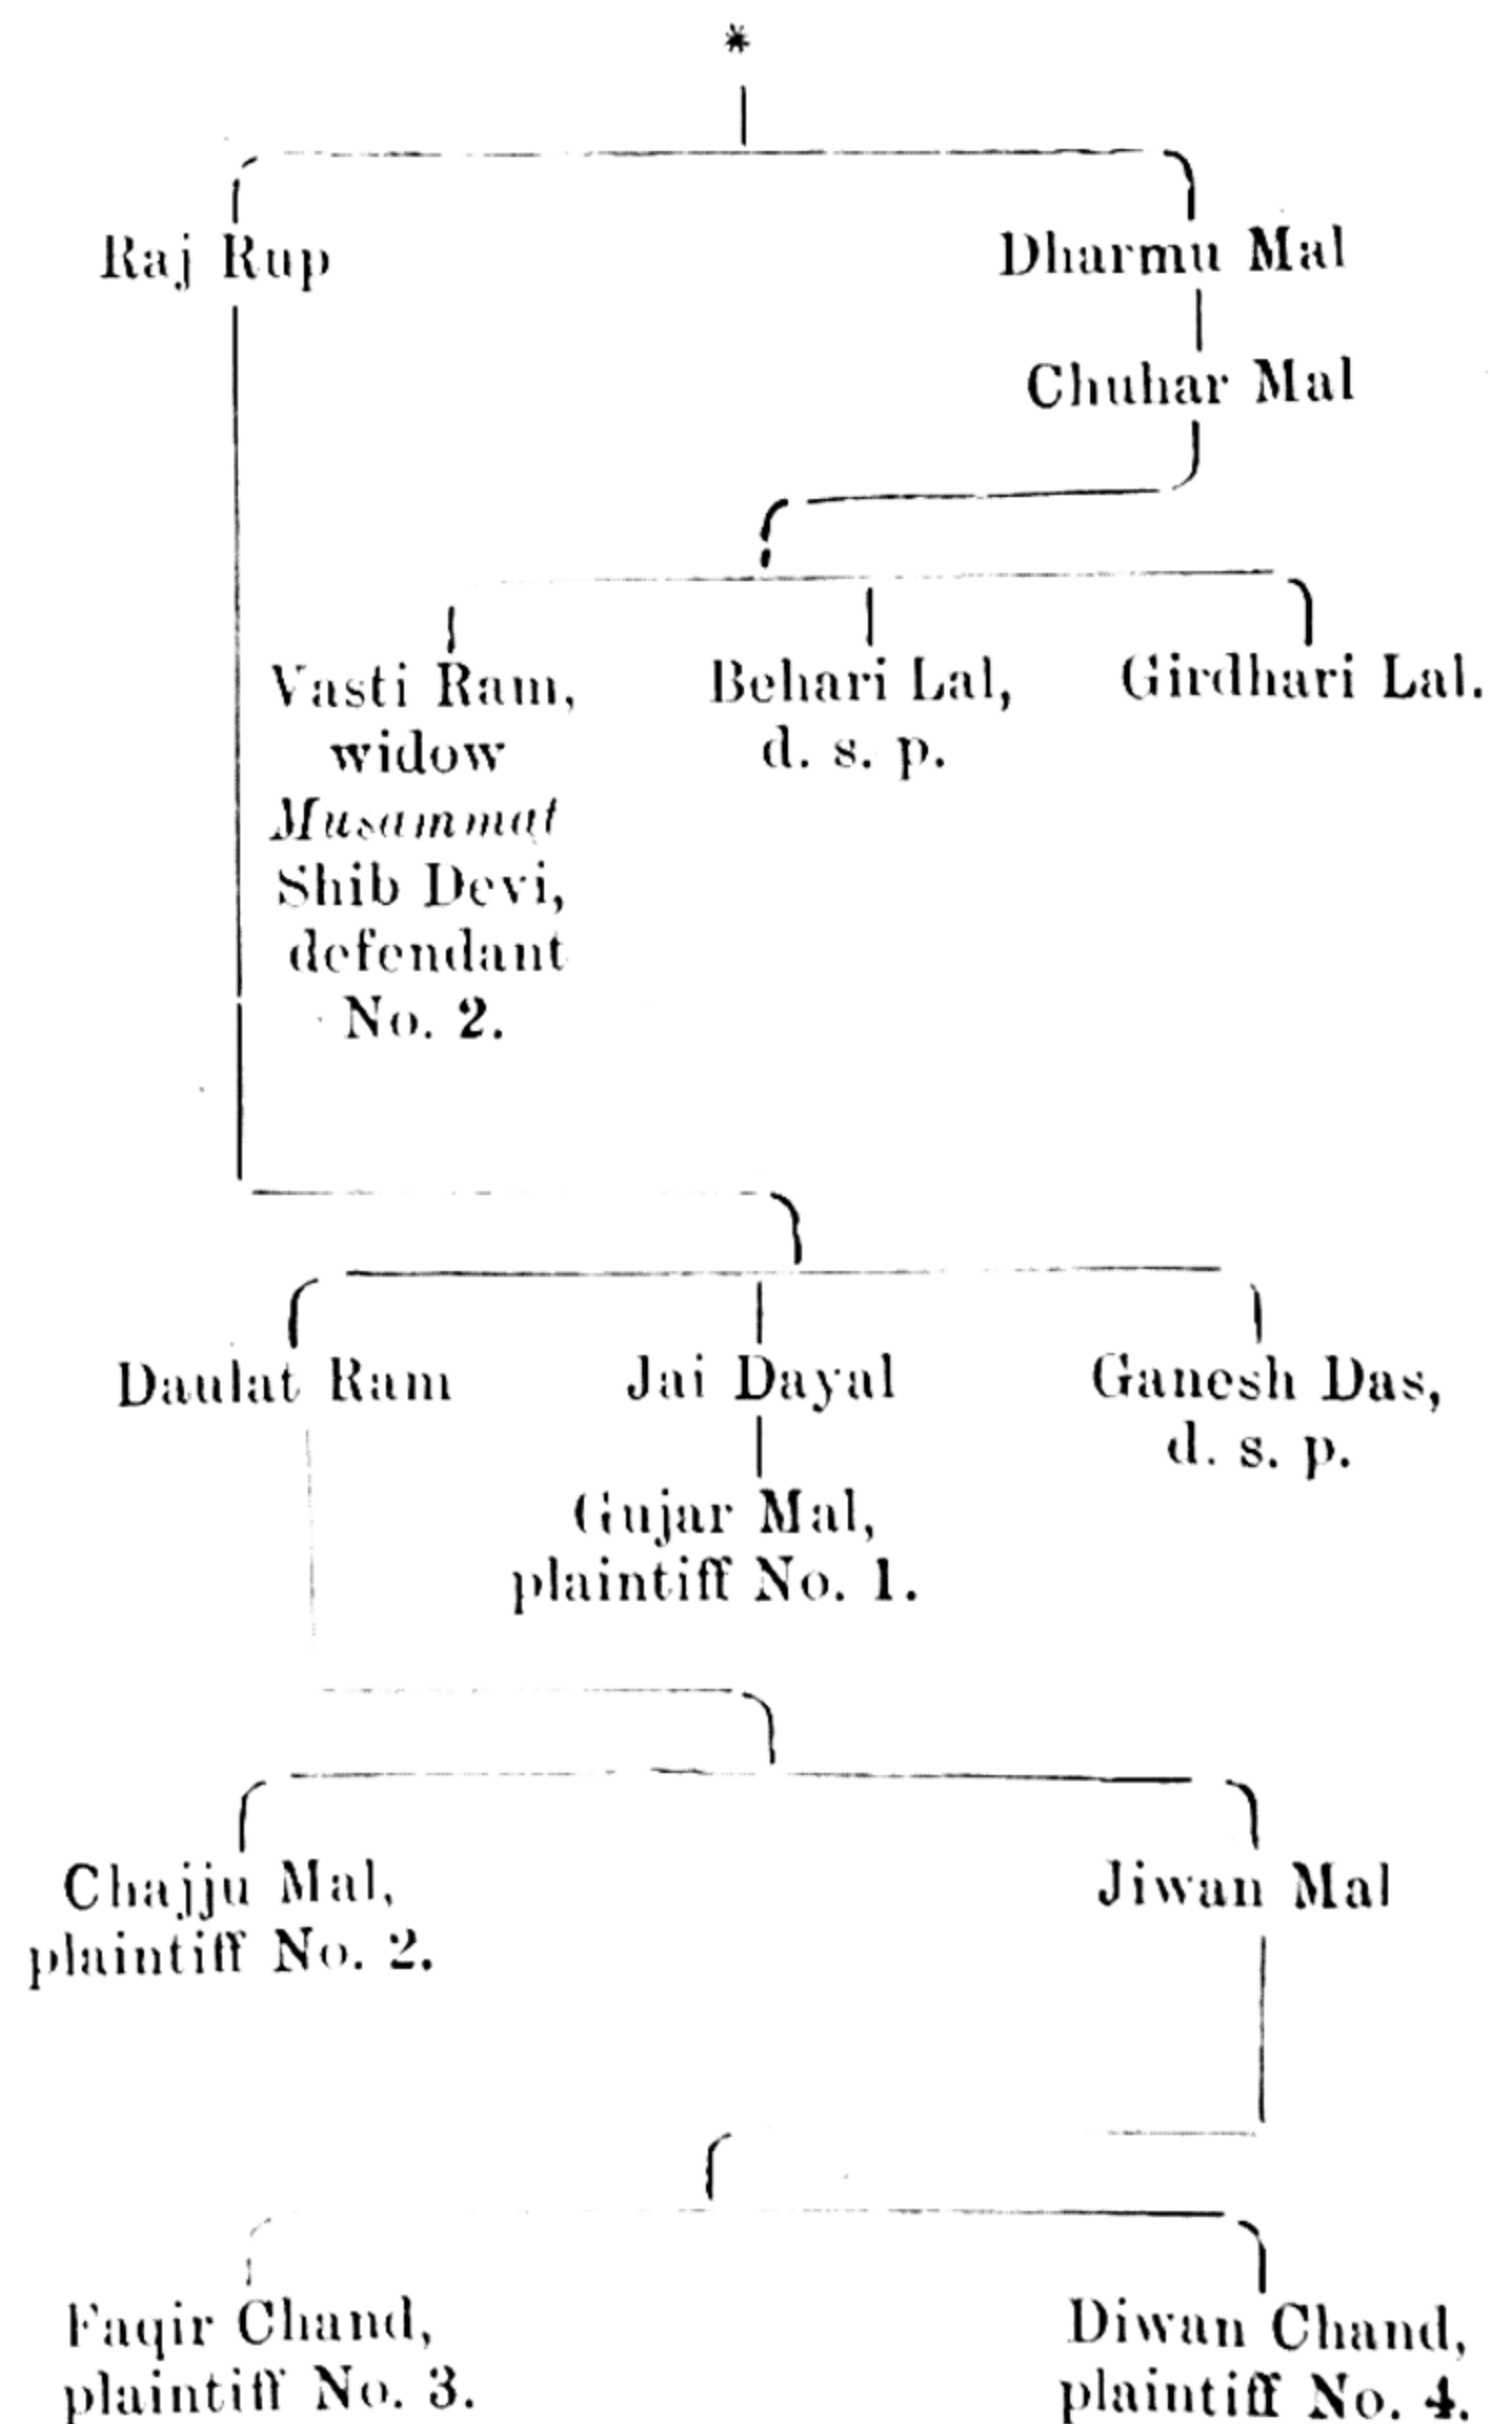

(3) that the findings of the District Judge with regard to the various items which formed part of the sale price were so vague and unsatisfactory that the Court was constrained to go into the merits of the case even in second appeal. [p. 497, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 2nd June 1914, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, second class, Lahore, dated the 24th August 1912, dismissing the suit.

Dewan Mehar Chand, for the Appellant.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The genealogical tree is as follows:—

Girdhari Lal, so we are told, disappeared in his youth and has not since been heard of, so we may presume he is dead.

On 23rd April 1911 Musammât Shib Devi sold the house in suit to Musammât Radha Rani, defendant No. 1, for Rs. 2,000. The plaintiffs have sued for a declaration that the sale shall not affect their reversionary rights. The plaintiffs allege that there was no necessity for the sale. The First Court dismissed the suit, holding that the sale was for necessity. The learned District Judge on appeal held that necessity for Rs. 800 only was proved, and gave a decree to the effect that the sale should be converted into a mortgage for Rs. 800, which should be liable to redemption after the death of the alienor.

We would in the first place remark that, whether the sale be for necessity or not, it cannot be converted into a mortgage, which can be redeemed anywhere within sixty years. The proper form of decree in such a case is a decree declaring that the alienation shall only affect the reversioners' rights to the extent of RADHA SANI v. GUJAR MAL.

Rs. 800, which leaves it open to the reversioners to pay down the Rs. 800 and claim to recover the property anywhere within twelve years of succession opening out to them.

The alienee appeals to this Court urging that the sale was for necessity, and that the District Judge has not dealt properly with the case. Gujar Mal files cross-objections as to costs. For the plaintiffs-respondents it is urged that whether the sale was for necessity is a question of fact and that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point cannot be attacked in second appeal. But on examining the District Judge's judgment we find that his findings with regard to the various items which form part of the sale price are so vague and unsatisfactory that we are constrained to go into the merits of the case.

The consideration shewn in the sale-deed is as follows:

	Rs.
(a) to be paid to the prior mortgagee ...	400
(b) taken as earnest money ...	60
(c) paid before Sub-Registrar for payment to creditors and for maintenance of the alienor...	1,000

As the learned District Judge notes the plaintiffs do not allege want of consideration, so the only question is want of necessity.

As regards (a) there is no dispute. This sum of Rs. 400 is allowed by the District Judge, and also a further sum of Rs. 400 as needed for the marriage expenses of the alienor's younger daughter.

It appears that Vasti Ram died somewhere about the end of 1903, leaving two daughters. The elder, Musammât Durga Devi, was married about the end of 1904, and to meet her marriage expenses the house was mortgaged by her mother on 15th November 1904 for Rs. 400 in favour of Jiwan Mal, father of plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4. This is the prior mortgage, which is mentioned in item (a). Gujar Mal himself signed this mortgage-deed, and he is the principal plaintiff, and the only person who appealed from the first Court's decision to the Court of the District Judge. So as to the sum of Rs. 400 there could of course be no contest.

Out of the remaining sum of Rs. 1,600 the defendants attempt to account for the majority as follows:—

	Rs.
(1) due to Radha Kishen for chaubarsi expenses ...	100
(2) due to Radha Pandha for litigation expenses ...	60
(3) due to Musammât Kirpa Devi ...	280
(4) due to Musammât Lachhmi on bond ...	129
(5) spent on marriage of the younger daughter ...	800
TOTAL ...	1,369

This leaves only Rs. 231 which it is said the widow needed for her own maintenance.

We will now take the above items one by one, and see what the District Judge finds with regard to each.

As to the item of Rs. 100 Radha Kishen, husband of Musammât Shib Devi's sister, says she borrowed Rs. 60 from his wife and Rs. 42 from him. He says the Rs. 42 was borrowed from him in 1909, which was more than four years after the death of Shib Devi's husband. But the date of the Rs. 60 loan is not fixed by his evidence, so this at least may have been spent on the choubarsi ceremonies. The District Judge here simply notes that Shib Devi executed no document in Radha Kishen's favour, and that the loan from his wife is not entered in his books. This, however, is by no means strange, remembering his relationship to Musammât Shib Devi.

(2) The item of Rs. 60 is said to have been spent on litigation. The District Judge here notes that no document was executed. But he notes that the suit was dismissed. True, but Gujar Mal's opposition to the widow's attempts to raise money seems to have driven her into Court, and though she may have been ill-advised in bringing such a suit we are not prepared to say that such an item should be disallowed.

(3) The item of Rs. 280 is made up of Rs. 200 borrowed from Musammât Kirpa Devi, on pledge of some ornaments, and £0 interest. Here the District Judge says "it looks very much as if Musammât Shib Devi had been anticipating her requirements."

JANAKI NATH SAHA V. KAILASH CHANDRA SINGHA.

But a widow must anticipate—if it can really be called anticipation—to some extent. When at the end of her tether for daily expenses she must borrow, and she cannot borrow from day to day, she is bound in practice to borrow a sum which will carry her on for some time to come. Musammāt Kirpā Devī has given evidence which the First Court believes and the District Judge apparently does not disbelieve it.

(4) Rupees 129 borrowed from Jiwan Mal. After his death Musammāt Shib Devī wrote a bond in favour of Musammāt Lachhmi, widow of Jiwan Mal and mother of plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4. Musammāt Lachhmi herself says the money was taken for the marriage of the daughter Musammāt Durgā Devī. She also says the bond has not been re-paid, but the alienee, when advancing money to pay off debts has not to see to the application.

(5) Rupees 800 said to have been spent on the younger daughter's marriage. Here the District Judge allows Rs. 400 only, i.e., the sum admitted by Gujar Mal, and the same sum as was allowed for the elder daughter's marriage. But the oral evidence is that a lot was spent on feeding the marriage procession, and more must have gone on clothes, jewelry and so on. There is evidence that the alienor's husband had left ornaments and clothes for the elder girl's marriage, so the younger girl's marriage would cost more. It may be noted that the Rs. 129 before discussed was not for this marriage but was for the muklawa and tinwar (or tiwar) expenses, i.e., cost of presents usually given on certain feast days to a married daughter in the first year of her marriage.

The learned District Judge notes that the alienor's own evidence shows her husband left her valuable ornaments, and that she raised Rs. 125 by sale of a khola. But there is ample evidence, which the District Judge does not find to be false, to shew that the widow was reduced to pawning her ornaments and borrowing from relatives and others.

As to the plea, which has been advanced before us on behalf of Gujar Mal, that the widow may have been spiting the reversioners, this overlooks the fact that the parties are Khatris and presumably governed by Hindu Law, so the daughters and their children would succeed and not the collaterals; so to waste the property would injure the daughters rather than the collaterals. We are told that one daughter has died without issue, and the husband of the other has disappeared, but Musammāt Shib Devī had no reason to suppose that her daughters would have no children, and in any case she would not be likely to squander what would come to the daughter or daughters who might survive her.

As to the Rs. 231 not accounted for, there is full force in the argument of the learned Pleader for the appellant that in such a case the widow cannot sell for just the sum which she actually requires for present expenses, and that a widow who already owes Rs. 1,769 and has a house worth Rs. 2,000 is fully justified in selling it for its full value, and keeping the surplus for her own needs.

We accept this appeal, and reversing the decision of the learned District Judge we restore the decree of the First Court dismissing the suit. Costs in the First Court to be as ordered by that Court. Costs in the District Judge's Court and in this Court to be borne by Gujar Mal. The cross-objections are dismissed.

Cross-objections dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Non-transferable occupancy holding—Purchaser in execution of money-decree not recognized by landlord—Suit for recovery of possession by purchaser against another purchaser recognized by landlord.

Plaintiff, who had purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of a money-decree

but had not been recognized as a tenant by the landlord, brought a suit to recover his possession from the defendant, who was in possession under a fictitious purchase from the widow of the ryot and who was accepted and treated by the landlord as a tenant:

Held, that the plaintiff could not get a decree against the defendant, as the latter had been accepted and treated by the landlord as the tenant and that such treatment amounted to a settlement. [p. 500, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 4th August 1914, confirming that of the Munsif, Goalundo, dated the 11th July 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Prokash Chandra Mozumdar), for the Appellant.—My client purchased the holding from Melon's widow who had no knowledge of the execution proceeding and the sale held therein of the occupancy holding. No doubt the respondent purchased the occupancy holding of Melon in that execution proceeding, but the holding of Melon was a non-transferable occupancy holding and the auction sale at which the plaintiff-respondent purchased was in execution of a money-decree. The plaintiff was not recognized by the landlord, but my client, the defendant after his purchase of the same holding from the widow of the ryot Melon has been accepted by the landlord as a tenant and has been in possession. Even if his purchase from Melon's widow be not sufficient to give him title he can stand on the recognition by the landlord.

The plaintiff by his purchase in execution of a money-decree has acquired no right to the holding which he could enforce against my client who has got the consent of the landlord, and has been treated by the landlord as his tenant.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Probodh Chandra Roy), for the Respondents.—My client purchased the holding at an execution sale and was put in possession through Court on the 2nd April 1909, and no objection was raised to the sale by the ryot or his legal representatives to the sale. Therefore, the purchase was operative against all persons deriving title from the ryot though it was not operative against the landlord without the landlord's consent to the sale. The defendant purchased the holding not from the original ryot but from his widow who claimed under a hebanama which has been found to be a paper transaction. That hebanama was executed after the institution of the present suit by my client. I submit none but the landlord can raise the question of the non-transferability of the holding. The defendant who derives his title from a fictitious purchase has no locus standi to question my title to the property acquired at an execution sale to which the ryot or his legal representatives did not raise any objection. After the tenant's death, the tenancy continued in his heirs and it was not open to the landlord to make any settlement with any person who did not derive title from those heirs. Here the defendant could not say that he derived title from the heirs of Melon, as Melon left not only a widow but several children and the widow purported to sell the whole of the occupancy holding to which she had no title. My learned friend is estopped from questioning the transferability of the holding, vide, Radha Kant Chakravarti v. Ramananda Shaha (1). Mere recognition by the landlord could not be sufficient to confer title upon a person who had acquired no right to the holding.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, in reply.—Referred to Narayani v. Nabin Chandra Chowdhari (2), Badarennessa v. Alam Gazi (3). In the case of an involuntary sale the tenant can raise the transferability of a holding. If the landlord's recognition be not held sufficient, I may claim that under the circumstances of the case there was new settlement with me by the landlord. The plaintiff in his plaint stated that there was a complete abandonment of the holding. So the landlord had every right to make a new settlement.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent on the 20th November 1908 purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of a money-decree against one Melon Sheikh, (which was executed after his death against his heirs); but the plaintiff was not recognised as tenant by the landlord. He sued to recover possession of the holding from the defendant who was in possession. The latter set up a purchase in the year 1909 from one of the heirs of Melon, namely, his widow Kulo Bibi who is alleged to have obtained the entire holding from Melon by a deed of gift. He also pleaded that he was accepted as tenant by the landlord. The Court below gave a decree to the plaintiff and the defendant has appealed to this Court.

Now, an involuntary transfer of an occupancy holding not transferable without the consent of the landlord, is operative as against the raiyat where the raiyat with knowledge of the sale fails or omits, to have the sale set aside. As there was no finding whether Melon's widow had any knowledge of the sale in execution of which the holding was sold, the case was remanded for a finding on that point. The Court below has now found that she had no knowledge of the sale.

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that although the sale was not operative as against the widow of Melon, by reason of her not having any knowledge of the sale, the tenant's interests did not pass to the defendant because the heba under which Melon's widow is alleged to have acquired a right to the entire holding, is found to have been a paper transaction and Melon had other heirs also: and that, if the interests of the tenants did not pass to the defendant, the defendant did not acquire any title by recognition by the landlord. But it is the plaintiff's own case that the heirs of Melon had abandoned the land, at the time of his obtaining delivery of symbolical possession. That being so and the defendant having been accepted and treated by the landlord as the tenant, which in the circumstances of the present case amounted to a settlement, the former acquired a right to the holding. In this view it is unnecessary to consider the effect of the tenant's heirs not taking steps to have the sale set aside after they had knowledge thereof, which question, moreover, was not argued before us.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

JANG BAHADUR SINGH—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 116, 4—Mortgage—Construction of deed—Mortgagor left in possession of part of mortgaged property, position of—Occupancy rights, acquisition of—Raiyats, kinds of.

Unless there are the strongest reasons for doing so, a Court ought not to give a construction to an alleged attornment clause in a mortgage-deed which will have the effect of creating rights of tenancy in derogation of the mortgagee's rights. [p. 502, col. 1.]

In order to determine whether a clause in a mortgage deed, allowing the mortgagor to remain in possession of a portion of the mortgaged property on payment of a nominal rent, amounts to an attornment clause, what is to be looked at is the real intention of the parties, and the facts of each particular case must be taken into account in order to see what the intention of the parties was. If the intention was to create the relationship of landlord and tenant, then the rent law of the country will apply. [p. 503, col. 1.]

Even when the alleged attornment is created by a conveyance other than the mortgage-deed, it is open to the Court to hold that the mortgage and the lease constitute one transaction and that the mortgagee is entitled to count the alleged rent as a charge upon the mortgaged property qua principal and interest. [p. 502, col. 2.]

Out of 200 bighas of zerait land mortgaged by the defendants to the plaintiff in 1896, an area of 50 bighas was left in possession of the former who were liable to pay a nominal rent of 8 annas per bigha for use and occupation. In 1902, a further area of 4 bighas was by a kabuliyat let out to the defendants at a rental of Rs. 14. Plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent and for khas possession in terms of the mortgage.

Held, (1) that the clause relating to the 50 bighas was not an attornment clause, but was merely an arrangement made by favour of the landlord by which the mortgagor was allowed to remain in possession in the capacity of something like a licensee, and that the land being zerait land, the protection afforded by section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the acquisition of occupancy rights applied; [p. 501, col. 2.]

(2) that the kabuliyat in respect of the 4 bighas created the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and that the defendants had acquired occupancy rights in the land as against the plaintiff [p. 503, col. 1.]

The law does not preclude a mortgagor from securing the status of an occupancy raiyat under his mortgage. [p. 503, col. 1.]

Obiter dictum.—The Bengal Tenancy Act does not contemplate a raiyat who does not come under the classes enumerated in section 4 of the Act. [p. 503, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This second appeal arises out of a mortgage executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and their father Mahabir Singh on the 14th August 1896 in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the shares in several mouzas inclusive of 200 bighas of zerait land. Out of the said 200 bighas an area of 50 bighas was, according to the plaintiff, left in the possession of the mortgagors as licensees, who were liable to pay a nominal rent of 8 annas per bigha for use and occupation. By a kabuliyat dated the 25th September 1902 a further area of 4 bighas, 10 cottahs was let out to the defendants at a rental of Rs. 14-5-6.

The defendants in the present suit comprise three sets of persons, (1) the mortgagors, (2) the subsequent mortgagees, and (3) certain persons recorded as *raiya*s upon the lands alleged to be zerait.

The plaintiff's suit is for arrears of rent and for khas possession in terms of the mortgage.

The Munsif found that the persons in occupation had acquired occupancy rights in all the lands and decreed only the claim for rent. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that occupancy rights had been acquired in the jungle lands, but not in the 50 bighas which were zerait and which came under the operation of section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and he decreed the suit for rent and directed that if the mortgagor-defendants paid the arrears under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act within 15 days they would be exempted from ejectment. With regard to the jungle land he dismissed the suit for ejectment. The plaintiff now prefers this second appeal.

The first and most important question for determination is what is the construction to be put upon the clause relating to the letting of the 50 bighas. Was it an attornment clause creating the relationship of landlord and tenant or was it a mere condition of the mortgage as between mortgagor and mortgagee, and was the stipulation for payment of Rs. 25 per year in essence a condition for securing the principal and interest.

We have most anxiously considered the bond and are satisfied that the relationship of landlord and tenant was not created by this stipulation. It was not an attornment clause at all. It was an arrangement made by favour of the landlord by which the mortgagor was allowed to remain in possession in the capacity of something like a licensee. It is admitted that the rent of 8 annas per bigha was not a fair and reasonable rent and I can conceive of no reason why the mortgagee should have brought the mortgagor upon the land at such a grossly inadequate rental, knowing full well that by the operation of our tenancy laws the latter might set up rights in derogation of his own rights as mortgagee. How dangerous such an act would have been if the lands had been ordinary agricultural lands has been shown by the fact that the Munsif found that the 50 bighas are not zerait lands and that the occupiers have occupancy rights. In the face of the learned Subordinate Judge's finding, however, that dispute no longer arises and we must take it that the lands are zerait and that the protection afforded by section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the acquisition of occupancy rights applies.

In England it has been held that a mortgagor who remains in possession of the mortgaged property by the terms of the mortgage-deed without express provision is only quodam modo a tenant-at-will. A tenancy may, however, be expressly created by an express provision in the mortgage-deed and in that case he becomes a tenant by attornment and the relationship of landlord and tenant is fully created. The effect of such an attornment is that the landlord by reason of the provisions of the Bills of Sale Act, which require registration, cannot as in ordinary rent executions levy by distress but with that exception all the other legal incidents arising out of the relationship of landlord and tenant fully operate between the mortgagor and the mortgagee.

When a mortgagor enters into a contract of tenancy with a mortgagee after the latter has entered into possession then if the rent is fair and reasonable and the transaction amounts to a re-demise of the land, the mortgagee as landlord is competent to avail himself of the remedy of distress also.

But in any event whether the attornment is by the mortgage-deed itself or by a separate subsequent-deed, the law in England appears to be that the relationship of landlord and tenant, if clearly and distinctly created, may subsist side by side with relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee [See Daubuz v. Lavington (1), Isherwood, Ex parte; Knight, In re (2) and Hall v. Comfort (3)].

The policy of the law in allowing attornment by the mortgagor to the mortgagee was apparently in case of the mortgagee and to give him the additional remedies, for securing his principal and interest of distraint and summary recovery of possession.

The possibility of any prudent mortgagee creating a title in the mortgagor in derogation of his mortgage rights was never contemplated by the law of England. In India this consideration applies with still greater force. Here occupancy and non-occupancy rights are created by operation of statutory law, and unless there are the strongest reasons for doing so we ought not to give a construction to an alleged attornment clause in a mortgage-deed, which will have the effect of creating rights of tenancy in derogation of the mortgagee's rights. Is the intention to create the relationship of landlord and tenant so clearly and unequivocally expressed in the deed under consideration in the present case, that we are compelled to say that no other construction of the mortgage-deed is possible? In my opinion the answer is in favour of the mortgagee.

We ought not, unless we are compelled to do so, hold that the mortgagee did in this case what no ordinary prudent mortgagee would have done. In my opinion the deed may be construed as showing that the real relation between the parties was not that of landlord and tenant but mortgagee and mortgagor and that the arrears of rent claimed in the present suit are really on account of principal and interest. In England such sums are a charge upon the property but the mortgagee is entitled to re-enter if there is a clause to that effect. In America the stipulated rent is not a charge upon the property and the mortgagor may redeem without paying rent due to the mortgagee on the ground that the agreement to pay is only personal. Nannu v. Raman (4), Altaf Ali Khan v. Lalta Prasad (5), Imdad Hasan Khan v. Badri Prasad (6), Madhwa Sidhanta Onahini Nidhi v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (7) and Baghelin v. Mathura Prasad (8), favour the view that what is to be looked at is the real intention of the parties and that even when the alleged attornment is created by a conveyance other than the mortgage-deed it is open to the Court to hold that the mortgage and the lease constitute one transaction and that the mortgagee is entitled to count the alleged rent as a charge upon the mortgaged property qua principal and interest.

In Chimman Lal v. Bahadur Singh (9) and Khuda Bakhsh v. Alim un-nissa (10), the Court held that the leases which were executed subsequently to the mortgage-deed showed an intention on the part of the mortgagee to create a tenancy and not to continue the relationship of mortgagee and mortgagor.

UDAI CHAND V. JANG BAHADUR SINGH.

These cases are, however, only authority for the proposition that the facts of each particular case must be taken into account in order to see what was the intention of the parties. If the intention was to create the relationship of landlord and tenant then the rent law of the country will apply.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary for us to consider the status of the mortgagors and of the persons who have been recorded in the Record of Rights as occupancy *raiya*s. The plaintiff is entitled upon the terms of the mortgage-deed itself to a decree for the amount claimed as rent and for recovery of possession upon the terms of the mortgage of the 50 bighas.

With regard to the 4 bighas 10 cottahs of jungle land the matter is different. Here the letting was six years after the mortgage and it in clear terms creates the relationship of landlord and tenant. Here the mortgagee appears to have entered into the contract of tenancy with his eyes open and he must, therefore, take the consequence of the operation of the rent law. That law does not preclude the mortgagor from securing the status of an occupancy *raiya*t under his mortgagee.

I agree with the learned Munsif that the mortgagor has occupancy rights in this holding and that he cannot be ejected for non payment of rent. The decree in regard to this plot of land will be only for recovery of the arrears of rent and the prayer for recovery of possession will be dismissed.

A question has been raised before us as to the position of the mortgagors in respect of the zerait lands. In our view of the case that question does not arise. There is a conflict of opinion on this point in the Calcutta High Court, but we incline to the view that as the mortgagors have been held not to be occupancy *raiya*s they must be non-occupancy *raiya*s and that the Bengal Tenancy Act does not contemplate a *raiya*t who does not come under the classes enumerated in section 4 of the Act.

Mr. Mritunjay Lal, who appeared for certain minor defendants, attempted to attack the learned Subordinate Judge's finding that the mortgagors and other persons in possession of the zerait lands were non-occupancy *raiya*s. But that point was never argued before the learned Subordinate Judge. Mr. Mritunjay Lal says that the point was not taken because his clients were respondents but that is no answer. The plaintiff as appellant before the learned Subordinate Judge challenged all the findings of the Munsif and claimed to recover khas possession. It was the duty of Mr. Mritunjay Lal's clients at that stage to take all possible grounds for resisting the recovery of khas possession and they ought to have asked the Judge to hold, as they are now asking us to hold, that the Munsif's finding as to occupancy rights was correct and that the plaintiff was not entitled to re-enter. Having failed to raise the point in the lower Appellate Court, the defendants cannot now do so here.

The result, therefore, is that the order of the lower Court be set aside and the plaintiff will get a money-decree for recovery of the arrears claimed on the footing that they represent principal and interest. The plaintiff will also be entitled to recover khas possession of the zerait lands, but his prayer for khas possession of the jungle lands is dismissed. The appeal is decreed with costs in this Court. The order as to costs in the two lower Courts is maintained.

This judgment will govern the connected appeals in No. 2364 of 1915, No. 2365 of 1915 and No. 2366 of 1915.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree that the plaintiff is entitled to re-enter and to recover khas possession of the zerait lands in terms of the clause in the mortgage-bond whereby the mortgagors were allowed to remain in possession of the lands on condition of their payment of the annual rent reserved and to vacate the lands on default of such payment. I also agree that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover khas possession of the jungle lands.

Hindu Law—Joint family property used for joint purposes—Right of one member to build upon joint land—Right of other members.

Held, that as the portion of the land on which the building was erected was such that neither party could have exclusive use of it without injury to the other, the plaintiff should have joint use of the building with the defendant, though the strict right of the plaintiff would have been to have the building demolished and to have the land restored to its original condition as it was before the defendant put up the building. JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the first defendant against a judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 20th May 1914, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Satkhira. The plaintiffs brought the suit in the Court of first instance claiming a mandatory injunction and asking for an order on the appellant before us to demolish a certain building that he had erected on a portion of the joint property. In the course of the proceedings, the plaint was amended by permitting the plaintiffs to ask for joint possession. The parties belong to the same family and they occupy a homestead of 60 lighas, parts of which are in the exclusive possession of them and the remaining portion is in their joint possession. A piece of land about one cattah in area, according to the finding of the lower Appellate Court, for many years had been used on particular ceremonies by different members of the family for certain particular purposes. The user was not continuous throughout the year; but whenever proper occasions arose the land had been used in this way by the different parties. The defendant, No. 1 apparently during the absence of the male plaintiff in Calcutta representing himself as being anxious to foster the religious life of the inhabitants of the locality approached a religious minded person and asked him to advance him money as a gift for the purpose of erecting a building in which this religious minded person was told that all the inhabitants of the locality might go to perform their worship. Apparently, this religious minded gentleman was deceived by the first defendant because the first defendant instead of erecting this building for the benefit of the public at large erected it, as he says, for his own purpose. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, has directed that the plaintiffs should have joint use of this building with the defendants. The building, as it appears, is going to be used by the defendants for lodging their guests and as the Judge points out, there is no reason why the guests of the plaintiffs should not be lodged there also along with those of the defendants. It is quite true that the use of the building would be substantially different to that for which the person who gave the money to erect it thought that it would be used. That is a matter for that gentleman to settle with the defendant No. 1, if he thinks it worthwhile to settle. We have nothing to do with that. The point that the learned Judge thought is that this is not an ordinary case of a large portion of ijmali land of which either party would take one portion without injury to the other. This is a portion of land of which neither party could have exclusive use, without doing substantial injury to the other. This piece of land has for many years been used by the different members of the family on different occasions. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion, as far as I can gather, that the strict right of the plaintiffs would be to have the building demolished and to have the place restored to its original position as it was before the defendant No. 1 having deceived the gentleman with the religious mind and during the absence of the male plaintiff in Calcutta put up this building for the accommodation of his guests. That view I think is right. If the building be removed, there is no doubt that the position of the defendant No. 1 would be the same as it was before he approached this gentleman who gave the money to erect this building for the benefit of the public of the neighbourhood. However, the lower Appellate Court has awarded to the plaintiffs joint possession of the building with the defendants. I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—Jurisdiction—Contract for sale and purchase of cotton and grain—Pukka arhat system—Accounts, rendition of, place of.

Plaintiffs, residents of Bareilly, sued the defendants, commission agents doing business in Bombay, in the Bareilly Court on the allegation that the defendants made a contract with the plaintiffs for the sale and purchase of cotton and grain under pukka arhat system and agreed to render accounts at Bareilly. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the Bareilly Court had no jurisdiction. The plaintiffs gave no evidence of the contract:

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the Bombay Courts had jurisdiction. [p. 506, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the decision of the District Judge, Bareilly, dated the 31st July 1916.

FACTS material for the report appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. Motilal Nehru, for the Respondent, raised a preliminary point to the hearing of the application that no revision lay, as appeal was allowed by law under Order XLIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. P. N. Banerji), for the Applicants.—No appeal lies as only one appeal is allowed and that was preferred to the District Judge. There is no second appeal from the order. Only an application for revision is allowed.

[The preliminary objection was disallowed.]

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, after stating the facts of the case, contended that no opportunity was given to the plaintiff to produce evidence. The plaintiff made an application to give evidence. If the application had been granted he would have shown beyond the custom of pukka arhat that the contract was made at Bareilly and it was agreed that the moneys would be paid at Bareilly and the accounts would be rendered at Bareilly. An opportunity should be given to the plaintiff to tender his evidence.

The Hon'ble Mr. Motilal Nehru was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision raises a question of jurisdiction. The facts, so far as we are concerned with them, may be briefly put as follows:—The plaintiffs are residents of Bareilly. The defendants are commission agents who do business in Bombay. The plaintiffs' case is that the defendants came to Bareilly, there made a contract as commission agents for the sale and purchase of cotton and grain etc., under what is known as the pukka arhat system and they agreed to render accounts at Bareilly and to make all payments of amounts remaining due after rendition of accounts at Bareilly. Among other defences the defendants pleaded that the Bareilly Court had no jurisdiction, they alleged that the contract was made at Bombay, that the account was to be rendered at Bombay and that it had been agreed that any amount due thereunder was payable at Bombay. Neither party gave any evidence on the question. This point of jurisdiction was treated as a preliminary point. The plaintiffs' Pleader said that he wished to give no evidence. The Court of first instance held that in the circumstances the Bareilly Court had no jurisdiction and returned the plaint for the presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiffs appealed. As the judgment of the Court below shows, the learned Pleader, for plaintiffs entirely waived two grounds on which one plaintiff had pleaded that the Bareilly Court had jurisdiction. The first, was that the contract was made at Bareilly and the second, was that the parties had specifically agreed to make payments of money at Bareilly. But the point was pressed on two grounds (1) that according to the custom of the trade under the pukka arhat system the Bareilly Court had jurisdiction to try the suit and (2) that according to the contract between the parties the defendants had agreed to render accounts at Bareilly. On neither question (of custom and of contract) did the plaintiff produce any evidence. The case was argued out and the arguments were finished, and when they were over, a petition was filed in the lower Appellate Court asking that Court to give plaintiffs an opportunity producing evidence on both the points. The Court declined to do that after the case had been completed. It agreed with the decision of the first Court and dismissed the appeal. So far as the record stands, it is quite clear that the decision on the question of jurisdiction depended upon certain facts i.e., the terms of the contract between the parties and the custom of the pukka arhat system. In the absence of evidence on these points the Court below was bound in the circumstances to decide against the plaintiffs. We are asked on their behalf to allow them an opportunity of producing evidence to prove that the Court at Bareilly had jurisdiction to try the suit. The opposite party has been put to a considerable expense already and has been dragged into two Courts and up to this Court by reason of what may be called an over-weening confidence of the plaintiff's learned Pleaders in the Courts below in their knowledge of law. It is quite clear that the Court in Bombay has jurisdiction. As the record stands, it is not shown that the Bareilly Court has jurisdiction and we can see no benefit to arise in allowing a further waste of time and money in going into the points. We, therefore, must decline to send back the case as the decision of the Court below is quite correct. We, therefore, dismiss the application with costs including fees on the higher scale.

RESPONDENTS.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale—Suit in name of vendor after sale of his interest, maintainability of—Landlord and tenant—Co-sharer landlord, right of, to recover his share of rent by suit.

After the sale of a landlord's interest in land with all claims for rent in arrears, a suit for rent is maintainable in the name of the landlord as plaintiff, where the document under which the property is sold authorises the purchaser, as the irrevocable attorney of the vendor, to continue and prosecute in the name of the vendor suits with reference to the moneys and claims transferred by the document. [p. 507, col. 2.]

A co-sharer-landlord can by a suit recover his share of the rent when there has been separate collection in respect of that share. [p. 508, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, 24 Pergannas, dated the 22nd December 1913, affirming that of the Munsif at 24 Pergannas, dated the 30th April 1913.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"Plaintiff's case was that the defendant had three jamias under him the whole of which appertained to the Estate No. 70, though originally they had been under two Estates Nos. 70 and 71; 12 annas of the land appertaining to these holdings belonged to the owners of Estate No. 70, and the remaining 4 annas to the pro forma defendants who were the proprietors of the other estate. There was a Record of Rights under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in respect of Estate No. 70, and the jamias as stated in the plaint were recorded therein as the correct rental. The chief contention on behalf of the defendants was that plaintiff had no right to sue or to maintain the suit.

As regards the competency of the plaintiff's maintaining the suit, the learned Munsif found that although plaintiff's right had been conveyed to a third party by a deed of transfer * * * there was a clear provision contained therein giving him the right to sue.

From that decision the present appeal has been preferred and the learned Vakil has contended on behalf of the appellants that inasmuch as the plaintiff had parted with all the rights by the sale-deed Exhibit A he had no right to maintain the suit.

In my opinion the argument is not well founded. What is said on page 6 (of the sale-deed) is that the vendor transferred and assigned all rents and cases in arrears to the vendee but on the following page it is said that they are transferred * * to the purchaser with full power to the purchaser as the irrevocable attorney of and in the name of the said vendor but at his, that is, the purchaser's own cost to ask, to demand, sue for, recover and receive the said several sums, so that there can be nothing which prevents the plaintiff from maintaining the suit in its present form.

The appeal is dismissed with costs."

Babu Baranashibasi Mukherjee, for the Appellant.—My first point is that the plaintiff has no right to bring this suit as he has transferred his share in the estate together with the arrears of rent to some other persons who have not been joined as defendants. The plaintiff has no right to recover arrears of rent because he has already parted with that right.

[FLETCHER, J.—Was this point raised in the lower Courts?]

Yes. It was raised. As the right to sue for arrears of rent was transferred to the purchaser the purchaser should have been substituted in the place of the vendor, the plaintiff. The lower Courts were wrong in going upon the supposition that even after the transfer the vendor would have the right to sue in his own right.

The next point is that the suit as framed is not maintainable, because it is not a suit under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff here does not sue for the whole rent making the co-sharer landlords parties to the suit. He has sued only for the 12-annas share of the rent, whereas he ought to have sued for the whole rent asking the co-sharer landlords to join, and if the latter did not join he could get a decree for his 12-annas share. The suit as framed is not maintainable by the co-sharer landlord in the absence of his other co-sharers. The suit must be for the whole rent, and then if the co-sharer landlords do not join or if the tenant proves that he has paid the co-sharer landlord's shares of the rent then he can get a decree for his share of rent. A suit to recover rent by a co-sharer landlord is not maintainable unless the suit is framed under section 148 A, Bengal Tenancy Act. So upon the pleadings as framed this suit should be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant from a decision of the learned Additional District Judge of the 24-Pergannas, dated the 22nd December 1913, affirming the decision of the third Munsif at Alipore. The suit was brought to recover the rent in arrears for the years 1311 to 1314, B. S. The amount claimed was Rs. 54 2-5. The suit was instituted as long ago as the year 1908. So far about nine years, this litigation has been pending. Both the Courts below have decreed the suit. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

Two points have been raised in this appeal. The first point is that the plaintiff had no right to maintain this suit for rent on the ground that there had been an assignment of his interest in the land. The document under which the property was sold is Exhibit A on the record. It is a document in the English language and in the English form being an indenture expressly made between the plaintiff of the one part and the purchaser of the other part. The document purports to transfer to the purchaser all claims for rent in arrears in the suit then pending. It authorized the purchaser as the irrevocable attorney of the vendor, that is, the plaintiff, to continue and prosecute in the name of the present plaintiff the suit then in existence or any future suit with reference to the moneys and claims transferred by that document. It is quite clear that the sole object of the appointment of the attorney was to enable the suit to be continued in the name of the plaintiff without a new assignment being made and it does not matter to the defendant if he gets a perfectly good receipt when he pays the money to the plaintiff notwithstanding this assignment. There is no force in that objection although I do not agree in the construction that the learned Judge has put on the appointment of the purchasers as the irrevocable attorney of the vendor.

The other point was that the plaintiff could not sue to recover his share of the rent only and that the suit ought to have been brought to recover the whole rent due to the plaintiff and the pro forma defendants. This point was not taken in the lower Appellate Court. In the primary Court, it was taken and the learned Judge in that Court found that the defendant's documents showed that the plaintiff's father brought a rent suit in respect of his separate share and that a cess-return was filed in respect of that share. That finding seems to have been assented to and I think it could not be challenged as the cess-return and the decree showed what is called in this country a separate collection. That finding made by the learned Judge of the primary Court was not challenged in the lower Appellate Court. Therefore, it is too late to raise it here. As a matter of fact, there is little doubt that the Munsif was right when he stated that this finding was arrived at on the cess-return and the decree passed in the other suit. The appeal fails and must be dismissed.

Babu Jogendra Nath Ghose who filed a vakalatnama in this appeal on behalf of the respondent says that he has no instruction. The appeal has, therefore, been treated as uncontested. We, therefore, make no order as to costs.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. Plaintiffs brought a suit for the annulment of a revenue sale and recovery of possession of separate and distinct shares in an ijmalī share and got a decree. The share had in the meantime been partitioned. On appeal the High Court reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. Seven of the original plaintiffs then appealed to His Majesty in Council and their appeal was allowed. Some of the appellants then applied to the High Court under Order XLV, rule 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. The matter was sent down to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the applicants were not entitled by means of proceedings in the Execution Department to ask the Court to enquire and determine what estates or interests had been substituted by the partition for the shares originally claimed and that the decree-holders could not get possession without bringing a regular suit to establish their title to the substituted estates or interests.

Held, that the decree-holders were entitled to ask the Subordinate Judge under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code to ascertain in execution proceedings what estates and interests had been substituted for their original shares in the ijmalī mahal and to give them possession of the substituted estates or interests. The appeals were heard in this Court together and this order will govern them all.

Mahal Bist Hazari included 360 villages and in the Collector's register bore Tauzi No. 336. The owners of specified but undivided shares in the mahal applied for and obtained from the Collector a separation of accounts. It is said that there were no less than 148 separate accounts. This left, however, a large residue commonly called the ijmalī or joint share, the owners of which remained jointly liable for the revenue due in respect thereof. In 1901 the ijmalī share was found to be in arrears for the March and June instalments of Government revenue and was sold by the Collector on September 9th, 1901, and was purchased by the respondent Baijnath Goenka for a sum of Rs. 33,500. An appeal to the Commissioners of the Division by the owners of the ijmali share under section 25 of Act XI of 1859 having been dismissed 15 owners of shares in the ijmali share brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr on September 30th, 1902, for annulment of the sale and for recovery of possession of their shares. As it was suggested before us by Counsel for some of the appellants that this was a suit by or on behalf of the whole body of owners of the ijmali share, it is necessary to point out that it was not so. Only fifteen persons were originally plaintiffs in the suit and they set out in paragraph 1 of their plaint their specific shares in the ijmali shares. In paragraph 22 they specified the price which each plaintiff or set of plaintiffs had paid for each of the shares claimed and after claiming that the sale of the ijmali share should be set aside or declared null and void and inoperative in law the plaintiffs claimed possession of the shares described in the second Schedule to the plaint, which shows against the name of each plaintiff or set of plaintiffs the precise share which each plaintiff or set of plaintiffs sought to recover in the suit. The ijmali share comprised 31 or 32 villages. The claim for possession does not extend to all these villages but extends only to the specified share claimed by the different plaintiff. A large number of sharers in the ijmali share were impleaded as defendants. The Subordinate Judge held that the sale was null and void and on June 30th, 1904, he decreed the claim with costs and with mesne profits to be assessed in the Execution Department. When dealing with issue No. 3 in the suit the Subordinate Judge said: "If the plaintiffs succeed in setting aside the sale there will be no difficulty in their obtaining possession of the specified shares of the properties comprised in the ijmali share which are held separately by the several plaintiffs. The jama of the ijmali share is joint but the properties comprised in this jama are held separately and the shares are also specified," and when dealing with issue No. 11 the Subordinate Judge said: "The plaintiffs are entitled to recover the properties claimed by them, the shares of which are separately held." It thus appears to be clear that though there was only one suit all the plaintiffs or sets of plaintiffs claimed separate and distinct share. On appeal the High Court on May 1st, 1907, reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. Seven of the original plaintiffs then appealed to His Majesty in Council with the result that on January 19th, 1915, their appeal was allowed, the decree of the High Court was set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge was restored save and except as to two villages named Matasi and Mirzaganj in regard to which the claim was permitted to be withdrawn with liberty to the appellants to institute a fresh suit in respect thereof if so advised. On June 10th, 1915, four of the appellants to His Majesty in Council, namely, the appellant in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 38 now before us and the three appellants in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 39 now before us applied to the Calcutta High Court under Order XLV, rule 15 praying that Court to direct that the order of His Majesty in Council might be transmitted for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, to issue a certificate as to the costs incurred in the Privy Council Appeal in the High Court and to direct the Subordinate Judge to proceed to ascertain the mesne profits due to the applicants. On that application the High Court made the following order "Let the decree of His Majesty in Council be sent down to the lower Court for execution." The decree was sent down accordingly. Fifteen applications for execution were then presented to the Subordinate Judge. Three of them related only to costs and we are not now concerned with them. Another application resulted in a compromise. The order of the Subordinate Judge with which we are concerned related to the remaining eleven applications. For reasons which will be stated hereafter all eleven applications were dismissed. One of the applicants filed no appeal in this Court. The remaining ten appealed. Two of the appeals have already been dismissed for default and the remaining eight appeals are now before us.

Applications for the partition of mahal

RAVENESHWAR PRASAD V. BAIJNATH GOENKA.

Bist Hazari were made to the Collector as long ago as 1876. It does not appear exactly what stage in these proceedings had been reached when the sale for arrears of revenue took place or when the suit was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge or when his decree was made, but it is common ground that before the decree was made the proceedings required by section 57 of the Estates Partition Act, 1897, had been held. The partition was completed in 1908 shortly after the decision of the Calcutta High Court. It appears that at the time of the decree the plaintiffs in the suit were still recorded in the books of the Collector as owners of the shares which they claimed in the suit. The respondent who purchased the mahal at the revenue sale did not obtain mutation of names in his favour until 1903. Under the partition the different plaintiffs in the suit were allotted other shares in lieu of their original shares in the parent estate. In some cases they obtained shares in the same villages, in other cases they obtained shares in different villages. The matter is complicated by the fact that several of the plaintiffs held shares not only in the ijmali share but also in the separate accounts and it is further complicated by the fact that the respondent also was the owner of interests in some of the separate accounts before he purchased the ijmali share at the revenue sale.

At this stage it is convenient to mention that when the suit was pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge some co-sharers in the ijmali share who had been impleaded as defendants applied to be made plaintiffs in the suit and orders seem to have been made by the Subordinate Judge that they should be made plaintiffs. That appears to have been the case with reference to the appellants in Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 81 and 131. All the papers are not before us but it appears that the appellants in these two appeals applied also for amendment of the plaint so that they too might obtain decrees for their separate shares. It is, however, doubtful whether the plaint ever was amended. The decree of the Subordinate Judge appears to give shares only to the original plaintiffs. In the view which I am disposed to take of this case it is unnecessary to pursue this matter further. For the purpose of my judgment I am prepared to assume that the plaint was amended as prayed.

It is also necessary to notice that the appellants in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 69 claim to be the representatives of certain defendants to the suit who never applied to be made plaintiffs. It is impossible to accede to the contention put forward by Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh on their behalf that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be treated as a decree in favour of all the holders of shares in the ijmali share. He sought to apply to the decree the analogy of decrees passed in suit for partition which can be enforced by all the persons found to be entitled to shares whether arrayed as plaintiffs or defendants in the suit. There can be no doubt that Miscellaneous Appeal No. 69 should be dismissed.

In consequence of the partition having been completed as stated above in 1908, the applicants for execution of the Order in Council have prayed not for possession of the shares specified in Schedule II to the plaint but for the estates or interests which according to them have by the partition been allotted to them in lieu of their original shares in the ijmali share. The Subordinate Judge dismissed all the applications on the ground that in consequence of the partition and on the authority of the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Krishna Roy v. Jawahir Singh (1), the applicants are not entitled by means of proceedings in the Execution Department to ask the Court to enquire and determine what estates or interests have been substituted by the partition for the shares originally claimed under Schedule II of the plaint in the suit. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the decree-holders could not get possession without bringing a regular suit to establish their title to the substituted estates or interests. He also held that all the applications except two, namely, those made by the appellants in Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 38 and 39, should be dismissed on the ground that the applicants had not applied to the Calcutta High Court under Order XLV, rule 15.

It appears to me that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge regarding Order XLV, rule 15 is correct and that those persons only (or their representatives) were entitled to apply to the Subordinate Judge for execution who had applied to the Calcutta High Court under Order XLV, rule 15. It may be that where a decree has been passed in favour of a number of persons jointly an application under Order XLV, rule 15 by one or more of them would be sufficient to entitle all of them to apply for execution in the Court below. But as explained above the suit in which the decree was passed was not a suit by several persons for possession of property to which they were jointly entitled. The claim was in reality a collection of claims by persons entitled to separate shares for possession of those separate shares and it is quite clear that each plaintiff or set of plaintiffs obtained by the decree a right to a separate share or separate shares. No single plaintiff is entitled to execute the decree on behalf of all of the plaintiffs. Each plaintiff must obtain possession of the share or shares to which he is entitled. The action taken by the plaintiffs themselves shows that they understood that each plaintiff must take out execution in respect of his own share. For these reasons I am of opinion that only those plaintiffs were entitled to apply to the Subordinate Judge for execution of the Order in Council who applied to the Calcutta High Court under Order XLV, rule 15, and obtained an order from that Court. In this view six of the appeals before us must be dismissed.

There remain Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 38 and 39, the appellants in which applied to the Calcutta High Court under Order XLV, rule 15. The question which we have to decide is whether they were entitled to ask the Subordinate Judge to ascertain in the Execution Department what estates and interests had been substituted for their original shares in the ijmali mahal and to give them possession of the substituted estates or interests. Counsel for the respondent, Baijnath Goenka, contended that the decree of the Subordinate Judge which was restored by the Order in Council is now incapable of execution, that the plaintiffs ought to have informed their Lordships of the Privy Council that the ijmali share had been partitioned in 1908 and that if they had done so their Lordships would not have contented themselves with restoring the decree of the Subordinate Judge but would have gone on to declare that the plaintiffs were entitled to the substituted shares. Counsel also contended that the decree of the Subordinate Judge was contrary to the provisions of section 26 of the Estates Partition Act, which provides that every decree affecting a parent estate made by a Civil Court after the estate has been declared under section 29 to be under partition but before the date specified in the notice served under section 94, shall be made in recognition of the proceedings in progress under the Act for partition of the estate and shall be framed in such manner that the decree may be applied to and carried out in reference to the separate estates which the Collector in his proceedings recorded under section 29 has ordered to be formed out of the parent estate. Counsel contended that if the attention of their Lordships had been drawn to these provisions they would have passed an order in compliance with them. It appears that the provisions of section 26 of the Estates Partition Act, 1897, and of the corresponding section in the earlier Act of 1876, have been more honoured in the breach than in the observance. The most experienced Legal Practitioner present in Court was unable to say that he had ever seen a decree passed in compliance with or even with direct reference to section 26 of the Act. Sub-section (2) of section 26 does not appear to apply to the case at all. Only sub-section (1) can be held to apply. At the time when the Subordinate Judge made his decree all that he could have done by way of compliance with section 26 sub-section (1) would have been to add to his decree a provision that the decree should be executed with reference to the separate estate which the Collector had ordered to be formed out of the parent estate and which might in due course subject to any objections taken and allowed in the partition proceedings be formed out of the parent estate. At the time when he made his decree the exact form which the partition would take had not been finally determined and it appears from certain papers which have been shown to us that in fact part of the order passed under section 29 of the Act was subsequently modified. It appears that it would have been impossible for the Subordinate Judge when he made his decree to have indicated the exact substituted shares to which his decree would apply. In other words the Subordinate Judge could have done no more than make a formal order that his decree should be executed in reference to the separate estates which might be formed at the partition. His omission to do this does not, in my opinion, oblige us to hold that his decree is altogether inoperative. If the attention of their Lordships of the Privy Council had been drawn to the fact that a partition had taken place in 1908, all that they could have done would have been to make a general direction that the decree should be executed with reference to the altered state of affairs. It was contended by Mr. Pugh that the Order in Council is at present inoperative and that the plaintiffs cannot obtain relief even by means of a separate suit. It appears to me to be quite clear that the plaintiffs must be entitled either by execution proceedings or by means of a separate suit to obtain relief. I cannot accept the suggestion that they should be required to apply to the Privy Council for amendment of the order. As I have already said, it appears to me that all that could be done by way of amendment would be to pass an order in general terms to the effect that the decree should be executed with reference to the altered state of affairs. In the case of Krishna Roy v Jawahir Singh (1), referred to above, the plaintiff had purchased a small share in Estate No. 831 and obtained a decree for possession against the defendants. Before he took out execution of the decree partition proceedings took place in which the interest in suit was converted into an Estate No. 2218. Instead of seeking to execute his decree he brought a separate suit for a declaration that he was entitled to Estate No. 2218, and it was held that the suit was not barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decree made in that suit does not appear to have been made in accordance with the Estates Partition Act, but the High Court did not hold that the plaintiff was on that account unable to establish his right to the substituted estate. All that they held was that the proper course to pursue was to bring a separate suit. Their decision recognises the right of a decree holder to have recourse to the substituted share so also does the Estates Partition Act. I am of opinion that the irregularity or informality in the decree of the Subordinate Judge in the present case which was restored by the Order in Council does not deprive the plaintiffs of their right to recover what has been substituted for the original shares decreed to them. The question whether the plaintiffs should proceed by separate suit or in the Execution Department is not a matter of much importance. Section 47, sub-section (2), of the present Code of Civil Procedure was intended to put an end to the scandal of persons being deprived of their rights by the difficulty of determining whether they should proceed in the Execution Department or by a regular suit. That sub-section provides that the Court may subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction treat a proceeding under that section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional Court-fees. It appears to me that if the decree of the Subordinate Judge is operative to any extent notwithstanding the non-compliance with section 26 of the Estates Partition Act there is no reason why the plaintiffs should not obtain their rights in the Execution Department. In my opinion Appeals Nos. 38 and 39 should be allowed and the Subordinate Judge should be directed to restore the applications of these appellants to the pending file and hold the necessary enquiries. In these two appeals I would order that the costs of this Court including in each case a hearing fee of three gold mohurs should be costs in the cause and should be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge. Some of the difficulties which will confront the Subordinate Judge have been brought to our notice in the course of the arguments. We find ourselves unable to deal with them or to give the Subordinate Judge any detailed instructions inasmuch as he took no evidence and held no enquiry whatever. He should ascertain exactly the questions of law and fact upon which the parties before him are at variance and should endeavour by his order to put an end to a litigation which has continued for a great number of years. I would dismiss Appeals Nos. 37, 54, 69, 81, 90, and 131 with costs and in each case I would allow a hearing fee of three gold mohurs.

Appeal, second—Tenure, whether permanent—Finding of fact—Landlord and tenant—Kabuliyat, construction of—Tenure, nature of—Heritable and permanent—Burden of proof.

The decision of the question whether a certain jote (tenancy) is a tenure or a raiya holding is a finding of fact which is not open to question in second appeal. [p. 513, col. 2.]

The question whether a tenure is a permanent tenure is not merely one of fact if it depends, at any rate to a large extent, on the construction of the kabuliyats executed from time to time by the tenant or his predecessors. [p. 513, col. 2.]

A permanent tenure may bear a variable rent. [p. 513, col. 2.]

Per Richardson, J.—Quere—Whether a non-transferable tenure can be a permanent tenure?

Per Walmsley, J.—The descent of a tenancy from father to son and then to the son's widow is not enough to establish that the tenancy is heritable. [p. 514, col. 2; p. 515, col. 1.]

A tenant who claims an hereditary right under a lease which does not contain the words "from generation to generation" has a heavy onus to discharge. [p. 515, col. 1.]

The right of alienation though not an essential feature of a permanent tenure, is commonly regarded as an invariable incident. [p. 515, col. 2.]

Per Curiam.—Where a tenancy was held for a long time and for a period of 70 years out of it only four kabuliyats were executed and the tenancy descended from father to son and then to the son's widow, but the kabuliyats bound the tenant to keep the trees intact and restrained him from making any transfer or partition of the lands and there were no words of heritability in the kabuliyats:

Held, that the tenancy was a non-permanent tenure. [p. 515, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—I confess that I have had some difficulty with this appeal and the analogous appeals which were argued along with it. I have been greatly impressed with what the Settlement Officer says in his judgment in the present case (paragraph 3) about the origin and special character of these jotes. He says that they are known as khud jotes and he observes with great force that the term is reminiscent of the khud kasht raiyats of an earlier period. He mentions other features in the evidence which go far to show that in the opinion at any rate of the landlord's officers, the tenants of these jotes possess rights which, to use a natural term, may be described as permanent residential rights. I have a strong suspicion that in spite of their present area the jotes were in their origin raiya holdings, or they may have grown out of smaller holdings of a raiya character. The special incidents now attached or sought to be attached to them by contract resemble very largely the ordinary incidents of a raiya holding at the present day. On the question, however, whether the jotes are tenures or raiya holdings, we are confronted with the concurrent findings of the Courts below that they are tenures. No attempt was made in the argument before us to displace that finding on any ground open in second appeal and it must, therefore, be accepted as final.

In the appeal before us, the tenant's rights being, as we must now take them to be, those of a tenure-holder, there is great difficulty in agreeing with the Courts below that the tenure is a permanent tenure. The question is not merely one of fact. It depends at any rate to a large extent on the construction of the kabuliyats executed from time to time by the tenant or his predecessors. It is a question of construction for instance whether the word "sharashari" or "temporary", which occurs in these documents or some of them, refers to the variability of the rent or the nature of the tenancy. The learned Special Judge in the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that while the tenure is permanent and heritable, the rent is variable and the tenure is not transferable. Now there is no inconsistency at all between a permanent tenure and a variable rent, but permanency and non-transferability are not so easily reconcilable. Section 179 of the Tenancy Act has no application because the tenure is not a mukarari tenure. If the tenure is permanent it falls under the provision in section 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which says that "Every permanent tenure shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be capable of being transferred and bequeathed in the same manner and to the same extent as other immoveable property." If this section be read with section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, it may be that, as the kabuliyats do not provide for re-entry by the landlord in case of breach of the condition against transfer, the condition is in any case void, whether the tenure is permanent or not. But, however that may be, I express no opinion on the point. Taking the terms of the series of kabuliyats as a whole, it is not easy to suppose that the kabuliyats or any of them is either creative of, or refers to, a permanent tenure.

The difficulty and responsibility of deciding in the first instance whether a particular tenancy is a tenure or raiya holding is often, in cases near the border line, enhanced by the fact that if the tenancy is held to be raiya the tenant will have permanent rights of occupancy, while if it is held to be a tenure it may almost necessarily follow that the tenure is not permanent. The problem is sometimes specially difficult in the case of leases of new lands which are to be brought under cultivation, because the position of the tenant at the inception of the tenancy may be very different from his position, it may be many years later, when the land has been successfully reclaimed and the question arises. At first it may not be to the landlord's interest to deny that the tenant is a raiya and there may be an understanding, probably on an informal basis, that he is a raiya. As time goes on it may be very much to the landlord's interest to assert that the tenant is a tenure-holder.

The present is a case in point. The dispute between the parties really turns on the question whether the jote is a tenure or a raiya holding and the decision on this question is not now open to review.

On the whole I am forced to the same conclusion as that arrived at by my learned brother and concur in the order which he proposes to make.

I may add that the relations between the landlord and his khud jote tenants appear to have been in the past of the friendliest character. I trust that the present controversy will not disturb the excellent relations hitherto existing and will not lead the landlord to treat his tenants with less consideration than he has hitherto done.

The judgments delivered in this case will govern the other analogous appeals.

In all these appeals the parties will bear their own costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is by the landlord, and arises out of an application under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The substance of the application is that the defendant-respondent's interest in a tenure has been entered in the record as permanent, whereas it should be only temporary.

The defendant pleaded that her interest was that of a raiya, and was permanent. The claim of raiya interest is no longer under discussion, and the question now is whether the tenure is permanent or not.

The Assistant Settlement Officer held that the tenure was permanent. On appeal the learned Special Judge upheld this decision with the qualifications that the tenure was not transferable and that the rent was liable to enhancement. The landlord now asks us to go further and hold that the tenure is not permanent. A permanent tenure is described in section 3 (8) of the Act as a tenure which is heritable and which is not held for a limited time.

I will deal first with the feature of heritability. Four kabuliyats have been laid before us, one produced by the defendant, and three by the landlord, the first executed in 1250 B. S. (1843 A. D.) and the other three in the years 1277, 1285 and 1295 B. S. From the evidence it appears that Rup Nath Das, who executed the first, was a benamidar for Bishnu Charan and that the second was executed by Bishnu's son Biseshwar, and the third and fourth by Biseshwar's widow, the present defendant. The learned Judge holds, and I think rightly, that the descent from father to son, and then to the son's widow, is not enough to establish the fact of herit-ability and he finds that heritability is proved by the oral statement of plaintiff's first witness. This statement is set out in full by the Settlement Officer, and I need not repeat it. The part of it on which special emphasis is laid is the sentence "why should the malik do an injustice by settling the jote with a new tenant." It appears to me, however, that these words do not go very far. The witness only means that the dead man's heir is recognized as having a moral claim to succeed to his father's rights; he does not mean that the heir has a legal right which the malik cannot ignore. Against this evidence we have the very important omission in the kabuliyats: not one of them contains the words from generation to generation. These words form a well known phrase, and the tenant who claims an hereditary right under a document which does not contain them has a heavy onus to discharge. Not only does the oral evidence just referred to fail to discharge that onus, but the same witness by his reference to the payment of nazarana at least suggests that succession of son to father is not a matter of right, but a matter of grace and payment. In my opinion, therefore, the feature of heritability is not proved.

Next as to the words "which is not held for a limited time." The finding of the Courts below is that the settlement of the tenure was permanent, but the settlement of the rent payable in respect of it was temporary. It is not necessary to consider whether such a contract is possible, because there are other terms in these kabuliyats which call for remark, and help to decide the true nature of the arrangement.

In the first place all the kabuliyats bind the tenant to keep the trees intact; and in the second place they all restrain him from making any transfer of the land. The last three add that he must not partition the lands. In the ordinary way a tenure-holder has the right to cut down trees, and the right of alienation, though not an essential feature of a permanent tenure, is commonly regarded as an invariable incident.

Next, the three later kabuliyats speak of a saradari and like the first they are for a term of years. They contain no clause to the effect that the rent only is temporary:

The most that can be said for them is that each in turn gives the tenant the right to enter into a fresh arrangement on terms to be fixed by the landlord. More important than this is the condition in the three later kabuliyats for the landlord's right of re-entry in the event of the tenant not entering into a fresh arrangement. It is true that this condition is not in the kabuliyat of 1250 B. S., but I think the learned Vakil for the appellant is right in asking us to look at the terms of the latest agreement rather than of the earliest. This condition cannot, I think, be reconciled with the defendant's claim for permanency and is by itself sufficient to prove that the tenure is held for a limited time. It seems to me impossible to hold in the face of such a condition that the temporary character of the agreement was limited only to the amount of rent. On the other hand, it is pointed out that the tenant has been in possession for a long time, and that for a period of 70 years only four kabuliyats, for terms aggregating 29 years, are produced. I fail to see that these facts alter the nature of the agreement between the parties, and it is to be remarked that the first kabuliyat is for an area less than one fourth of the area mentioned in the last kabuliyat. Repeated renewals of an agreement do not change the character of an agreement.

It is, I think, equally unsafe to draw any inference from the fact that the landlord has granted settlement again and again to the same man or to his successor-in-interest. Self-interest may be the explanation, or friendly relations between landlord and tenant.

In my opinion the decision of the learned Special Judge is wrong, and I would decree the appeal and order the entry in the Record of Rights to be corrected, that is to say, by substituting the word "non-permanent" for the words "permanent and heritable."

Appeals allowed.

PANKAJAMMAL—PLAINTIFF—

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA BY THE COLLECTOR OF

NORTH ARCOT AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF 4TH DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law and Usage—Ubhayam or festival, performance of, by female, right of—Burden of proof, question of, when evidence let in on both sides—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100 (a)—'Usage having the force of law,' meaning of—Private right, whether falls under s. 100 (a)—High Court—Appeal, second—Evidence of usage, decision on.

The right to perform an ubhayam or festival being a secular privilege unconnected with the right to honours, a female is not disqualified by reason of her sex from performing an ubhayam in a temple. [p. 516, col. 2.]

It would ordinarily be the duty of temple authorities to receive money that may be tendered to perform a festival from whomsoever it may come. [p. 516, col. 2.]

The burden of proving that none but a male can perform an ubhayam or festival is on the person setting up such a special custom. [p. 516, col. 2; p. 517, col. 1.]

In cases where evidence has been let in by both parties to a suit, the best course is for the Court to weigh the evidence as a whole without throwing the burden of proof on either party. [p. 517, col. 1.]

The expression 'usage having the force of law' in section 100 (a), Civil Procedure Code, should ordinarily be confined to the usages of the country or of the community, the law merchant and usages referred to in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865. It is doubtful whether questions as to private rights fall within the section. [p. 517, col. 1.]

Where the judgment of a Court of Appeal on a question of custom or usage is reversed by the High Court in second appeal on a preliminary point, it should not take on itself to examine the evidence as to usage as if it were hearing a first appeal, but should remand the case for disposal by the lower Appellate Court. [p. 517, col. 1.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar, dated 21st July 1915, in Second Appeal No. 2376 of 1914, preferred against the decree of the District Court, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 850 of 1913 (Original Suit No. 215 of 1912 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Ranipet).

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether the daughter of a Thathachari belonging to the Thandri family is disqualified from performing a festival in the Conjeevaram temple, by reason of the fact that she had been married into another family. The marriage may give her a different gotram, but it is not right to say that she ceases to belong to the family of her father on that account. She and her sons would be the heirs to her father's property. The right to perform a festival is a secular privilege, and has no connection with the right of Theerthams and other honours. The learned Judge in the Court below seems to have thought that the claim to perform the festival carried with it the right to Theerthams and to the other honours belonging to the Thathachari family. In this Court this portion of the judgment was not sought to be supported. It was argued that the right to perform a festival conferred an office and that such an office could be held only by a male member of the Thathachari's family. There is no analogy between the holding of a subordinate trusteeship like a kattalai dharmakartaship and the performance of a festival. The cases quoted relate to the former class and have no bearing on the latter. On the other hand, it has been held in this Court that a female is not incompetent by reason of her sex from claiming the archaka right. Tangirala Chiranjivi v. Raja Manikya Rao (1) and Rajeswari Ammal v. Subramania Archakar (2). It would ordinarily be the duty of the temple authorities to receive the money that may be tendered to perform a festival from whomsoever it may come. In Vengamuthu v. Pandaveswara Gurukul (3) it was held that such a contribution from a dancing girl should not be rejected. Prima facie, therefore, the daughter of the last ubayakkar would be entitled to ask the temple trustees to receive the expenses of the festival from her. If it is objected to that none but a male could perform such a festival, it is for those that set up the special custom to prove it. However, we do not want to decide this case on the ground that the defendants have not established their contention. We are clearly of opinion that the learned Judge is wrong in holding that the burden was on the plaintiff. In a case like this, when both sides have let in evidence, the best course would be to weigh the evidence as a whole without throwing the burden of proof on either party. In this view we must reverse the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and of the District Judge and remand the appeal to him for disposal on the merits.

Before we send the case down it is desirable to advert to the extreme contention that was put forward in this Court that in all cases, where evidence as to custom has been let in, we are bound to weigh such evidence and decide for ourselves upon the materials. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar, who came in at a later stage of the case, conceded that this contention is not supported by authority. The learned Vakil argued that the question whether on the facts as found, the Courts below were justified in saying that a custom has not been proved is a point on which the High Court is entitled to draw its own inference. To the proposition thus advanced, we see no objection. But we must point out that the value to be attached to the evidence let in, its reliability and in a measure its relevancy are all matters for the Court below and that the High Court would not be justified in weighing the evidence as if it were sitting to hear a first appeal.

It is open to doubt whether the expression 'a usage having the force of law' in section 100 (a) should not be confined to the usages of the country or of the community as suggested by Petheram, C. J., in Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh (4). Customs like presumption, the law merchant and usages like those referred to in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865 seem to have been in the contemplation of the Legislature. It seems doubtful whether a private right like the one we are considering falls within section 100, clause (a). However that may be, we feel no doubt that the High Court should not be called upon to examine the oral and documentary evidence relating to a private custom as if it were hearing a first appeal. For the reasons already given, we allow the second appeal and remand it for disposal on the merits. The costs will abide the result.

Execution—Decision on preliminary point—Appeal, whether lies—Practice of Calcutta High Court, whether to be followed by Patna High Court.

Where a judgment-debtor objected to execution on the grounds, first, that the decree was not capable of execution and, secondly, that there was nothing due under it, and the Court decided the first ground of objection against him:

Held, that no appeal lay against that decision before the second issue was gone into. [p. 518, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 5th December 1916.

Sir Ali Imam and Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Fakhruddin, Khurshaid Husnain and Jagannath Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken in this case that no appeal lies. The facts briefly are that the learned Subordinate Judge had before him two questions to consider—(1) Was the decree which he was asked to execute capable of execution? and (2) Was there anything due under it? The learned Subordinate Judge has decided the first issue against the judgment-debtor.

KOVVIDI SATTIRAJU v. PATAMSETTI VENKATASWAMI.

The judgment-debtor, therefore, wishes to appeal to this Court before the second issue is gone into. Whatever may be the rights of the matter in controversy it is quite certain that there has been a steady cursus curiæ in Calcutta that no appeal lies in such a case. Various authorities have been cited at length in the case of Kamini Debi v. Promotha Nath (1). The same view was taken in the Full Bench case Chanmalswami Rudraswami v. Gangadharappa Baslingappa (2).

It has constantly been said here that where there is a general practice sanctified by concurrent decisions in Calcutta we will not depart from it in Patna. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. Hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent back at once.

Hindu Law—Adoption by minor widow, validity of—Ratification of imperfect adoption, legality of—Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 2.

The age of capacity of a person, whether male or female, to make a valid adoption under Hindu Law commences at the age of 16, that is, on the completion of the 15th year. [p. 520, col. 1.]

A widow, therefore, has not the legal discretion to adopt a proper boy to her husband before she finishes the 15th year of her age. [p. 520, col. 2.]

It is only the widow's discretion exercised after she attains majority and is thus capable of legal discretion in civil matters that can validate the adoption made by her to her husband. The discretion cannot be replaced, when she is less than 15, by her guardian's intelligent and disinterested advice. [p. 520, col. 2.]

Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti, 13 M. 214; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 861, not approved.

Where a widow is directed by her husband to adopt a particular boy and she has no discretion in the matter, her adoption of that boy, even when she is under 15 years of age, is valid. [p. 521, col. 1.]

An imperfect adoption by a minor widow cannot be ratified by her after her attainment of majority. [p. 524, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The ratification of an adoption should not be interpreted loosely as covering estoppel, which debars the party from denying, or conduct, which would establish against him a consent when the adoption was made. The only doctrine that is akin to it in its relation to adoption is the definition of ratification given by Lord Watson in Stewart v. Kennedy, (1890) 15 A. C. 75, as the 'confirmation of an imperfect obligation by the party who was not legally bound by it.' [p. 523, col. 2; p. 524, col. 2; p. 525, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, dated the 31st December 1914, in Appeal Suit No. 119 of 1914, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 624 of 1912.

Mr. S. K. Parthasaradhy Aiyangar for Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The 2nd defendant is the appellant in this case. The plaintiff brought the suit for possession of the plaint lands as lessee from the 1st defendant who, the plaintiff alleges, was the adopted son of one Subbarayadu who died in 1907, having by his registered Will, executed shortly before his death, given authority to his widow, Viyyammal, about 11 years old at that time, to make an adoption, if, and when, she chooses. The 1st defendant is still a minor and the lease relied upon by the plaintiff was by his alleged adoptive mother's father acting as guardian of the 1st defendant and is dated July 1912. Viyyammal attained majority in February 1914, about 1½ years after this suit was brought. The 1st defendant's adoption is said to have taken place in May 1907 very soon after her husband's death. One of the defences raised in the case is that the 1st defendant was not validly adopted to Subbarayadu by Viyyammal and that, therefore, the plaintiff cannot maintain the suit as the 1st defendant's lessee. The District Munsif held that the 1st defendant's adoption was invalid and dismissed the suit.

KOVVIDI SATTIRAJU v. PATAMSETTI VENKATASWAMI.

I think it convenient to consider at this stage some of the important precedents on this point. (a) In Mondakini Dasi v. Adinath Dey (1) it was held that an adoption by a widow who was a minor at the time (that is, who had not attained her 18th year according to the Indian Majority Act) would be valid, provided the widow had attained sufficient maturity of understanding to comprehend the nature of the act, especially if her husband had indicated the boy to be adopted and left her no discretion in the matter of 1st defendant's adoption, and it is found by both Courts that (Viyyammal was only about 11 years old) she had not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to exercise a proper discretion as to the boy to be adopted. Hence the adoption was invalid if her discretion was a sine qua non. (b) In Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2), it was held that a 13 years' old widow had not sufficient discretion of her own to choose a proper boy for adoption, but that the "intelligent and disinterested guidance of her legal guardian seeking bona fide to provide for a spiritual necessity with due regard to her interest, so far as it is compatible with such necessity," can take the place of her own discretion. "There must, however, be cogent evidence of such intelligent and disinterested guidance." These observations were, however, obiter dicta as the adoption in that case was set aside on the ground that the consent of the widow of 13 years of age was obtained by coercion and she repudiated the adoption in the suit. (c) In Jumona Dassya v. Bamasoondari Dassya (3) it was held that a youth of 15 or 16 had attained years of discretion according to Hindu Law and is capable of giving permission to his widow to adopt though, not having attained the age of 18 years, he was a minor for most other purposes. (d) In Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (4) this Court (Davies and Benson, JJ.) held that an adoption made by a major widow under coercion is only voidable by her and can be ratified by her; but when that case went up on appeal to the Privy Council [Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Parthasarathy Appa Row (5)], the adoption was set aside on some other ground (namely, that the power given by the husband to the two widows jointly had lapsed by the death of one of them) and their Lordships had not to consider the question whether an adoption made under coercion can be ratified by a major widow. (e) In Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council state that a husband could not give power to anybody except his widow to make an adoption. I shall quote the following passages from that judgment:—"That no one can adopt a son to a dead man except his widow is such a rudimentary principle of Hindu Law, and one so constantly occurring in ordinary life, that it is difficult to suppose any educated man to be ignorant of it. That the widow's choice of a boy may be restricted in various ways, and among them by requiring the consent of persons named by the husband, is also familiar law." The learned District Munsif found as a fact in this case (a) that Viyyammal exercised no discretion in the matter of the adoption and (at her age at the time) was not capable of exercising any discretion; (b) that her father who acted as her guardian did not give disinterested advice to her in the matter of the adoption; (c) that the authority to adopt given by the husband required as a sine qua non the exercise of her own discretion that is, the power to adopt was so restricted by the husband that it could be exercised only according to her own discretion and that even if the substitution of the guardian's disinterested advice allowed by Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2) could be applied, there was no such disinterested advice given in this case, the advice (if any was given) having been very much interested.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge "quite" agreed with the District Munsif that Viyyammal was not at the time of the alleged adoption of an age which rendered her capable of exercising her own discretion in the matter of the adoption and that the advice of her legal guardian was not at all disinterested.

KOVVIDI SATTIRAJU C. PATAMSETTI VENKATASWAMI.

He did not deal with sufficient clearness with the question whether the power given to her by her husband did not require as a sine qua non the exercise of her own discretion. He found that Viyyammal's father did not give her an opportunity to exercise her own discretion in the matter and did not even consult her about the desirability of adopting a boy. But he remanded the suit to the District Munsif in order that, as she was, on the date of the Subordinate Judge's judgment, nearly 19 years old and was in a position to state whether she would ratify the act that was done when she was 11 years old, she might be asked whether she ratified the act of adoption and that then the suit might be decided. Against this remand order, the present appeal has been filed by the contesting defendants. Several interesting questions of Hindu Law were discussed during the course of the arguments in this case, and I shall shortly state my views thereon, though I believe that for the decision of this case, it is unnecessary to express a final opinion upon most of these questions.

The Indian Majority Act fixing 18 years as the age of majority says in section 2: "Nothing herein contained shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the following matters:—(a) marriage, dower, divorce and adoption." We have, therefore, to turn to the Hindu Law as to the age of capacity of a person to make a valid adoption. The age of majority for both males and females according to Hindu Law, in my opinion, commences at the age of 16 (Praptetu Shodase Varshe), that is, on the completion of the fifteenth year. [See Methoormohun Roy v. Scorendro Narain Deb (7) and also Madhusudhan Manji v. Debi Govinda Newgee (8).] Though the parents can give a girl in marriage before she completes her fifteenth year, the real and final marriage in the days of the old Hindu Law took place when both bride and bridegroom were majors over 15 years of age. Even when the damsel becomes "marriageable", that is has attained her 15th year, she is recommended in Chapter 9, Sloka 90 of Manu, to wait three years before she chooses for herself; even that is only a moral precept as is shown by the next Sloka 91, which says that she does not commit any offence if she chooses her bridegroom after she attains her marriageable age. The gloss of "eight years" in Sloka 88 of Manu is that of the ingenious commentator and is not in the text. (See also Sloka 93, which says that the father's dominion ceases when the damsel is of full marriageable age.) In the Privy Council case of Jumona Dassya v. Bama-soondari Dassya (3), also, it is said that a male youth of the age of 15, of "the full age of adolescence", is regarded as having attained the age of discretion according to Hindu Law and capable of adopting. I do not think that Mr. Justice Mitter in Rajendro Narain Lahoree v. Sooroda Soonduree Dabee (9) intended to state that even before 15, a male Hindu could adopt, and if he meant it, I respectfully dissent from that opinion. I am also clear that, according to Hindu Law, a widow has not got the legal discretion to adopt a proper boy to her husband before she finishes the 15th year of her age. The obiter dictum also in Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2) is that a widow of 13 years was not possessed of such discretion. There is nothing in that judgment to indicate that she is capable of exercising such discretion before she completes her 15th year. The Privy Council having held in Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (6) that the only person who could make an adoption to her husband is the widow, I am inclined to hold that the obiter dictum in Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2), that her discretion could be replaced (when she is less than 15) by her guardian's intelligent and disinterested advice, cannot be supported. Apart from the decision of the Privy Council also, I am clear on the Hindu Law that it is only the widow's discretion exercised after she attains majority and is thus capable of legal discretion in civil matters that can validate the adoption made by her to her husband. I am further of opinion that the dictum in KOVVIDI SATTIRAJU v. PATAMSETTI VANKATASWAMI.

Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (4) (the decision in which as I said was reversed by the Privy Council on another point) that an adoption under coercion may be ratified just as a contract under coercion can be ratified is not, with the greatest respect, sustainable as the act of adoption is not an act in the nature of a contract and the validity of an act changing the status of a person cannot be made to remain in suspense at the option of the actors in the transaction. The question of coercion and voidability again does not arise in the present case. It is not alleged that the adoption of Viyyammal was brought about through coercion and hence is voidable, but the contention is that she was incompetent to give a valid legal consent to take a boy in adoption and to accept the gift made of a boy in adoption to her husband having then not attained the legal age of discretion according to the Hindu Law. The analogy applicable (if analogy from the law of contract is at all legitimate) is rather that of a contract made by a minor than that of a contract made by a major under coercion.

Even assuming for the sake of argument (a) that Viyyammal's guardian's advice, if disinterestedly given, could supply the place of her own consent and discretion, (b) that the Hindu Law does not require her to have passed her 15th year before she could make a valid adoption, I must hold, on the finding that she was not asked her consent at all and that her guardian's advice was not disinterested, that the adoption was wholly invalid and could not be ratified. I am also clear that if her consent was an indispensable requirement under her husband's Will, her guardian's advice cannot be substituted for it. Where the widow was directed to adopt a particular boy by her husband and she had no discretion at all in the matter, then it may be that she might have validly adopted that particular boy even though she was less than 15. (See Mondakini Dasi v. Adinath Dey (1).

Before concluding, I should like to fortify myself with the opinions of the two text writers (whom I consider as the best Sanskritists among English knowing Hindu Lawyers) on the questions of minority and the age of competence to adopt. Jogendra Chunder Ghose says in his book on Hindu Law at page 851: "There is a divergence among Bengal and Benares writers about the age of majority under Hindu Law. The former says that it is the beginning and the latter that it is the end of the 16th year. The text of Angira shows that the Bengal writers are right." And then he quotes at page 855 texts of Angira, Manu, Vishnu, Sankha, Lakhita, Narada and Brahaspati, which, read as a whole, clearly establish that till the end of the 15th year (Una Shodesa) a person is a bala and then become a major on entering the 16th year. At page 584 the learned author says:—"The Privy Council have held that a minor of the age of 15 or 16 can give a valid permission to his wife to adopt. Mr. Mayne has interpreted the judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter on this matter to hold that a boy between the years of 10 and 16 can adopt. But the act of taking in adoption is not only a religious act but a legal transaction (vyavahara) and one who has not attained the 16th year is incapable of validly entering into such a transaction under the Hindu Law. (See Narada, XIII, 32 to 36)." I shall now quote a few passages on the Hindu Law of adoption, Tagore Law Lectures, 1888, by Golap Chandra Sarkar Sastry, M.A., B. L. At page 207 et seq. that learned author says:—"An important question arises whether there is any limit as to the minimum age under which a person should not be permitted to adopt. The question is beset with considerable difficulty in consequence of there being no express rule of Hindu Law on the matter; and the solution of it must, therefore, depend upon general principles of law and analogies." "It is worthy of remark here that as adoption imitates nature, the relative age of the adoptor and the adoptee should be such that the one may be looked upon as the son of the other. Accordingly it was required by Roman Law that the adoptor should be older than the person adopted by full puberty, that is, 18 years. The same thing appears to be implied by Saunaka's text, which says that the boy adopted should bear the reflection of a son, though it has been explained by Nanda Pandita in quite a different way. He says that the boy should be one who is capable of being begotten on his natural mother by the adoptive father. This explanation is, no doubt, given for a different purpose but it has also an important bearing on this question. Judged by this test an adoption by a minor appears most unreasonable." "The boy adopted is entitled to become an heir not only of the adoptor but also of his relations and to become his co-parcener under the Mitakshara school. Therefore, the same reasons that require majority of a man for his competency to bequeath his property by a Will, apply with greater force to an adoption; for both are acts requiring judgment and reflection." "The religious duty of adoption attaches to a married man failing to get male issue. And regard being had to the provisions of the Codes, relating to the religious duties in the successive stages of life, there cannot be any doubt that a man cannot contract a marriage during his minority without a breach of religious duties. He is to commence the study of the sacred literature at the 8th year (Manu II, 36), to prosecute his studies for a period at the lowest of 12 or 9 years (Manu III, 1) and after the studentship is over, he is to become a householder by marrying a damsel before her puberty. He may, on the lowest calculation, get a son at the age of 20, and failing to get one, may adopt. It follows, therefore, that religious considerations can by no means be put forward for supporting an adoption by a minor." "There is nothing to be found in the Shastras contemplating marriage by a man in his minority. The Hindu Law does nowhere provide guardianship of a male for the purpose of his marriage. On the other hand, its provisions on the subject show that a man is to choose his own wife and to maintain and protect her himself. A perusal of the prescribed ceremonial law of marriage cannot leave any doubt on the mind that the bridegroom passing through the rites must be a grown-up man of mature understanding. Manu ordains 'a man aged 30 years may marry a girl of 12 years; or a man of 24 years a damsel of 8; but if he finishes his studentship earlier, let him marry earlier.' Whatever interpretation you may put upon this passage, it shows beyond the shadow of a doubt that the marriage of men during minority cannot be justified on religious grounds. Far less can an adoption by a minor be supported by religious considerations." At page 249 in the same work it is said: "An act of adoption by a widow, which she is not legally bound to perform, which is not conducive to her spiritual welfare" (as "a widow may attain to heaven by practising religious austerities though destitute of male issue") "but which is highly detrimental to her temporal interests by causing divestment of her estate, must, in order to be legally binding on her, be shown to be done by her as a perfectly free agent." "When an adoption by a young widow is set up against her, the Court will expect clear evidence that at the time she adopted, she was fully informed of those rights and of the effect of the act of adoption upon them." "Regard being had to the above principles, it appears to be clear that an adoption by an infant widow, if not ab initio void, is voidable in law." "To hold that an adoption in which an infant widow is caused to take a part mechanically is valid in law, would be legalizing a pious fraud; for it must virtually be the act of those under whose custody the infant widow may be placed, and who abuse the authority they possess over the widow by making her to adopt when she is incapable of understanding the effects of the act on her own rights, apprehending that she may refuse to do so, after attaining majority, being influenced more by her personal interests than by the pious duty of adopting a son to her deceased husband. A Bombay Sastri gave his opinion that a widow while under puberty cannot adopt. (See Steele's Law and Customs, page 48.) The reason for the rule may be that she is incompetent to bring forth a son then, an adoption by a woman being supposed to be analogous to the production of a son". Then the author refers to the absurdity of the idea of a girl having a fictional son when she is naturally incapable of having a real son. Though I have quoted at length these two writers to support my views as against the views in Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2), Rajendro Narain Lahoree v. Saroda Soonduree Dabee (9) and Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (4), I think, on the facts found in this case by both the lower Courts, that there is no valid adoption even if the dicta found in these cases are accepted in their entirety. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and restore the decree of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

KOVVIDI SATTIRAJU v. PATAMSETTI VENKATASWAMI.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with the conclusions reached in my learned brother's judgment, which I have had the advantage of reading. But I prefer to rest my decision on narrower grounds.

Plaintiff sued 2nd to 8th defendants for possession of certain properties, alleging that he held them on lease granted by the guardian of 1st defendant, alleged adopted son of one Subbarayudu. Second to eighth defendants, who claim under Subbarayudu, now deceased, denied that 1st defendant had been validly adopted. The adoption is said to have been made by Viyyammal, widow of Subbarayudu, in pursuance of a permission to adopt contained in his Will. First defendant is Viyyamma's brother. The first question is whether 1st defendant had been validly adopted, as he alleges, in 1907 before the plaintiff's lease in 1912.

In 1907 Viyyammal was aged between eleven and twelve and I respectfully adopt my learned brother's reasons for holding that for the purpose of adoption she was still a minor. No clear authority having been shown for the view that with reference to any special period of minority she had attained competency to adopt at the time in question, the decisions in Mondakini Dasi v. Adinath Dey (1) and Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2) are relevant. No doubt in each a decision as to the circumstances in which a minor widow could adopt was unnecessary since in the one the boy to be adopted was specified in the Will containing the authority to adopt and in the other the adoption was held to have been procured by coercion. But in the absence of any more recent or direct authority, the conclusion based on these two cases must be that "sufficient maturity of understanding to enable the widow to comprehend the nature of her act" is necessary, and further that, as this Court held in the second, there must be "cogent evidence of her having acted under the intelligent and disinterested guidance of her legal guardian seeking bona fide to provide for a spiritual necessity with due regard for her interest so far as it is compatible with such necessity." I agree with my learned brother that in the present case the lower Court's findings of fact entail that the adoption in 1907 was invalid.

There is more room for controversy in connection with the remainder of its judgment, in which it remanded the case in order that Viyyammal might be impleaded and a re-trial might be held with reference to the possibility of her having validated or being able and willing to validate the adoption with effect from a date prior to plaintiff's lease. This remand will plainly be useless, if no such validation is legally possible. We have had Viyyamma made a party to the appeal, and she supported the contentions of plaintiff and 1st defendant.

The question is one of some difficulty, regarding which there is very little authority: and the value of that authority is impaired by the fact that in some cases the term "ratification" is used loosely, apparently as equivalent to conduct which would amount to evidence that a valid adoption had been made, or to an estoppel against the denial of one. Again we clearly have no concern with such interpretations of the term as that by Lord Macnaghten in Stewart v. Kennedy (10), where its use in a private letter was in question; or with cases of acceptance by one person of the acts of another, as for instance of an agent or guardian. What plaintiff requires is judicial recognition or ratification or some doctrine akin to it, as applicable to the case before us; such a doctrine in fact as is implied in the definition of ratification given by Lord Watson in the case just referred to; to quote the relevant portion of it, "the confirmation of an imperfect obligation by the party, who was not legally bound by it." I refer to a doctrine akin to ratification, because the accuracy of the description of an adoption as an obligation cannot be assumed. It is further material with reference to Indian Law that this definition is applicable to no power ordinarily exercisable by a minor, because a minor can incur no sort of obligation during minority, his contractual acts being void ab initio. Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (11) and Navakoti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty (12).

The case of an adoption by a minor widow is sui generis. The decisions in Mondakini Dasi v. Adinath Dey (1) and Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2), already referred to, and that in Amrito Lal Dutt v. Surnomoye Dasi (6) show that notwithstanding her minority, the legal act can and must be performed by her, not by her guardian on her behalf. This is borne out in the present case by the terms of the authority under which the widow professed to act, which empowered her, not only to choose the boy to be adopted, but also to decide whether there should be an adoption at all. Does the right of independent action, conceded to the minor in this matter, place her act on the same footing as that of an adult with reference to ratification or any similar doctrine? It seems to me that it cannot do so, where, as here, the defect in the original act, which has to be repaired, consists in the failure to obtain the guardian's disinterested advice. For though the grounds on which such advice was insisted on by this Court in Ranganayakamma v. Alwar Setti (2) are not stated, that case to my mind lays down a condition precedent, which must be fulfilled before the act of the minor, a generally incapacitated person, can have any degree of validity, and does not, like the cases dealing with adult purdanashin ladies, merely lay down a rule of evidence. If the minor widow's act is ab initio totally invalid for want of independent advice, it cannot be validated later by anything of the nature of ratification.

The foregoing assumes that an adult widow can validate an adoption originally imperfect by subsequent conduct. That position also, however, is in my opinion unsustainable. It is supported by one authority only [Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (4)]. It is material that no one's interest was prejudicially affected in that case by the subsequent ratification in consequence of anything which happened before it, and that the lady, who made the adoption, was dead when the litigation began. And accordingly when the Court had found that during the years, for which she lived after the ceremony she fully agreed to the adoption and was anxious to establish it, it would naturally strive to uphold it. It did so very shortly on the grounds that Hindu Law did not treat an adoption as void on account of coercion, the objection under consideration, and that under the Law of Contract, it would be only voidable. This conclusion was reached without reference to the decisions to be cited infra and it was not disputed when the case went on appeal to the Privy Council, the judgment there proceeding on other grounds.

The decisions in question were given in Bombay; and no doubt they deal directly with the ratification of an imperfect adoption, not by the widow who made it but by the person, in whom the inheritance had vested and whose consent to an adoption has been held essential to its validity in that Presidency. They do not, however, turn on any merely local conception of the effect of an adoption, in so far as they are relevant for the present purpose; that is, in so far as they deal with the possibility of validation by subsequent acts or conduct. That possibility is no doubt recognised in Payapa Akkapa Patel v. Appanna (13), where subsequent ratification by conduct or acquiescence on the part of the person] in whom the estate was vested by inheritance is referred to, as one condition of the validity of an adoption and as an alternative to his contemporaneous consent. But it must be added with all respect that the reference to ratification was merely obiter, since none was relied on in the case before the Court, and that it is hardly reconcilable with the marked insistence on the contemporaneous character of the consent to be required in the portion of the judgment in which consent is dealt with. It is significant that of the cases relied on by Ranade, J., as authorising ratification, three were evidently cases of estoppel and the fourth, Rajendro Nath Holdar v. Jogendro Nath Banerjee (14), was decided mainly with reference to the conclusion, based inter alia on the conduct of members of the family, that the Will containing the authority to adopt was genuine; and it is, therefore, possible that the learned Judge referred loosely to ratification as covering estoppels, which debarred the party from denying, or conduct, which would establish against him, a consent when the adoption was made. This interpretation of the judgment is supported by the absence of any attempt to reconcile the portion of it relating to ratification with the previous Full Bench decision, Vasudeo Vishnu Manohar v. Ramchandra Vinayak Modak (15), in which Ranade, J., had concurred, though on grounds of his own. His colleagues held that in the words of Farran, C. J.: "The adoption in question must have been either valid or invalid at the time it took place and its validity could not depend on the subsequent action of one of the persons, in whom the estate had vested and who was alleged to have consented later." As Fulton, J., observed, there was at that date no authority for holding that subsequent assent could validate an adoption, which was not valid when made. I am not able in the circumstances already stated to accept the later Madras decision above referred to, as conclusive in favour of an application of the doctrine of ratification, which appears to be objectionable on its merits. I, therefore, concur with my learned brother in deciding against it.

The result is that the appeal is allowed with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court and the decree of the District Munsif restored.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—In this case three junior members of a joint Mitakshara family sought to redeem a mortgage. In the suit which had been brought upon that mortgage their fathers had been made parties and the litigation had ended in the sale of the mortgaged property.

Of the three plaintiffs it has been found that plaintiff No. 3 was not born at the time of the decree and sale. In respect of the plaintiff No. 1 it has been found that the mortgagee had no notice of his existence. These two cases, therefore, both upon the authorities and upon the law failed and there can be no doubt whatever that the suit was rightly dismissed.

With regard to plaintiff No. 2 the finding is that he was a party in another mortgage suit which was tried along with the mortgage suit which ended in this sale and that he actually prosecuted the defence and looked after both cases. No room, therefore, is left for any possible finding that this plaintiff No. 2 was intentionally omitted from the mortgage suit in order to defeat his right to redeem, and it is only in such cases that any concession has been made by this Court in favour of a son seeking to redeem his father's mortgage after sale. Four Judges of this Court* have concurred in holding that even if the mortgagee has notice of the existence of a son, the son has

The effect of a C. I. F. contract is that the buyer under it is entitled to the documents of title only on payment of the money due on those documents. Until then, he has no right to the goods. [p. 529, col. 2.]

Where the documents of title are made out to the order of the shippers vendors, the buyer does not acquire any right to the goods before he obtains the documents of title in exchange for payment and a contract of that description is not overridden by section 78 of the Contract Act which expressly reserves from its operation any special contract which the parties may enter into and impliedly accept the ordinary incidents attached to it by mercantile usage. A buyer who had contracted for the supply of goods by an enemy firm before the commencement of hostilities under a C. I. The contract had become impossible of performance and void by the combined operation of section 56 of the Contract Act and the Proclamation of 12th September 1914. [p. 530, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated the 14th March 1916, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in Civil Suit No. 396 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of BAKEWELL, J.—The plaint in this case recites two indents, whereby the plaintiffs instructed an Austrian firm, of whom the 1st defendant was the agent, to import certain goods for the plaintiffs on C. I. F. contracts, and alleges that in July 1914 the plaintiffs accepted drafts drawn upon them by this firm and payable upon delivery of the shipping documents, but that the goods had been shipped in a German vessel which, after the outbreak of war, was detained at Colombo by the Crown. The plaint also alleges that the property in the goods became vested in the plaintiffs by appropriation to the contracts and by the plaintiffs according their assent to the appropriation by accepting the drafts. The drafts are addressed to "Mr. Soorthingjee Sakalchand, Madras, in case of need with Mr. Muhammad Narasudeen, Madras", and the indents authorise the latter, who is the 1st defendant, upon the plaintiffs' failure to pay the drafts to sell the documents or goods. The drafts accepted by the plaintiffs were originally held by the National Bank of India as agents for collection of the Austrian firm, and they were also in possession of the bills of lading which were drawn "to order" and had been endorsed by that firm in blank. The plaint alleges that the plaintiffs were always ready and willing to pay the drafts as soon as there was a prospect of the goods being delivered in Madras, and that the first defendant waived any delay in payment. But nevertheless, the first defendant paid the amount of the drafts to the Bank and obtained the shipping documents without informing the plaintiffs and by a collusive sale transferred the goods to the 2nd defendant. The plaintiffs' case, therefore, is that the defendants have obtained possession of goods belonging to the plaintiffs by means of a trick played upon a person who held the goods on behalf of the plaintiffs,

SOORTHINGJEE SAKALCHAND V. MAHOMED NASURUDEEN.

In the first place, it is clear that the foreign vendor of the goods by taking the bills of lading to order retained the power of dealing with the goods and the authority of his agents, the National Bank, was to deliver the documents of title only on payment of the price. The contract between the parties was, therefore, wholly executory, the vendor had still to deliver the documents and the purchaser had still to pay the price, when war was declared. I think that it is clear that such a contract is rendered void by the outbreak of the war, on the ground that it involved trading with the enemy. [See Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. (1). and Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines Limited (2).] The Royal Proclamation of the 5th August 1914, which was extended to the monarchy of Austria-Hungary by a further proclamation, dated 12th August 1914, recites that it is contrary to law to trade or have any commercial intercourse with any person resident or carrying on business in that country and warns all persons not to obtain goods from any such person, "not to trade in or carry any goods, wares, or merchandise, destined for or coming from the said Empire or from any person resident, carrying on business or being therein." These proclamations were superseded by a further proclamation dated 12th September 1914, which contains the following prohibitions:—"5 (1) not to pay any sum of money to or for the benefit of an enemy." "5 (4) not to accept, pay or otherwise deal with any negotiable instrument which is held by or on behalf of an enemy."

I think that it is clear that, under those proclamations, the plaintiffs were prohibited from paying and the Bank from receiving the sums specified in the drafts accepted by the former and that delivery of the goods was also prohibited, that such payment and delivery became criminal acts, and the original contracts became unlawful and impossible of performance and void (Contract Act, section 55). The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, set up the suit contracts as conferring any right upon them.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs argued that the goods in question had been released by the Colombo Prize Court, on the strength of the documentary and other evidence which he put in, but the only evidence which I can entertain of the proceedings of that Court is a duly certified copy of its records and as the record now stands, there is no evidence as to whether that Court has passed any orders with respect to these goods. I refused to grant an adjournment of the hearing made in the course of the trial because there has been previous litigation between the parties with respect to the same goods, and the plaintiffs have had ample time and opportunity to procure evidence. The Crown having admittedly seized the goods as prize and there being no evidence that they have been released, the plaintiffs have failed to prove their title to them and the suit also fails for this reason.

From some of the documents which have been put in, it would appear that the goods in question were sent to Madras in the vessel in which they had been originally shipped, that the bills of lading were returned to the National Bank, and that a local firm were acting as agents of the Colombo Prize Court with respect to these goods, and these facts are consistent with an order of that Court condemning the goods as enemy goods. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs argued that, if this order had been made and if that Court had instructed its agents to sell to the plaintiffs at the invoice price, the defendants were liable to the plaintiffs for fraudulently obtaining a sale to themselves. It is sufficient to say that this is not the case alleged in the plaint, which is based upon plaintiffs' title to the goods under their contract of sale, and after the protracted litigation between the parties, the plaintiffs cannot be allowed at this stage to set up a new case.

Before judgment was delivered Counsel for plaintiffs applied again for an adjournment on the ground that they had received information that an order had been made on 15th August last for the release of those goods—that is no explanation of the delay in obtaining this evidence and I refuse the application.

The suit is dismissed with costs. I refuse two sets of costs, there is no reason for the separate appearance of the defendants who have the same interest.

I cannot make any order in this suit with respect to the disposal of the goods in view of future proceedings.

Messrs. D. Chamier and M. D. Deva Doss (instructed by Messrs. Short and Bewes & Co.), for the Appellants.—The contract to sell bangles has become an executed contract and the declaration of war has no effect upon the rights of the parties. The samples were shown to the purchasers and they gave a draft for payment of the amount.

Under the Indian law the property in the goods vested in the plaintiffs immediately after the price was settled and the draft given, though its payment may be postponed to a distant date. See section 78 of the Indian Contract Act.

The decision in Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. (1) does not apply, because it is a decision on the Sale of Goods Act which was entirely different from sections 77 and 78 of the Indian Contract Act.

In G. C. Sett v. Madhoram Hurdeodass (3) Mr. Justice Chaudhuri says that the effect of the declaration of war was only to suspend the contract and not entirely to avoid it. Motishaw & Co. v. Mercantile Bank of India (4) is a similar case.

The first defendant is personally liable, though not the Austrian firm, and the plaint may be permitted to be amended.

Messrs. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar, V. V. Srinivasa Aiyengar and A. Duraiswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—This is what is called a C. I. F. contract. The purchaser is entitled to the goods and the right in them passes to him only on payment of the price. The fact that goods arrived in the port does not make any difference. Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. (1).

Here in this case, part of the contract remains unperformed, the documents of title had to be delivered by the Austrian firm. Until, that is done, the contract is not complete. Immediately after the declaration of war, the agency of the National Bank had ceased and the performance of the contract has become unlawful.

The case in G. C. Sett v. Madhoram Hurdeodass (3) has no application. Also that reported as Motishaw & Co. v. Mercantile Bank of India (4), which is a case of a bill of exchange in which both parties were British subjects.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, dismissing the plaintiff's suit which was instituted with the object of recovering a certain quantity of glass bangles from the defendants. The 1st defendant was an agent of an Austrian firm and in his capacity as such agent entered into a contract with the plaintiff for the supply of glass bangles. The contract was entered into some time in April or May 1914 and the plaintiff accepted two drafts for the price of the goods on 22nd July of that year. War was declared with Austria on the 12th August and the steamer "Steinturn", in which the goods were shipped, arrived in Ceylon on the 15th of August, that is, three days after the declaration of the war. It is sufficiently clear that the cargo which was at first detained by the Government was subsequently released, and the formal order of release so far as these goods were concerned was passed on the 26th of August 1914. The bills of lading were in the possession of the National Bank of India in Madras, who acted as agents for the collection of the drafts and for the purpose of making over the documents relating to these goods as agents of the Austrian firm. The bills were payable on the 22nd of August; the goods have not yet been delivered to the plaintiff and the drafts have not been paid.

Mr. Justice Bakewell has held that since the performance of the contract became wholly void on account of the outbreak of the war with Austria and as by virtue of the Royal Proclamation issued on the 5th of August 1914 and 12th September 1914 it became unlawful to trade with the enemy, the suit of the plaintiff for recovery of the goods could not be maintained. Section 56 of the Contract Act seems to me to be perfectly clear on the point. It declares that "a contract to do an act which, after the contract is made, becomes impossible, or by reason of some event which the promisor could not prevent, unlawful, becomes void when the act becomes impossible or unlawful."

It is argued by Mr. Chamier on behalf of the appellant that we must treat this case as one of 'executed' contract because the Austrian Firm, he says, have done their part of the contract and all that remains is for the plaintiff to perform his part which he has been ready and willing to do. But that is not the correct position. The Austrian Firm has yet to deliver the documents, which, as pointed out in a number of decisions are the symbol for the goods, and the plaintiff has to pay the purchase-money to the enemy firm. The agency of the National Bank must be taken to have been terminated by the declaration of the war. They are no longer the agents of the Austrian Firm for the purpose either of delivering the documents or of receiving the money due upon those documents. The mere fact that the goods have arrived and are now within the limits of British India can make no difference in this respect as the further performance of the contract has now become impossible or unlawful. The Proclamation of the 12th of September says: "(2) Not to compromise or give security for the payment of any debt or other sum of money with or for the benefit of an enemy.

(3) Not to act on behalf of an enemy in drawing, accepting, presenting for acceptance or payment, negotiating or otherwise dealing with any negotiable instrument.

(4) Not to accept, pay or otherwise deal with any negotiable instrument which is held by or on behalf of the enemy."

The result of that proclamation is clearly to make it unlawful on the part of the plaintiff to pay any money to the Austrian Firm or to receive any goods from them in return for such payment. This is the effect of the decision in Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. (1). But it is argued by Mr. Chamier that the property in the goods had passed to the plaintiff before the declaration of the war, and this he seeks to make out on the facts that the samples were shown to the plaintiff at the time he accepted the draft and the goods had been shipped before war was declared. We do not think that this is a correct contention. The contract is what is known in commercial circles as a C. I. F. contract the effect of which as held in a number of decisions of the English Courts and very fully discussed in the case which has been mentioned is that the buyer under such a contract is entitled to the documents of title on payment of the money due on those documents. Until then it cannot be said that he has any right to the goods. It is stated by Justice Scrutton in the same case at page 387 of the report: "I understand the effect of those judgments to be that where the seller by taking the bills of lading in his own name or to his own order has reserved the jus disponendi or power of dealing with the goods, the property does not pass on shipment, but is vested in the vendor until he receives payment from the buyer in exchange for the documents of title."

The documents in this case are made out to the order of the shippers and, therefore, it cannot be said that the plaintiff acquired any right to the goods before he obtained the documents of title in exchange for payment.

It was strenuously argued by Mr. Chamier that this decision is based on the Sale of Goods Act in England and that the Indian Contract Act lays down the law differently, and he referred us to sections 78 and 83. The last clause of section 78 says: "If the parties agree, expressly or by implication, that the payment or delivery, or both, shall be postponed, the property passes as soon as the proposal for sale is accepted." But then this is subject to any special contract which the parties may enter into and if the effect of a C. I. F. contract be as it is laid down in the English cases, that cannot be said to be overridden by anything in section 78. The parties to a contract like this, must be taken to have accepted the ordinary incidents which are attached to such contracts by mercantile usage. Section 83 does not seem to us to touch the point at all. It only says that the goods which are not ascertained at the time of making the agreement for sale may be appropriated afterwards by the consent of the parties. Of the two Indian decisions which have been referred to in the course of the argument, one is a decision of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri of the Calcutta High Court in G. C. Sett v. Madhoram Hurdeodass (3). Reliance was placed by the appellants on a statement at page 544:

"Such contracts even with an alien enemy are merely suspended during the war as regards the right to performance and right of action, and are avoided or dissolved only in certain circumstances, among them, if its performance necessitates intercourse with the enemy during the war." This is laid down on the authority of Esposito v. Bowden (5). Now, even if that dictum was applicable to the case under our consideration it does not appear how it would help the plaintiff in any way. The suit will still be liable to be dismissed as it could not be maintained during the continuance of the war. The decision of the Bombay High Court reported as Motishaw & Co. v. Mercantile Bank of India (4) was also referred to. But that was a suit on a bill of exchange, the parties to which were both British subjects. That is sufficient to distinguish that case from the present. I may here mention that Mr. Chamier contended that in this case not only was the Austrian Firm liable on the contract but also the first defendant in his personal capacity and he asked us to permit him to amend the plaint so that he might obtain relief against the first defendant apart from his capacity as agent of the Austrian Firm. But this is inconsistent with the case sought to be made out in the plaint. The suit was brought against the first defendant as agent of the Austrian Firm and this is made clear in paragraph 3 of the plaint. Mr. Chamier also put forward another argument that since the Government has released the goods, that will have the effect of reviving the contract or renewing the validity of the contract although it had become void before the order of release was passed. That cannot be taken to be the effect of the order of release. Its only effect is that the Government withdraws its hands so that any party entitled to the goods may establish his right to them. Mr. Chamier in the course of his argument, asked us what will become of the goods: to whom will they go? It is not necessary in this suit to answer that question. The plaintiff's contract became void by reason of the outbreak of the war and he cannot recover the goods on the basis of such contract.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. There will be one set of costs. The costs of the interlocutory application will be included in the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Parties, different, in subsequent suit.

D. sued P. for rent on the allegation that he had settled certain kasht lands with him as under-tenant on produce rent. P. denied settlement under D. but set up direct tenancy under D. and his other co-sharers who were no parties to the suit. The suit was decreed. P. then instituted the present suit against D. and his other co-sharers for a declaration that he was a tenant directly under them:

Held, that the decision in the rent suit was res judicata so far as the question of settlement between P. and D. was concerned but not so with regard to the question of P.'s title. [p. 531, col. 2.]

The Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground of res judicata. The Court of first Appeal held that the question of P.'s title to the land was not res judicata as between him and all the maliks, who were no parties to the previous suit. His decision was reversed by Mr. Justice Atkinson. Hence this appeal.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—This is an appeal against the judgment of a learned Judge of this Court setting aside an order of the District Judge of Darbhanga, whereby the suit was remanded to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. The Munsif had decided that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. On appeal the District Judge held that the suit was not so barred. On appeal to this Court the learned Judge held that the suit was barred by res judicata. It appears to me that the decision of the Court of first appeal was correct and should not have been disturbed. The plaintiff in the present case claims to be the tenant of whole proprietary body in a village. There was a previous litigation in which one of the defendants, Dwarka Prasad sued the present plaintiff as his tenant. Dwarka Prasad succeeded in establishing his case and obtained a decree for rent against the present plaintiff. The question raised as between the plaintiff and the defendants other than Dwarka Prasad in the present suit are not res judicata under the decision in the previous suit. It appears to me that the learned District Judge was right in saying that the decision in the rent suit is res judicata as far as the question of settlement between the plaintiff and Dwarka Prasad is concerned but not with regard to the question of the plaintiff's title. I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court, restore the order of the Court of first Appeal and direct that the costs of both hearings in this Court should be costs in the cause and should abide the result.

Appeal against the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 61 of 1914.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BURN, J.—The facts of this case, as far as it is necessary to state them, are as follows:—On 17th March 1891, 2nd plaintiff obtained a permanent lease Exhibit A of certain land within the limits of Madura town from the matathipathi of Sri Vyasraya mutt the seat of which is in the State of Mysore. Second plaintiff was a near relative of the grantor. The rent reserved was a fixed sum of Rs. 24 per annum. The grantor died shortly after the execution of Exhibit A. His successor held office till 1906 when 26th defendant became the head of the mutt. In 1902, 2nd plaintiff sublet (Exhibits D and D1) to 1st defendant for a period of ten years and in 1905, 2nd plaintiff and his son 3rd plaintiff sold their rights under Exhibit A to 1st plaintiff (Exhibit E). From 1905 the properties controlled by the heads of the mutt were managed by the Diwan of Mysore under powers-of-attorney executed by the matathipathis and the Diwan in turn empowered defendants' 1st witness to conduct the management. In 1908, defendants' 1st witness visited Madura and it was then only that he became aware of the nature of the lease granted to the 2nd plaintiff. He at once objected to it and tried to induce 1st defendant to attorn to him. This 1st defendant, at that time, refused to do. In November 1911, however, 1st and 2nd defendants took a lease of the land for seventeen years from defendants' 1st witness. (Exhibit V). At the end of September 1912, the term fixed in the lease deed Exhibit D, expired. The rent for the whole period had been paid in advance. First and 2nd defendants are admittedly in possession of the land and claim to hold it under Exhibit V. In 1908 defendant's 1st witness objected to the lease of 1891 on the ground that it was not competent to the head of the mutt to grant a permanent lease of the kind. He tried to get 1st plaintiff to come to terms but in vain. Certain payments were made by 1st plaintiff after 1908 and the effect of these is a subject of controversy between the parties. First plaintiff seeks (amongst other reliefs) a declaration that he is the permanent lessee of the property and a direction to the defendants to deliver up possession of it.

The main contentions on behalf of 1st plaintiff are (1) that the permanent lease is binding on the grantor and his successors, (2) that a valid title has been acquired under the provisions of the Limitation Act and (3) that the defendants are estopped from denying the 1st plaintiff's title. The findings of the learned Subordinate Judge are against the plaintiffs-appellants on all three points.

With regard to the first point there is no doubt that the head of a mutt cannot in the absence of necessity bind his successors-in-office by a permanent lease at a fixed rent for all time. This would be so, even if the rent had been adequate in 1891, Maharanees Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Acharyo (1). There is no allegation, much less proof, of any such necessity. The first contention must be rejected.

In connection with the second point, a question arises as to the nature of the endowment and the position of the head of the mutt in relation to it. The exact terms of the original grant are not in evidence. It was conceded in argument that the grant was made by one of the Naicken dynasty of Madura. The case for the appellants is that the endowment was for a specific purpose, i.e., for the worship of Gopalakrishnaswami who is described by the defendant's 1st witness as the "titular deity of the mutt." The evidence does not support this contention and it has been found against in the lower Court. A statement made by local agent of the mutt during the inam commission inquiries is relied upon for the appellants. It was apparently unsupported by any documentary evidence. The description of the inam as given at the close of the inquiry is, that it was granted "for the support of Vysaraya Madam" (Exhibit L); compare also description in Exhibit F. The evidence for the defendants is that the income from this property is not appropriated to any particular purpose but forms part of the general funds of the mutt. I think the grant must be held to have been made for the general purposes of the mutt.

What then is the position of the head of the mutt in relation to the general endowments of the institution? In Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti (2), there is a description of "the nature of the generality of such institutions and the incidents of the property which is devoted to their maintenance." The property is stated to be "in a certain sense trust property, it is devoted to the maintenance of the establishment but the superior has large dominion over it, and is not accountable for its management nor for the expenditure of the income, provided he does not apply it to any purpose other than what may fairly be regarded as in furtherance of the objects of the institution."

In Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tambiran (3), a description is given of how the endowments of mutts were acquired and this description appears to fit the case now under consideration in so far as the facts have been ascertained. The judgment then proceeds to lay down that the head of the mutt came to own its endowments "in trust for maintenance of the mutt for his own support, for that of his disciples and for the performance of religious and other charities in connection with it according to usage."

In Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyavidhi

Tirtha Swami (4) a different view was taken as to the position of the head of the mutt towards its endowments. It is this ruling which forms the basis of the judgment of the lower Court on the point now under consideration. The question was again examined by a Full Bench in the case reported as Kailasami Pillay v. Nataraja Tambiran (5). As I read the judgments in the last mentioned case, it was held that no general rule could be laid down and that each case must be judged on the particular facts. Sankaran Nair, J., appears to accept the statement of the law in Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tambiran (3) as strictly accurate with regard to the endowments there referred to [Vide Kailasami Pillay v. Nataraja Tambiran (5)] which seems to me similar in kind to the endowment now in question.

It is not, in my opinion, necessary to discuss these cases in detail, because, in my opinion, the matter is now governed by the decision of the Privy Council reported as Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (6). The nature of the interest of the head of a mutt in the mutt property is declared in clear terms. "The whole assets are vested in him as the owner thereof in trust for the institution itself" (page 713*), again at page 714*, "the nature of the ownership is, as has been said, an ownership in trust, for the mutt or institution itself, and it must not be forgotten that although large administrative powers are undoubtedly vested in the reigning mahant this trust does exist and...must be respected." And at page 732* in referring to the retirement of the head of the mutt it is said, "the mahant in their Lordships' opinion is not only a spiritual preceptor, but also a trustee in respect of the asthal over which he presides." Their Lordships seem to me to lay this down as a rule of general applicability for whereas in the matter of succession to the headship the usage and custom of a mutt have to be considered in each case. This is expressly stated. It is true that the point to be decided in the case related to the office of superior of the mutt and not to the management of the other property and that the latter decision of this Court does not seem to have been referred to. The judgment, however, opens with a considered pronouncement as to the position of a head of the mutt as to his functions and the legal position with regard to the endowments. The fact that certain decisions of this Court may not have been referred to, does not make the ruling any the less binding.

There do not appear to be any circumstances peculiar to the present case, which would exclude it from the operation of the general rule. It seems to me, therefore, that the sole beneficiary is the mutt. This is not an instance in which there is any individual interest in the head of the mutt independently of the institution itself. He is no doubt entitled to appropriate part of the income to his own maintenance on account of his position in the mutt but his rights in this respect are the same in kind as those others connected with the mutt who are entitled to be supported from its funds. In this view it is unnecessary to consider the bearing on the question of limitation of the cases where it has been held that the head of the mutt had a personal interest in the property alienated. [e.g. Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (7) and Narasaya Udpa v. Venkataramana Bhatta (8)]. The decision in Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Avergal (9) proceeds on the footing that the position of the head of a mutt is that enunciated in Vidyapurna Thirtha Swami v. Vidyavidhi Thirtha Swami (4) but as already stated, this view appears to be overruled by the decision of the Privy Council.

I think, therefore, that the alienor held the property simply as a trustee. It has been held in Rameshwar Malia v. Jiu Thakur (10) that a permanent lease is a transfer within the meaning of Article 134 of the Limitation Act of 1908. The same decision and that reported as Narasaya Udpa v. Venkataramana Bhatta (8) are authorities for holding that the annual rent is a valuable consideration. The requirements of the Article would, therefore, seem to be fulfilled.

It has, however, been urged that the appellants are not entitled to take advantage of the Article because 2nd plaintiff was aware at the time he obtained the lease of the position of his lessor; the plaintiff alleges that the mutathipathi was a trustee and 2nd plaintiff in his evidence describes him as a trustee merely. There is nothing in the actual wording of section 10 of the Act or in Article 134 to support the contention. It is, however, argued that this has been held to have been the meaning of the provision in the Act of 1877, and that these rulings are not affected by the changes in wording made in 1908. Vide Tholasinga Mudali v. Nagalinga Chetty (11). The rulings relied on appear to rest on the remarks of Lord Cairns in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Radhanath Doss v. Gisborne & Co. (12). In that case the actual finding was that the transaction was consistent with the view that the alienor intended to take only such interests as the transferor was competent to alienate (Vide pages 17 and 19). This decision has been explained by Mookerjee, J., in Ram Kanai Ghosh v. Raja Sri Sri Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur (13) and quite recently by Ayling and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ., in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Mahamad Mustapha Maracayar (14). In the latter case, the later rulings of this Court have also been considered and distinguished. The fact of knowledge may be an important piece of evidence, in judging of what interest the transferee contracted to take especially where (as in most of the cases cited) the transferor was a mortgagee but such knowledge cannot by itself disentitle the transferee to the benefit of Article 134 of the Act. In the present case I entertain no doubt that it was the intention of the grantor to create a permanent lease and that 2nd plaintiff intended to take and did take the lease as a permanent one. Subsequent dealings with the property support this view. The grantor died a few months after the execution of Exhibit A. During the fourteen years that his successor held office the 2nd plaintiff continued to hold on the terms of the lease-deed. I would respectfully follow the view enunciated by Mookerjee, J., in the case referred to and hold that the 2nd plaintiff perfected his title to a permanent lease as more than twelve years elapsed since the grant. The lessor intended to grant and the lessee intended to acquire an interest greater than the transferor was competent to alienate and all the requirements of Article 134 have been complied with.

The above finding is sufficient for disposal of the appeal and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the question of estoppel which is raised by the appellants.

The Subordinate Judge has given the 1st plaintiff a decree for Rs. 116 6 6 as damages against the 1st defendant. A memorandum of cross-objections was filed but was not pressed and is dismissed.

There is a further claim for Rs. 500 as damages for breach of the agreement in Exhibit D prohibiting the letting of trees for tapping in the last two years of the lease. The Subordinate Judge recorded no finding on the point as he considered the claim unsustainable for reasons given in paragraph 29 of his judgment. The evidence adduced is of a very vague description and, in my opinion, insufficient to enable a conclusion to be come to as to whether any and if so, what amount, is due to the 1st plaintiff on this account.

In the result I think the appeal should be allowed and 1st plaintiff given a decree for possession of the property, and a declaration that he is a permanent lessee. He will also be entitled to mesne profits from the 1st October 1912, till delivery. These profits will be recoverable from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and will be determined by the lower Court and embodied in a supplemental decree. Having regard to the uncertainty of the law in this Presidency prior to the judgment of the Privy Council, I think the parties should bear their own costs in both Courts.

Hindu Law—Sanyasam or asceticism, incidents of—Will of sanyasi, construction of—Testamentary disposition of sanyasi's property, principles governing—Conduct negating sanyasam, evidence of.

The essentials of Sanyasam, according to Hindu Law, are that the postulant for Sanyasam should perform the necessary rites and ceremonies prescribed by the Sastras, in particular the prajapatihieshti or agneshsti and the viraja homam, and finally relinquish all property and abandon all worldly concerns, down to even a desire for them. The relinquishment need not be in favour of any particular person, but one about to become a Sanyasi may simply abandon his property in which case the law will vest it in his heirs. The mere adoption of the external symbols of Sanyasam as the wearing of coloured clothes or shaving of the head is not enough. [p. 538, col. 2.]

Hindu text-writers examined.

A Will made by a Sanyasi takes effect from its execution, as the Sanyasi becomes dead to the world from the date of his entry into the holy order, and not from his death. [p. 542, col. 1.]

Evidence may be tendered to show by the conduct of the Sanyasi that he did not intend to abandon his property and that a Will executed by him during his so-called Sanyasam was not intended to take effect. The non-delivery of the Will to the beneficiary named in it and its retention by the testator is one important test showing that the testator did not intend to abandon his property during his natural life. [p. 539 cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the Will of a Sanyasi directs the beneficiary under it to perform the testator's death ceremonies, it negatives the intention that the Will should take effect immediately as there are no death ceremonies to be performed for a Sanyasi and a subsequent codicil will prevail over the earlier Will. [p. 538, col. 2; p. 539, col. 1.]

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, (Advocate General), for the Appellants.—Sir Thomas Strange, at page 154 of Hindu Law, lays down that, on a person becoming a Sanyasi the next heir succeeds.

There is another class of cases i.e., when succession opens to him after he became Sanyasi, (3) there is a third class when he succeeds to the property owned by him before he becomes a Sanyasi.

Mr. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, B. Narasimha Rao and D. Appa Rao), for the Respondents.—It is the case of a widow relinquishing her right.

It is simply a case of an application to a person who is re-united.

He is treated as if he is dead. Both are treated in the same position. Vyavastha Chandrika, Volume II, page 580, Smrithi Chandrika Chapter V, 2 (10) at page 60. It is not open to a person to change the inheritance; it does not depend upon his volition. See Juggunnath Paul v. Bidianund Dutt (1).

Venkatacharyula v. Rangacharyulu (5), Muthuswami Aiyar, J., is of opinion that giving and taking is quite essential; where there is fraud there is no real giving. Yagnavalkya (Mitakshara) Parukshit Kanda, Chapter IV, Sloka 56 shows that he must give up all what he has i. e., have performed prajapathiyeshi. At page 101 he says he shall perform Sarvaveda Jakeshmati, i. e., all that man possesses.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—If a man wants to become a Sanyasi, the most important act is that he must divorce himself of all that he possesses.]

The texts require a number of things to be performed. Manu Chapter VI, Sloka 33. Dharmasindhu, page 364, paragraph 365. In the case of Sanyasi a giving up of all worldly possessions voluntarily is quite necessary. Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 10, placitum 6.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—You say that the disposition must be according to law; if it is immoveable property, it must be by a registered instrument.]

Even if he divests himself with all that he has, there is nothing to prevent him from acquiring property afterwards; first he has secular heirs; then they become spiritual heirs. There is nothing equivalent to "civilly" dead in Sanskrit. Sir Thomas Strange is wrong in his statement at page 114. None of the text books support his view. Manu and Hartha upon which Sir Thomas Strange relies do not support him. There is nothing in the Mitakshara. There is nothing about civil death. An ascetic can acquire property, he is not civilly dead. In the matter of Metcalfe's Trusts (6), *Sree Mahant Kishore Dossjee v. This appeal coming on for hearing on the 18th and 19th January 1917, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Coacanada dismissing their suit to recover possession of the immoveable properties belonging to the 1st defendant, from him and his alienees. There are two plaintiffs, but as the 2nd is only an assignee from the 1st and as it is the right of the 1st plaintiff that is in question in the suit, I shall hereafter refer to the 1st plaintiff as the plaintiff. The claim is as the universal legatee, heir and successor of a living person the 1st defendant. According to the plaintiff the 1st defendant his uncle, made his Will on the 20th December 1905 at Benares by which he bequeathed all his immoveable properties—they are the suit properties—to the plaintiff, constituted him his heir and successor, and a few days after, became a Sanyasi or entered the fourth Asrama prescribed by the Sastras, became dead to the world and its concerns, and the plaintiff, therefore, became the owner of his properties as if the 1st defendant had died on the day he became Sanyasi. This remarkable claim—for this is the first instance to my knowledge of a claim to recover possession from a living person of his properties as his heir or legatee which involves the fiction of civil death—requires to be made out in the clearest possible manner. The plaintiff and the 1st defendant are Telugu Brahmins of the Godavari District and belong to the sect called Golakonda Vyaparies who though they wear namams and follow some of the practices of Sri Vaishnavas, in several other matters apparently follow the practices of Smarthas. Several interesting questions were argued at the hearing of this appeal, as to the acts to be done and the ceremonies to be performed by a Brahman before he can become a Sanyasi as to the effect of that status on legal rights, as to the possibility of a reversion from or change of that status, and as to how far British Indian Courts are bound or entitled to recognise any such limited or inferior civil status; but in the view I take of the facts it is scarcely necessary to decide most of the questions so argued.

It must be remembered that there are a large number of sects with their peculiar rites, mode of initiation and practices who though in a general sense may be termed ascetics cannot come under the category of those who have entered the fourth order (Asrama) in the ideal of life prescribed for the Brahman by the Dharma Sastras. For example, in a passage cited in Sarkar Sastri's Hindu Law from Maha Nirvana Tantra, it is said that in this Kali age there are five castes (varnas) i. e., besides the well-known four castes, a fifth caste comprising all other beings, that Sanyasam according to Vedic rites does not exist () and that all the above five castes can become Avadhutha Sanyasis according to the Saiva ritual. As regards ascetics of this class, it is impossible to apply the special texts in the Smritis or to hold that they are divested of their property or become incapable of holding any or that the special rules of inheritance prescribed for Vanaprasthas (hermits) yathis (ascetics) and Brahmacharies (perpetual students) govern succession to their property on their death. It has been held in this Court that as a Sudra cannot become a yathi or Sanyasi according to the Smritis or the Dharma Sastras, his property on his death devolves on his natural heirs, though there can be no doubt that a Sudra is ordained as an ascetic according to the Saiva Agamas. So also in Bengal the rule of inheritance applicable to yathis is not applied to Bairagis who apparently may be of any caste. In Mr. Oman's Book on 'Ascetics etc.', and Dr. Bhattacharya's Book on 'Hindu Castes and Tribes' are described a considerable number of orders of ascetics who are not governed by the rules prescribed in Smritis or by Nibandakars whom for convenience I may call heretical sects; and so far as they are concerned, in the absence of any special custom, there is no reason to treat them as of inferior status for the purposes of civil law. Unless, therefore, the plaintiff proves that the 1st defendant became a Sanyasi according to the orthodox rites and ceremonies I shall show later on that it is essential for such a Sanyasam that there should be an actual gift or an actual relinquishment or abandonment of all worldly possessions—the plaintiff cannot succeed, even though he may be able to prove that the 1st defendant wore coloured clothes or shaved his head or acquired certain external symbols of Sanyasam; for some or all of these are adopted also by the heretical sects.

The 1st defendant lost his wife and children at the same time in an accident when he was young and did not marry again. He was naturally much affected by such a calamity, turned to his religion for consolation, had puranas read and expounded to him, and was often going on pilgrimage to holy places. In the latter part of 1905 he went to Benares with the plaintiff and stayed in the house of V. Narayana Rao (plaintiff's 1st witness) in whose house he had stayed for months on a previous occasion. While he was there, on the 20th December 1905 he made the Will, Exhibit A, under which the plaintiff claims as legatee, got it registered the next day at his residence as he was ill, and a day or two later, it is said, became an ascetic and had his name changed to Iswara Sanyasi in token of his having entered the holy order of Sanyasis. The plaintiff who evidently knows that a person about to become a Sanyasi should give up his property, says, that the Will, Exhibit A, was executed by the 1st defendant as a preliminary to his Sanyasam and with the intention of divesting himself of his property. If this was the intention of the 1st defendant, he not merely managed to conceal it but manifested a contrary intention; for in his Will there is no reference to any impending Sanyasam at all but a direction that the legatee should after the testator's death—he obviously refers to his natural death—perform his death ceremonies and take his property as his heir and successor. The reference to the death ceremonies is significant, as there are none such to be performed by the relations of a Sanyasi after his natural death. There is one other matter in connection with this Will which also shows that the 1st defendant had no idea of relinquishing his property during his natural life. The Will after registration was asked by the testator to be delivered to one Ram Narain Singh, and acquaintance of his, and not to the plaintiff, and although the plaintiff stayed with the 1st defendant for over a month at Benares after the date of the alleged Sanyasam the 1st defendant never gave the Will to the plaintiff and never intended to give it to him. The plaintiff, however, obtained the Will long after, from the Singh against the wish of the 1st defendant. The conduct of the plaintiff and the 1st defendant after the alleged Sanyasam makes it difficult to believe that the 1st defendant became a Sanyasi at all as alleged by the plaintiff. On the 13th January 1906 (i.e.,) within a few days after the 1st defendant is said to have become an ascetic, he made another Will, or rather a codicil, leaving to others, a portion of the properties devised to the plaintiff by his previous Will (Exhibit VIII). On the 5th February 1906 he again made a third Will by which he distributed his property to his three nephews i.e., the plaintiff, his brother, the 11th defendant and another brother Venkat Rao now dead, the father of defendants Nos. 13 and 14 (Exhibit X). These were executed at Benares while the plaintiff was with him, and the 1st defendant describes himself in his usual name and as the son of his natural father which he would not have done if he had become an ascetic and had assumed the name of Iswara Sanyasi. As a matter of fact, the 1st defendant described himself and was addressed by relations and friends including some of the important witnesses for the plaintiff by his ordinary name Avasarala Kamarazu, and the curious compound Iswara Sanyasi with its variant Iswaranandaswami and Iswara Sanyasi-swami appears for the first time in the proceedings in this suit. The 1st defendant left Benares for his native place after executing Exhibit X and made another Will (Exhibit 1) on the 22nd February 1906 at Pittapur and has been dealing with his property ever since as owner, and there can be no doubt he has been living like a grahasta or a house holder. He denies that he ever became a Sanyasi or behaved as such. That is so far as the 1st defendant is concerned.

The conduct of the plaintiff is, however, much more important. On October 3, 1906, long after the 1st defendant had begun to deal with his property as owner, he and the 11th defendant claiming as legatees under the Will, dated the 5th February 1906, made a written demand of possession of certain properties from 3rd persons who held them under the 1st defendant as tenants, or otherwise by transfers subsequent to the 5th February.

In these notices, one of which is produced and marked as Exhibit XI in the case, the plaintiff and his brother, the 11th defendant stated that the 1st defendant became a Sanyasi after the 5th February and thereafter ceased to have any interest in his properties and on that ground challenged the title of the persons in possession. That statement if unexplained is obviously fatal to the plaintiff's present claim and the only explanation which he gives is that he never made that statement, but that his brother fraudulently filled up a blank paper in which he obtained the plaintiff's signature. Unfortunately for the plaintiff, this is proved to be untrue, for the plaintiff is proved to have been well aware of the draft of this very notice (Exhibits IX and IX A). The 11th defendant who equally with the plaintiff insists that the 1st defendant became a Sanyasi denies that he ever filled up a blank paper and there can be no doubt that he is speaking the truth in this matter. Further the plaintiff and the 11th defendant long after this notice on March 10th, 1907, obtained a muchilika from a tenant for some of the lands of the 1st defendant and the plaintiff does not explain this transaction either, beyond stating that his brother fraudulently obtained this also without his knowledge. Finally the plaintiff makes this remarkable statement, namely, that he knew in October 1906 that his brother had made false recitals in the notice issued in his name—the 11th defendant apparently was quite frank about it and told the plaintiff that he inserted those false statements to obtain a share of the 1st defendant's properties which wholly belonged to the plaintiff—yet he thought and was advised by a leading Pleader that those statements were not prejudicial to his interest, so much so that he took no steps to correct them and had sufficient confidence in his brother to allow him to take a muchilika also jointly in the names of both. On February 23, 1909, only three days before the plaint in this suit was filed, after he had made up his mind to claim the whole of the properties of the 1st defendant as his sole legatee under the Will Exhibit A, the 1st plaintiff sold a half of the suit properties to the 2nd plaintiff and in the sale-deed, in setting out his title, fixed the same day the 21st December 1905 for the Sanyasam and the Will. Evidently even this version did not suit him as probably the Sub-Registrar who registered the Will, who saw the 1st defendant at his residence on that day between 5 and 6 P.M., may be in a position to contradict the story of Sanyasam on that day, any how the plaintiff is wholly unable to explain how this date came to be fixed in the sale-deed as the date of the Sanyasam. In his re-examination by his own Pleader he says this "Exhibit E (i.e.,) the sale is in my own handwriting. I do not remember if a draft of it was first prepared. The recital in Exhibit E to the effect that the taking of Sanyasam and the execution of the Will Exhibit A took place at the same time was a mistake. I cannot say how it arose." In his plaint he fixed no date but paragraph 5 of the plaint reads as if the making of the Will and the Sanyasam were simultaneous. Even now the actual date is not fixed but it was said for the first time in March 1910 when the plaintiff's witnesses were examined in Benares that it took place on some day between the 23rd and 26th December 1905. These unexplained variations in the date cast a strong suspicion on the truth of the plaintiff's case. There are two other transactions in which the plaintiff has taken part to which I shall refer now. He was present when a brother of his (one Lakshmipathi adopted to another family) lent Rs. 1,000 to the 1st defendant on 3rd December 1906 when the 1st defendant, if the plaintiff's present case is true had no property at all, and also when the note was renewed in April 1908. The plaintiff obtained a transfer of this note on behalf of a minor ward of his, after a suit had been filed on the note and conducted that suit on his behalf. When asked to explain his conduct in allowing his brother to lend to a person who had no property and taking a transfer of the debt he was good enough to suggest that it was no concern of his if his brother foolishly lent to a person who had no property and denied that he had anything to do with the transfer of the debt or the conduct of the suit. But unfortunately for him he had been examined in the suit on the note and had admitted that he obtained the loan from his brother for his uncle and also that he negotiated and obtained the transfer; and explained that he did so because he and his uncle had settled their differences and that he was to succeed to his uncle after his death. He denies now that there was any such understanding, but he does not explain why if his uncle became an ascetic and he himself became the owner of all his properties, he took part in these transactions. His cross-examination as to these transactions is at pages 93 to 95 of the paper book. A perusal of his evidence as a whole leaves the impression that he has not an honest case.

The learned Judge in the Court below, however, accepted as reliable the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 1 to 4 who deposed that the 1st defendant performed certain ceremonies and went through certain rites by which he became a Sanyasi; and he came to the conclusion that though the 1st defendant did become an ascetic he did not give up or relinquish his property, that he got tired of his Sanyasam very soon and discarded even the Symbols of his order. He evidently thinks that the vacillation of the plaintiff was due to his desire to obtain the co-operation of his brother in any action against his uncle or to settle with his perverse uncle who like a good Sanyasi would not quietly surrender possession of his property and go a-begging as he ought. It, therefore, becomes necessary to examine that evidence. Of the fourth witnesses the first three were examined on commission at Benares and the fourth was examined on the 12th January 1911 and the judgment was not delivered till the end of December 1913. Such a long interval considerably detracts from the value of the opinion of the Trial Judge on the credibility of the witnesses examined before him.

Assuming, however, that that evidence is true and the witnesses accurately describe

what they saw, yet the evidence appears to be insufficient to prove that the 1st defendant entered the holy order of Sanyasis by the performance of the necessary rites and ceremonies prescribed by the Sastras; in particular there is no evidence that the 1st defendant pronounced the presha mantram which is absolutely essential for an orthodox Sanyasam. The ideal ascetic is he who having passed from order to order, having paid the three debts (that to the Rishis to the pitris and to the devas) in the evening of his life tired of the world gives up everything and determines on passing the remainder of his days in holy meditation calmly awaiting his release. (Manu Chapter VI, verses 33 to 37 and 45, Jabala Sruti cited in Apararka's commentary on Yajnavalkya and Yajnavalkya, Chapter III, verse 57). The essence of such Sanyasam, as the word itself imports, is the relinquishment of all property and worldly concerns even of the desire for them. In the Taithireva Upanishad, it is said "not by works, not by sons, not by wealth, but by relinquishing these some obtained immortality." "Getting out of the desire for sons, for wealth, and the world, a Brahmin goes into mendicant state." (Bikshacharyam Charani) Vajasayena Brahmanam cited in Parasara Madhaviyam, Bombay Sanskrit Series Volume 48, page 152. The rituals to be followed by a person desirous of becoming a Sanyasi are indicated in the Smritics and are set out in detail in the works of the commentators and text book writers (Manu Chapter VI, verses 38, 39, 41, 43; Baudayana II, 10, 17, Parasara Madhaviyam, pages 146 to 178; Dharma Sindhu, pages 363 to 370 Bombay Edition).

The postulant for Sanyasam after learning the duties of a Sanyasi should first perform his death ceremonies—this, however, is by some not considered necessary—and the eight sradhas the last of which is his own sradhas; he must then distribute his wealth to his sons and Brahmins reserving enough for the homam (sacrifice in the fire) to be subsequently performed. Then he has to perform Prajapathiyeshthi or agneshti and finally viraja homam. These are sacrifices in fire and are purificatory ceremonies. At the end of ceremonies, the postulant has no property at all for even the sacrificial vessels if they are of wood must be burnt in the fire and if they are of metal must be given to the priest. After these are done he takes leave of his sons, and standing in water takes some water in his hand and drops it saying that he has given up desire for sons, wealth, world and everything (Sarva Thyagam). He makes a vow that he will not injure any living being. Finally there is the uttering of the 'Presha Mantram.' The literal meaning of the mantram is 'have been given up by me' (Sanyastham maya). The mantram is to be pronounced low three times, and loud twice and till the mantram is pronounced the man does not become a Sanyasi. The above is common to all Sanyasams, but there is a difference of opinion as to the discarding of the sacred thread, as to the shaving of the tuft and as to the number of sticks in the staff. This is due to certain doctrinal differences which it is unnecessary to deal with for the present purpose beyond saying this; that the discarding of the holy thread which implies the giving up of all the duties prescribed not merely for the order (ashrama), but also for the caste (varna) including the obligatory Sandhyavandanam, is proper only to the highest kind of Sanyasi, Paramahansa. It is said in the statement of the 11th defendant, that the 1st defendant became a Paramahansa, but if he did, he should not have resided in a house or in a village; he can enter a village only in the evening for begging for his meals. It is to be observed that the essential feature of Sanyasam is the actual relinquishment of all property and an actual abandonment of all worldly concerns, down to even a desire for them; and it is said in the most emphatic terms that a person adopting Sanyasam, without this abandonment of all desires (bairagyam) goes to fearful Narakam (Dharma Sindhu, page 364). It is clear that in this case the 1st defendant did not abandon or relinquish his property and had no intention of doing so; and there is no evidence that he pronounced the 'Presha Mantram' without which he cannot become a Sanyasi. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that without relinquishing his property, a man may become a Sanyasi but the Sanyasam would be useless; and from the verse of Yajnavalkya, which prescribes a rule of inheritance for an ascetic's property, infers that a Sanyasi may possess property. Perhaps it is a question of words but it appears to me that to speak of a Sanyasi retaining his property is a contradiction in terms. The rule as to inheritance is explained by the commentators as applying to the staff, water pot, and sandals of a Sanyasi, which alone is permitted to him (Manu Chapter VI, verse 41 'Pavitropakita'). The learned Judge is not right in thinking that an ascetic can make a hoard of things for a day, a month, or six months or a year; for that can be done only by a vanoprastha or hermit. On the other hand it is said in a verse cited in Parasara Madhaviyam (page 184) that a Sanyasi should not even procure an extra staff for future use. Similarly in Gouri Sankar Byas v. Niader Singh (5), it appears to have been held that without actually relinquishing or abandoning his property a man cannot become a Sanyasi.

If, however, the first defendant became a Sanyasi, his heirs would take his property and probably his legatee even during his lifetime. In an interesting passage in Pollock and Maitland's 'History of English Law' the learned authors describing the status of a monk say, "A monk or nun cannot acquire or have any proprietary rights. When a man becomes professed in religion," his heir at once inherits from him any land that he has, and, if he has made a Will it takes effect at once as though he were dead. If after this a kinsman of his dies leaving land which according to the ordinary rules of inheritance would descend, he is overlooked as though he were no longer in the land of the living; the inheritance misses him and passes to some more distant relative. The rule is not that what descends to him belongs to the house of which he is an inmate; nothing descends to him for he is already dead. In the eye of ecclesiastical law the monk who became a proprietary, the monk, that is, who arrogated to himself any proprietary rights on the separate enjoyment of any wealth, committed about as bad an offence as he could commit." Except that the Smriti writers and commentators had no conception of a Will, the above passage accurately represents the status of a Sanyasi under the Hindu Law. It does not seem to be necessary that there should be an actual transfer to, or a relinquishment in favour of any particular person, but one about to become a Sanyasi may simply abandon his property in which case the law will vest it in his heirs. In the Dayabhaga in the very beginning where the author discusses the meaning of the word 'Daya,' and origin of right to property, he points out that not merely by gift, but by death, Sanyasam, etc., the right of the previous owner is lost, and that of the successor begins. The same principle is applied in fixing the time for partition. The author explains that the phrase "the death of the father" does not necessarily mean actual death, but includes Sanyasam, etc., (Stoke's Hindu Law Books, Dayabhaga, Chapter 1, placitum 4 and 31. The Sanskrit word translated as 'retirement' is 'Pravrajita'). See also 2 Colebrooke's Digest, page 197. This appears also to be the opinion of text writers (Strange, pages 164, 185, Trevelyan, page 100; Mayne, page 828, Vyavasha Chandrika, page 20). It is, however, unnecessary to pursue this matter further as I have come to the conclusion that the 1st defendant did not enter the fourth order as prescribed in the Dharma Sastras; nor is it necessary to decide any other questions. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Lambardar, power of, to grant leases—Co-sharers, rights of—Wajib-ul-arz, construction of.

Where the wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that before granting leases of vacant lands the lambardar should consult the co-sharers of the village:

Held, that the co-sharers could not claim to avoid a bona fide lease merely on the ground that their wishes were not consulted before it was given. [p. 543, col. 1.]

HARIPRASAD v. GOVINDRAO.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 28th March 1916, confirming that of the Munsif, Burhanpur, dated the 15th December 1915.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants own eight-annas share in Mauza Deola, the other eight-annas being held by the 1st defendant, who is the lambardar of the village. The 2nd defendant is a tenant under a lease executed by the lambardar. The plaintiffs sue for the ejectment of the latter on the ground that the lease was executed without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs. There is also a prayer for joint possession of the land to the extent of the plaintiffs' half share. The Courts below have dismissed the suit.

The contention on behalf of the plaintiffs is that, under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, the lambardar shall consult the wishes of the co-sharers before leasing the vacant lands of the village. It is urged that, as the plaintiffs were not consulted, as required by the custom, the plaintiffs are entitled to have the lease declared void and to have joint possession of the holding. The terms of the Nimar wajib-ul-arz are substantially the same as those of Wardha. In Kesho Rao v. Nana (1), Ismay, J. C., held that the co-sharers cannot claim to avoid a bona fide lease merely on the ground that their wishes were not consulted before it was given. This was followed in Bhima Shankar v. Krishna Mali (2) by the present learned Judicial Commissioner. The same view was taken by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Poonamchand v. Nandlal (3).

The custom embodied in the wajib-ul-arz does not require the consent of the co-sharers. They are merely to be consulted. What the lambardar is to do if the proprietors are not agreed, is not stated in the wajib-ul-arz. The general rule in these Provinces is that the lambardar leases the vacant lands in the ordinary course of management. This departure from the general rule embodied in the wajib-ul-arz does not appear to have ripened into a local custom with the certainty requisite for a valid custom. Probably, as suggested by Ismay, J. C., a lambardar who persists in ignoring the wishes of his co-proprietors renders himself liable on their application to be removed from office.

I have already pointed out that the consent of the proprietary body is not required by custom. The land is not required to be left by the proprietary body, but by the lambardar. In the case of a stranger, such as defendant No. 2 in this case is, he has a right to assume that the person held out as the customary agent of the proprietary body has done what his customary duty required him to do. It will be intolerable if a bona fide tenant is called upon to prove that the lambardar has consulted the wishes of the proprietary body. It is not alleged that the tenant had notice or knowledge of the fact that the lambardar did not consult the plaintiffs. Under the circumstances the plaintiffs' suit for joint possession has been rightly dismissed. Two cases have been cited before me, which have no material bearing on the point for decision. The first is the case of Darya Singh v. Mukund Singh (4). That case fully recognises the authority of the lambardar to manage an undivided village according to the ordinary custom. What was held in that case was that the persons put in possession as tenants became ordinary tenants not liable to ejectment, though some of the terms of the lease were held to be not binding upon the co-sharers. In the present case, the plaintiffs do not complain of any of the terms of the lease. They desire to eject the tenant on the sole ground that they had not consented to the lease. The other case cited is Gopal Ramkrishna v. Govind Pandurang Rangari (5), which lays down that anything which the landlord is required or authorised to do under the Tenancy Act must be done by the whole proprietary body or by an agent acting on their behalf. The judgment of Ismay, J. C., recognises the lambardar as ordinarily the agent of the co-sharers for the management of the village. I hold that the case has been rightly decided, and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed. There will be no order for costs, as the case proceeded ex parte against the tenant, and the respondent

Insolvent possessed of zemindari, whether agriculturist —House, whether can be sold.

Where the chief source of income of an insolvent at the time of his application is his zemindari, he is not an agriculturist in the true meaning of the word, although he cultivates some land, and his house is not, therefore, exempt from sale under section 60 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Meerut.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant applied to be adjudicated an insolvent. At the time of his application he owned and possessed considerable zemindari and many houses including the one now in question in which he resides. He also cultivated some land. The rest of the property has all been sold by the Receiver. He objects to the sale of his residential house and the plea taken is that he being an agriculturist, his house and property cannot be attached and sold in execution of a decree and, therefore, under the terms of the Insolvency Act, cannot be sold by the Receiver. The appellant's own application shows that he placed this house at the disposal of the Court for sale if necessary to satisfy his creditors. At that time he was not an agriculturist in the true meaning of the word. His chief source of income was his zemindari and his house property was not property exempt from sale in execution of a decree under clause (c)

Landlord and tenant—Sale of portion of non-transferable occupancy holding—Surrender, subsequent—Landlord, right of, to eject purchaser—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 86—Incumbrance, meaning of.

Per Chatterjee, J.—A tenant has no right to surrender a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding after he has transferred the same to a purchaser, and the landlord has no right to eject such purchaser on accepting such surrender. [p. 547, col. 1.]

Per Newbould, J.—A sale of a portion of a non-transferable holding does not create an incumbrance on the tenancy within the meaning of section 86 (6) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 548, col. 1.]

The position of a tenant of a holding not transferable without the landlord's consent is similar to that of an English tenant, who has made a covenant not to transfer. [p. 547, col. 2.]

Where a tenant, after having transferred a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom, surrenders that portion to the landlord, and takes a new settlement of the remainder of the holding, his act operates in law as an implied relinquishment of the holding, so as to entitle the landlord to eject the purchaser of the portion. [p. 548, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, third Court, Mymensingh, dated the 8th September 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, fourth Court, Netrakona, dated the 16th August 1912.

FACTS material to this report are as follows:—

The plaintiff's case was that the lands in suit forming part of three occupancy holdings were verbally surrendered by the respective tenants in favour of the plaintiff landlord in 1314 and the tenants took fresh leases in respect of the remaining portions. The plaintiff, when she went to take possession of the surrendered lands in 1315, was resisted by the defendant. Hence this suit for recovery of possession on declaration of plaintiff's title. The defence was that the disputed lands were sold by the tenants to the defendant prior to their alleged surrender; that the story of surrender and fresh settlement with defendant's vendor was false, and even if true, the transactions were spurious, fraudulent and collusive; that there was an agreement by the plaintiff landlord to settle with the defendant and the defendant paid nazarana but the kabuliyat was not actually executed on account of a fraudulent attempt on the part of the landlord to include lands of the defendant's original holding in the kabuliyat which contained a stipulation for the payment of enhanced rent, that the defendant was not liable to ejectment as he was a transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding. The Munsif dismissed plaintiff's prayer for khas possession but declared her zemindari title. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the suit fully. Hence this second appeal by the defendant.

Babu Bimal Chunder Das Gupta, for the Appellant, — Upon the facts found by the lower Courts the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court in favour of the plaintiff-landlord on a reversal of the decision of the learned Munsif cannot stand. The landlord cannot recover khas possession as against the purchaser of a portion of an occupancy holding, and the defendant as transferee of portions of occupancy holdings is not liable to ejectment. A transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom can by suit recover possession from the landlord who has forcibly dispossessed him. This view was taken in the Full Bench case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1). The surrender as set up by the plaintiff was alleged to have been made by the defendant's vendor subsequent to the sale of the lands, and any surrender made subsequent to the defendant's purchase cannot in any way affect the rights or interest acquired by the defendant, for the following reasons:—

which runs thus: "When a holding is subject to an incumbrance secured by a registered instrument, the surrender of the holding shall not be valid unless it is made with the consent of the landlord and the incumbrancer." The term 'incumbrance' has been defined in section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but the definition of the term as given in section 161 is not at all exhaustive but is expressly limited to the purposes of Chapter XIV, and there is nothing to prevent a wider interpretation being put upon the word "incumbrance" as used in section 86, sub-section (6), Chapter IX. In Chundra Sakai v. Kalli Pro-sanno Chuckerbutty (2), 'exchange' has been held to be an incumbrance, and there is no difference in principle between a case of exchange and a case of sale. This position is also supported by authorities. See Husani Bibi v. Sadir Mamud Sarkar (3), Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (4). If this were not so, the result would be anomalous: the purchaser would be placed in a worse position than mortgagees or lessees.

Sale is a total extinction of the title of the vendor; as soon as the sale is completed the vendor becomes completely divested of all the rights that he had in the property sold; hence upon general principles, after sale of a portion, the tenant is divested of all his rights in respect of the portion transferred and hence can confer no title upon the landlord by surrender made subsequent to the sale. By surrender, a tenant cannot effect in favour of his landlord anything more than he can do in favour of a third person by assignment.

There is not and there cannot be any charm about the word "landlord." See Foa on Landlord and Tenant, third edition, page 624. There is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which takes the case out of the purview of the general principles of justice, equity and good conscience. See Ram Udar Singh v. William Cox (5). The surrender alleged in this case cannot be a good surrender in law—it is merely illusory, and being obviously illusory it has not the effect of extinguishing the original tenancy, and the purchaser is protected from ejection by the landlord. See Naba Kishore Saha v. Dhananjoy Saha (6). A surrender cannot be operative for purposes of section 86 where the condition mentioned in sub-section (5) cannot be fulfilled. "Another tenant" in that sub-section means a person other than the original tenant. See Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (4). If the alleged surrender is valid, the original tenancy subsists in its entirety. The acceptance of a "fresh" lease is a voluntary act of the landlord which amounts in law to a sub-division of the original holding and a consequent recognition of the transfer to the defendant. Ram Udar Singh v. William Cox (5). The Munsif has found that the surrender even if true was not voluntary, and this finding has not been displaced by the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court erred in holding that if there was an agreement to settle with the defendant, he is at liberty to have his remedy in a suit for specific performance. The defendant being in possession is perfectly entitled to resist eviction on the basis of such agreement and is not required to resort to a suit for specific performance.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakerbutty (with him Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Respondent.—Unless the sale of a portion of a holding is an incumbrance the defendant has no case, but it has been clearly laid down that the sale of a portion is not an incumbrance. See Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7).

As against the landlord the transferee of a portion of a holding has no right, and the landlord has no duty or obligation towards the transferee—he is perfectly justified in resorting to any device or means he chooses in order to protect his rights. See Ramoni Mohan Roy v. Kalimuddi (8). Elsewhere the relationship of landlord and tenant is governed entirely by contract but not so under the Bengal Tenancy Act. So general principles can be of no avail to the defendant.

Babu Bimal Chunder Das Gupta, in reply.—After the Full Bench case in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1) it is hardly correct to say that the transferee of a portion has no rights—he has the right to be on the land even as against the landlord and the landlord has the corresponding duty of allowing him to do so. The decision in Ramoni Mohan Roy v. Kalimuddi (8) overlooks this aspect of the matter and is thus inconsistent with the Full Bench case, and is no longer binding. The case was decided ex parte, and matters in favour of the tenant were not placed before the Court. Besides, this case does not touch the second branch of my argument. Then again the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7) has been doubted in Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (4). I adopt the considerations mooted out by the learned Judges in the latter case against the correctness of the decision in Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7). Besides the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7) favours the second branch of my argument, as it lays down that sale of a portion effects a complete extinction of the vendor's title so far as the portion transferred is concerned.

JUDGMENT.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—In this case certain tenants sold portions of their occupancy holdings to the principal defendant and surrendered those portions only to the landlord and took from him leases at an enhanced rent in respect of the residue of their holdings. The landlord by virtue of the surrender wants to eject the principal defendant. The first Court disallowed the prayer for khas possession and the lower Appellate Court has allowed it. The question before us is whether the decree for khas possession is right. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court finds support in the cases of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7) and Ramoni Mohan Roy v. Kalimuddi (8). It is contended, however, that these cases were wrongly decided and in any case are no longer binding authorities, as they are inconsistent with the later Full Bench ruling in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1) and have been questioned in the case of Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (4). I think these contentions are right and that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is wrong. It was held in Dayamoyi's case (1) that the sale of a portion of an occupancy holding is valid and the landlord has no right to khas possession of the land. Now what more has taken place in this case? The tenants sold portions of their occupancy holdings and had no right or interest left in the same. Then they made a show of a surrender of the self-same lands to the landlord. They had nothing to surrender and the landlord had no right to eject the purchaser. Then there is an amalgamation of these two nothings and at once the landlord is competent to eject the purchaser. It is true the landlord was not bound by the sale and could, under section 85 (7), Bengal Tenancy Act, accept a partial surrender; but this means a surrender of something which the tenant had to surrender. Apart from the meaning of the word 'surrender' in English Law, the word has a meaning as a word in the English language, to give up or resign or yield to the possession of another; but the tenant has no right to give up or resign or yield what he has already sold. In this view of the case surrender is a misnomer for the act of the tenant and section 86 (5), even if it could apply to part-surrender (for the clause speaks of surrender of his holding), would not entitle the landlord to take khas possession. Nor in this view of the case is it necessary to consider whether the word incumbrance in section 86 (6) includes the sale of a portion of a holding.

Having regard to the fact that I differ from the decision of the Court in the cases of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7) and Ramoni Mohan Roy v. Kalimuddi (8), the better course would perhaps have been to refer the matter to the Full Bench, but as I cannot do so alone and as the second branch of the argument, namely, the effect of Dayamoyi's case (1) may be sufficient to dispose of the case I would allow the appeal.

As we differ on a point of law, the case must go to the Chief Justice for reference to a third Judge. The point of law in respect of which we differ is—whether a raiyyat, having sold a part of his occupancy holding, can surrender the self-same part to his landlord so as to entitle the latter to take khas possession of the said part by ejecting the purchaser?

NEWBOULD, J.—The facts as found in this appeal are as follows:—The tenants of these holdings with occupancy rights under the plaintiff sold the plots of land in suit, which form portions of the lands of these holdings, to the principal defendant who is the appellant in this appeal. Subsequently these tenants orally relinquished the lands in suit in favour of the plaintiff and took fresh settlements at enhanced rates by executing kabuliyats in respect of the remaining lands of their holdings. The appellant alleged that he had obtained a settlement of the disputed land from the plaintiff but this was found against him by the lower Appellate Court, who granted the plaintiff a decree for khas possession.

On behalf of the appellant it is contended that the tenants after their sale to the appellant-defendant were divested of all their interests in the land in suit and had nothing left to surrender to their landlord and consequently there was no valid surrender. It is also contended that the appellant-defendant, as a transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding, is not liable to ejectment and further that he is protected by the provisions of section 86 (6) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that, when a holding is subject to an incumbrance secured by a registered instrument, the surrender of the holding shall not be valid unless it is made with the consent of the landlord and the incumbrancer.

In support of the first contention a passage from Foa's Landlord and Tenant (5th edition, page 624) was read to us. But the general principles of English Law that are relied on have no application to the present case. No English case could be cited to support the contention that the landlord would be bound by a transfer made by a tenant who had covenanted not to transfer. The position of a tenant of a holding not transferable without the landlord's consent is similar to that of an English tenant who has made such a covenant.

In my opinion the facts of the present case cannot be distinguished from the facts of the cases of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7) and Ramoni Mohan Roy v. Kalimuddi (8). In both these cases it was held that the sale of a portion of a non-transferable holding did not create an "incumbrance" on the tenancy within the meaning of section 86 (6) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the former of these cases the tenant sold a portion of his holding without the landlord's consent and then surrendered that portion. The landlord then settled this surrendered portion with the plaintiff and it was held that the plaintiff could eject the transferee. In the latter case the facts still more closely resemble the facts of the present case. The tenant after selling a portion of his holding surrendered that portion and executed a kabuliyat in respect of the remaining portion of the holding. It was held that upon such surrender the landlord was entitled to eject the transferee as a trespasser.

The learned Vakil for the appellant did not deny that these cases were in point but contended, firstly, that the decisions were erroneous and secondly, that they were opposed to the later decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Dayamoyi's case (1). In support of the first of these contentions he relies on the decision of a Bench of this Court in Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (4). There the accuracy of the decision in Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7) was doubted and Mookerjee, J., in his judgment pointed out that at least four points required consideration before that case could be held to furnish a correct exposition of the law. I will, therefore, consider these points seriatim. The first point is that "the learned Judges adopted for the purposes of the interpretation of section 86, which finds a place in Chapter IX of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the definition of the term incumbrance given for the purpose of Chapter XIV alone." This statement appears to be incorrect. The learned Judges remarked that the Subordinate Judge had accepted the definition of incumbrance in section 161 of the Rent Law. But though they quoted this definition and stated that the word was nowhere else defined in Indian Acts, they appear to have accepted the meaning attached to this word in the English Conveyancing Act of 1881 [44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, section 2 (vii)].

The second point noticed is that "the decision of this Court in the case of Chundra Sakai v. Kalli Prosanno Chuckerbutty (2) shows that 'an exchange is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act,' and in relation to the question raised before us, there does not appear to be any real distinction between an exchange and a sale." The answer to this objection is that in the case cited the meaning of incumbrance as defined in section 161, Bengal Tenancy Act, was being considered and as pointed out above the definition in that section is not applicable to the word as used in section 86 (6).

The third point is that "the effect of the decision is to place the purchaser in a worse position than a mortgagee or lessee under sub-section (6) of section 86." The result may seem anomalous, but that does not make the decision bad law. It is similar to the effect of the Full Bench decision in Dayamoyi's case (1), which puts the purchaser of the whole of a non-transferable holding in a worse position than the purchaser of a part. The last point is that, "it may be a question whether there can be a surrender effective for the purposes of section 86 when the conditions mentioned in sub-section (5) cannot be fulfilled." Sub-section (5) of section 86 is as follows:— "When a raiyyat has surrendered his holding, the landlord may enter on the holding and either let it to another tenant or take it into cultivation himself." I cannot see that this clause is any bar to the landlord making a fresh settlement with the original tenant after his surrender. Even if the agreement to make a re-settlement was entered into before the surrender, this, in the absence of collusion, would not make the surrender invalid. There is nothing in the law to prevent a surrender being made subject to conditions. In the case of Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (4) the question of the correctness of the decision in Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (7) was expressly reserved. After considering the objections throwing doubt on its correctness, I see no sufficient reason for refusing to follow it, on the point that a sale of a portion of a holding is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 86 (6), Bengal Tenancy Act. If it is not an incumbrance, clause (7) of that section clearly provides for the valid surrender of a part of the holding.

The learned Vakil for the appellant relied on the unreported case of Hasuni Eibi v. Sadir Mamul Sarkar (3), which was follow.

CHALAPURAM BANK, LTD. v. ZAMORIN RAJA AVERGAL.

ed in Ram Udar Singh v. William Cox (5). Both these cases are distinguishable on the ground that the transfers made by the raiyat were by way of mortgage and were, therefore, obviously incumbrances within the meaning of section 85 (6). The recent case of Naba Kishore Saha v. Dhananjoy Saha (6) is not in point, as there the pretended surrender of the whole holding was held to be a collusive surrender and not a real surrender. Here there is no finding that the surrender was collusive and I see no reason for thinking that the landlord had any fraudulent intention in acting as he did.

Finally, the effect of the decision of the Full Bench in Dayamoyi's case (1) has to be considered. It was there decided that where the transfer is of a part only of the holding the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. This does not help the appellant, as in the present case there has been a relinquishment of the holding. It may be conceded that relinquishment of the holding means a relinquishment of the whole holding but the whole holding has been surrendered. The part sold to the defendant-appellant was expressly surrendered and the taking of a new settlement of the remainder of the holding operated in law as an implied surrender of the remaining portion. Clause (3) (a) of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act shows that there can be implied surrender under that Act as well as under section 111 of the Transfer of Property Acts which is not applicable to leases, for agricultural purposes. It is contended that it was not the plaintiff's case as set forth in the plaint that there was a surrender of the whole holding. The facts that the tenants made estifa of some of the land of their holdings and executed separate registered kabuliyats in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the remaining lands are set out in the plaints. It was open to the plaintiff at the trial to agree that these facts amounted to a surrender in law of the whole holding.

I consider, therefore, the lower Appellate Court was right in granting the plaintiff's decree of khas possession and would dismiss this appeal with costs.

As their Lordships differed the case was referred to a third Judge, Chitty, J., who, however, did not decide the case as he thought that the judgment of the two Judges proceeded upon different views of the facts. The case was then sent back to the learned Judges, who dismissed the appeal with costs under sub-section 2 of section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code. We understand an appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent has been preferred by the appellant and is pending.

Appeal dismissed.

Principal and agent—Manager of Bank, powers of—Bank, whether can be sued 'by its Manager'—Plaint, amendment of, by claim for relief against Manager personally in alternative—Liability of Manager—Execution—Agreement to satisfy decree—Assignment, procuring of, in breach and execution—Suit by judgment-debtor for recovery of amount paid in execution, nature of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, whether bar.

A Bank is a limited company and it can be sued only in its own corporate personality. It cannot sue or be sued in the name of its Manager and a suit against a 'Bank by its Manager' means at best only that it is proposed to serve the Manager. [p. 551, col. 2.]

In such a suit, the Manager cannot be treated as a party already on the record who can be made personally liable. [p. 551, col. 2.]

An application to amend the plaint by insertion of a prayer for relief against the Manager in the alternative should be refused, though he can be added as a party independently. [p. 551, col. 2.]

CHALAPURAM BANK, LTD. v. ZAMORIN RAJA AVERGAL.

The trial of the suit must be restricted to an enquiry into the question of the Bank's liability and the Manager's conduct can affect it only in so far as he may be found to have acted within the scope of his authority. [p. 552, col. 1.]

A suit for return of money paid by a judgment-debtor to a person, who, in violation of a contract to enter satisfaction of the decree, procured the assignment of it to himself and realized money in execution, is one for breach of contract and is not barred by the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 551, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 324 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat, at Calicut, in Original Suit No. 17 of 1914.

FACTS.—Plaintiff, the Zamorin of Calicut, brought a suit against the defendant Bank to recover money realised in execution of a decree passed against his predecessor. The Manager of the Bank had agreed to pay off the decree-holder but instead of entering up satisfaction, he got the decree assigned to himself and executed the same. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The District Judge, on appeal, held that the suit, being one for damages, was maintainable and directed the Manager to be made a party. The Manager appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The main question argued is whether this suit is sustainable or is barred by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code; and I, therefore, follow the lower Courts in dealing with it with reference only to the plaint and a few documents necessary to its understanding, assuming the truth of the allegations made.

In 1912, the late Zamorin of Calicut arranged with his Bank, the defendant-appellant, that it should satisfy a decree, in connection with which his property had been attached. The Bank, however, did not satisfy the decree, but obtained an assignment of it and afterwards recouped itself for the amount spent in doing so by deducting it from the Zamorin's next instalment of malikana or revenue, which was received to its credit in March-April 1912. The pending execution petition was, therefore, disposed of on 1st April, and the Bank on 28th June obtained recognition of its assignment in the order in Exhibit U. The present Zamorin, the plaintiff-appellant, succeeded on 30th December. The Bank had already applied for execution of the assigned decree and obtained it in spite of plaintiff's opposition and an unsuccessful attempt by him to obtain a review of the order of 28th June 1912. He, therefore, was constrained to pay the Bank the decree amount, though it had already once paid itself the amount from the balance in its hands. The plaint also refers to facts in explanation of plaintiff's predecessor's failure to oppose the assignment application, and the Bank's application for execution, and they will be the subject of enquiry at the trial. But the material allegations are those stated. On them plaintiff claims repayment of the amount of his last payment to the Bank and of the legal expenditure incurred in resisting its apparently unjust demand.

The Bank's first contention, which the Court of First Instance adopted, is that this suit is simply to recover money paid in execution and is, therefore, unsustainable. It is supported on the grounds that the original decree-holder and the Manager of the Bank, with whom the arrangement was made, are not parties and that no contract by the Bank to satisfy the decree is alleged. But even if the parties referred to were necessary, and I cannot see how they were (since deceit is not imputed to the decree-holder at all or to the Manager personally except in the alternative), their absence would not change the character of the suit; for they could, if necessary, have been impleaded. And in fact in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the plaint, an agreement by the Bank to satisfy the decree, in pursuance of which it recouped itself from the Zamorin's balance, is set up clearly. The suit, I agree with the lower Appellate Court, is framed as one for damages for the Bank's breach of its agreement with him.

The main objection to it is then that it involves adjudication on a question, which could have been raised in the assignment proceedings under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, cannot be raised now, whether the decree had been satisfied at their date. To this objection two answers are available, firstly, the decree had not been satisfied and no plea of satisfaction was available to the Zamorin, since his arrangement for satisfying it had failed and he could not be expected to adopt the transfer to the Bank as made benami for his benefit, when it was not taken with his authority, cases such as Annabattula Venkataratnam v. Annabattula Nayudu (1) being distinguished on that ground. Secondly, if it could be held that a satisfaction, which the Zamorin was bound to adopt, had taken place, there was still, owing to the decree-holder's and the Bank's failure in their duty under Order XXI, rule 2, to have that satisfaction recorded, no satisfaction which could be proved; and authority is clear that a suit will lie in those circumstances. Iswar Chandra Dutt v. Haris Chandra Dutt (2), Krishnasami Ayyangar v. Ranga Ayyangar (3), Raghava Iyengar v. Athinambalam (4). No doubt in these cases, the proceedings, in which the plea of satisfaction should, it was contended, have been adjudicated on, were directly for execution, not for recognition of an assignment and for execution under Order XXI, rule 16. But the principle involved is not affected by that or by the fact that the petition, on which recognition of the assignment was granted, irregularly contained no prayer for execution by the assignee. In these circumstances, the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court, that the suit as framed is sustainable against the Bank, must be sustained.

The remaining question argued arose because the Bank's defence, as disclosed in its written statement, was to some extent that responsibility for what had occurred lay with the Manager already referred to, who had acted outside the scope of his authority and as the agent of the Zamorin, his uncle. Plaintiff, who had brought his suit against "the Bank by its Manager," then applied, not for the addition of the latter personally as a party, but only for the amendment of the plaint by insertion of a prayer for relief against him in the alternative. The Subordinate Judge refused this on the ground that the application was unduly delayed, and I should agree that it was so. But the lower Appellate Court allowed it, because paragraph 19 of the plaint already asked for relief against the Manager personally, and no real change was involved. The question is whether this part of its judgment is right. Now the Bank alone is before us, and I have felt some doubt as to whether it can be permitted to take objection to a decision, which cannot affect the merits of its defence and which the Manager will be able to attack, when and if it operates to his personal prejudice. But the prevailing consideration, in consequence of which I proceed, is that this decision is based on a fallacy, which will probably cause confusion during the trial and involves misconception as to the Bank's position. The Bank is a limited company; and it has not been suggested that it can sue or be sued in the name of its Manager under any special enactment. It then can be sued only in its own corporate personality; and the statement in the plaint that it is sued by its Manager is, if it amounts to more than that it is proposed to serve him, meaningless. Campbell v. Jackson (5). It was, therefore, not open to the lower Appellate Court to treat the Manager as a party already on the record, who could be made personally liable, as though the case were similar to that of a minor sued by his guardian. The amendment asked for, insertion of a prayer for relief against a person, who was not a party, could in the circumstances have had no legal result and should have been refused on that ground. It is of course still open to plaintiff to apply for it again, applying also to have the Manager impleaded personally. As to the prospects of such an application at this stage, it is unnecessary to express an opinion.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed, except as to the direction in the Lower Appellate Court's decree relating to amendment. The appeal is allowed in respect of this direction, which must be expunged from the decree. In the circumstances and in view of the extent to which the appeal succeeds, respondent will pay appellant's costs in this Court, costs in the lower Courts will be costs in the cause.

In passing this decision and with reference to the lower Court's mistaken view of the Manager's position, I observe that the trial to be held will be concerned only with the Bank's liability and that the conduct of the Manager can affect it, only in so far as he may be found to have acted within the scope of his authority. This observation is necessary owing to the attempt made in the plaint to use language reconcilable with the claim to relief being against him and the Bank in the alternative. As this claim is unsustainable, so long as he is not a party, it may be advisable for the Subordinate Judge to insist on that language being made unambiguous by insertion of an amendment distinctly alleging that only such conduct of the Manager, as was within the scope of his authority, is in question.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B.C. of 1884), s. 224—"Cesspool", what is—Cisterns for collection of rice water, and rainwater, whether "cesspools"—"Drain," meaning of.

The common meaning of the word "cesspool" is a pit into which a drain discharges its contents. The word "drain" means not merely a water channel but a channel used for the flow of offensive matter. Before a channel can be called a drain within the terms of the Municipal Act, it must be shown that offensive matter is carried by it and before a pit at the end of such a channel can be called a "cesspool" it must be shown that offensive matter is discharged into it. Mr. Biswanath Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is a well-to-do gentleman who built a house some three years ago in the town of Puri. Without the permission of the Municipality he constructed two masonry reservoirs, 2½ feet by 2¾ feet, near his house, one to collect surplus rain water from the roof of his house and the other to receive rice water from his kitchen. The Puri Municipality have issued a notice upon him to close these reservoirs as cesspools, and against this notice he files the present suit for a permanent injunction restraining the Municipality from carrying into effect the notice issued upon him.

The sole question for decision in the appeal is whether these reservoirs are cesspools or not. If they are cesspools the Municipality has jurisdiction to order them to be closed under section 224 of Act III of 1884 and no suit would lie to contest the decision of the Municipality that they should be closed.

The Courts below have entered into a discussion as to what the word cesspool means. The common meaning of the word, as I understand it, is a pit into which a drain discharges its contents. The word drain means not merely a water channel but a channel used for the flow of offensive matter. Before a channel can be called a drain within the terms of the Municipal Act, it must be shown that offensive matter is carried by it and before a pit at the end of such a channel can be called a cesspool it must be shown that offensive matter is discharged into it,

PRASANNA DEB RAIKAT v. MOHANANDA DAS.

The plaintiff has given definite evidence that no offensive matter is allowed to be carried into these two reservoirs, and before it can be said that the reservoirs are cesspools there must be definite evidence by the Municipality that offensive matter has been carried into the reservoirs. There is no such evidence on the record. Two Municipal servants were called to give evidence. Both say that there was no offensive matter in the reservoirs at the time of their inspection. One of them no doubt says that they gave out a bad smell, but we fail to understand how the reservoirs themselves could give out a bad smell if there was nothing offensive in them. The learned District Judge gives as his reason for holding that these reservoirs are cesspools that they were designed to collect the drainings of the kitchen and anybody who has had any experience at all of the drainings of a kitchen knows perfectly that such refuse is a nuisance and menace to public health, unless it is removed without delay or disinfectants used. This is obviously true of a kitchen in which fish or fowl is cooked. The cleaning of fish and the cleansing of fowl are matters extraordinarily offensive, and it is impossible to keep such a kitchen so clean as to prevent offensive matter being carried out with the washings of the kitchen. But we are not aware that in the household of a Hindu of good caste the kitchen necessarily contains offensive matter. Indeed seeing that the usual practice of the family is to eat its meals on the floor of the kitchen it seems to be reasonable to suppose that a well-to-do house-holder would be peculiarly careful to see that the kitchen floor is not full. The plaintiff has given definite evidence that nothing but rice water is allowed to run into this reservoir. Rice water is in itself not an offensive thing; no doubt if allowed to stagnate it becomes offensive in time. We are not prepared to say that a cistern for the collection of rice water from a kitchen is a cesspool, and indeed the Municipality themselves concede that a similar cistern of somewhat larger dimensions near the Jagannath Temple is not a cesspool.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the present suit should be decreed in part, and that the decree should take this form:—

That inasmuch as it has not yet been proved that the reservoirs in question were intended to be or have been used as receptacles for obnoxious matter, it cannot be said that they are cesspools within the meaning of the Act. That until definite evidence has been taken by the Municipality that they are in fact used for the collection of obnoxious matter no action under section 224 can be taken. That the decree made will not prevent the Municipality from taking such action if in future on inspection by a person having authority it be found that obnoxious matter has been allowed to collect in these reservoirs. That the suit for a permanent injunction restraining the Municipality from interfering with these reservoirs must be dismissed. That the suit for the setting aside of the notice issued by the Municipality upon the plaintiff must be decreed. The Municipality is restrained from taking any further action upon the notice issued in this particular case.

We direct that each side pay its own costs throughout this litigation.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 50—Presumption—Slight variation of rent—Appeal—Admissibility of document admitted without objection, whether can be questioned—Pleadings.

A slight variation in the rents paid in the preceding years, unless explained as having been due to an increase of area or any other cause than that of enhancement of rent, is sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 555, col. 1.]

Documentary evidence which is not altogether irrelevant and which has been admitted without objection, cannot be objected to in appeal on the ground that it is not admissible for the purposes for which it has been used [p. 555, col. 1.]

Appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 5th April 1916, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2702 of 1914.

FACTS material to this report are briefly as follows:—

The plaintiff landlord brought this suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the correction of an entry in the Record of Rights, viz., that the rent of the jama in question is not liable to variation. It was proved on behalf of the landlord that the rent previously payable for the jama was Rs. 25-12 karas 12 krants but it was afterwards raised to Rs. 25-3-0. The Settlement Officer decreed the plaintiff's suit and relying on the jama wasilbaki papers found as a matter of fact that the rent did vary and that variation was due to enhancement of rent. On appeal, the decision of the Settlement Officer was affirmed. On second appeal to the High Court Mr. Justice Newbould reversed the decision of the lower Courts on the ground that the variation was very slight and such nominal variation was not sufficient to prove any enhancement of the rent of the jama.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakraborty (with him Babus Upendra Nath Roy and Sisir Kumar Ghose), for the Appellant.—I submit that Mr. Justice Newbould was wrong in interfering with the decision of the lower Courts, on the ground that the variation of rent was very slight and that such variation is not sufficient under the rulings of this Hon'ble Court to prove alteration of rent. It is not a case in which the lower Courts found a slight variation in the payment of rent and the High Court on appeal held that the variation being very slight might be neglected. It is a case in which the lower Courts found as a fact that the rent or jama did vary, and the High Court interfered with this finding of fact which it is not entitled to do in second appeal. However slight the variation of rent paid might be, the finding of fact that there was variation of the rent or jama arrived at by the final Court of fact should not have been reversed by the High Court.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar (with him Babus Ramesh Chandra Mazumdar and Nagendra Nath Ghose), for the Respondent.—The defendant has proved rent receipts showing uniform payment of rent for more than twenty years.

Moreover, the jama wasilbaki papers by which the plaintiff wants to prove variation of rent are by themselves not sufficient to saddle the defendant with any liability. These papers can only be taken into consideration as corroborative evidence. Both the lower Courts treated this corroborative evidence as independent evidence. But they have erred in so doing. See section 34, Evidence Act.

Then even if these jama wasil baki papers raise a presumption under section 90, Evidence Act, other things are necessary to be proved to make the papers admissible in evidence under section 32 (2), Evidence Act. If these papers are sought to be made use of against the tenant under section 32 (2) then it must be clearly shown that they were made in the ordinary course of business by the person by whom they are alleged to have been made.

The next point is that the alleged variation being very slight, the presumption arising under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act should not be taken away. See Grant v. Har Sahay Singh (1). The entry in the Record of Rights is in favour of the tenant. The landlord must prove that there was variation and must explain the variation. Unless the increase is explained, the law will surely ignore such a nominal and very insignificant variation. The landlord should prove that the variation has been on account of something other than the alteration of area. The onus lay heavily upon him, and he has failed to discharge that onus.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Justice Newbould has held that the variation which has been proved is so small that it does not rebut the presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The cases referred to deal with those in which there has been an unexplained variation. In the present case it has been proved that there has been variation of rent; and there is no suggestion or evidence in the case to show that such variation was due to increase of area or any other cause than that of enhancement of rent. This ground, therefore, fails.

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 53; 18 C. L. J. 76.

The other ground taken is that the learned District Judge was wrong in relying upon the evidence afforded by the jama wasil-baki papers. It is not and cannot be disputed that those papers are relevant evidence in the case. What has been contended is that the evidence which has been given in support of these documents is not sufficient to make them admissible for the purposes for which they have been used. The simple answer to this argument is that these documents were admitted without objection in the First Court, and, therefore, such an objection will not now lie.

We think that sufficient cause has been shown for this increase, and that the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Newbould must be reversed and the decree of the District Judge restored with costs of the hearing in this Court and also of the hearing before Mr. Justice Newbould.

Appeal allowed.

Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869), ss. 3, 8, 22, 23—Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), ss. 2, 3—Primogeniture sanad, effect of grant of, in cases of estates entered in lists IV and VI—Sanad, supersession of, under Oudh Estates Act—Ordinary law, whether includes sanad under s. 23—Revival under Crown Grants Act of sanad already superseded—Custom—Primogeniture—Proof—Exclusion of females—Single heir succession.

One A. was the owner of Taluka Kundrajit before the annexation of the Province of Oudh. He had four sons, whose heirs subsequently under the British Rule divided the entire taluka among themselves giving four distinct names to the four portions so divided. One of the portions was the portion in dispute and was called Taluka Tajpur. It was allotted to C., the eldest male in the line of the second son of A. The sanad granted by the British Government was a primogeniture sanad, with respect to the whole Taluka Kundrajit issued jointly in the names of the four descendants of A., but their names were entered in lists I and IV prepared under the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act. C. died in 1899 and on his death the taluka came into the possession of his only son K. On the death of K. his widow H., the defendant, succeeded to the possession of the estate. The plaintiff alleged the taluka to be impartible and as the only son of one of the brothers of C., claimed the estate from the widow on the ground that he was the nearest male heir according to the rule of lineal primogeniture laid down in the sanad which governed the succession to the estate, as being part of the personal law under section 23 of the Oudh Estates Act and also according to an ancient custom of lineal primogeniture prevailing in the family to the same effect. He also impleaded in the suit the descendants of B. a brother of C., who according to the plaintiff were interested in denying his title to the property in dispute. The defendants denied that the estate was an impartible taluka, also denied the alleged family custom and contended that the estate having been entered in list IV, the succession to it was governed by section 23 of the Oudh Estates Act which prescribed the ordinary personal law as the rule of succession applicable to the case, and that the rule of succession laid down in the sanad was not applicable nor was the sanad, as contended for by the plaintiff, part of the personal law under section 23 of the Act. The descendants of B. also alleged that on the death of the widow the nearest reversioners of K., the husband of the widow, at that time would be entitled to the estate. The questions for determination in the case were whether the sanad still governed the succession to the estate both as part of the personal law and also in view of the Crown Grants Act XV of 1895, or whether it was superseded by Act I of 1869 and whether the family custom relied upon by the plaintiff had been established. It was agreed that if the rule of succession by male lineal primogeniture was established as applicable to the estate, the defendant being a female would necessarily be excluded from succession:

Held, per Kendall, A. J. C., (1) that under section 23 of Act I of 1869, succession to the estate was governed by the ordinary law and not by the sanad, the sanad being part of the ordinary law only in cases of estates entered in lists III and V and not in the case of estates entered in lists II, IV and VI; [p. 560, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that the operation of the sanad was superseded by Act I of 1869 and that the Crown Grants Act XV of 1895 did not affect the provisions of Act I of 1869 and consequently had not the effect of reviving the sanad already declared inoperative under Act I of 1869. [p. 558, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

KENDALL, A. J. C.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen has been brought for the possession of the Tajpur Taluka, which is an estate carved out of the Kundrajit Taluka, in respect of which a primogeniture sanad was allotted to Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar, Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh. The Kundrajit Taluka was eventually entered in lists I and IV prepared under the provisions of section 8 of the Oudh Estates Act; and in accordance, therefore, with the latter section the succession to the estate will be governed, under section 23 of that Act, by the ordinary law applicable to members of the intestate's tribe and religion. The Tajpur Taluka is in the possession of Thakurain Harnam Kuar, widow of Lal Ram Kinkar Singh son of Lal Chhatarpal Singh, who is said to be the last talukdar. Taluka Kundrajit was the property, before the annexation of Oudh, of Lal Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh, Lal Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh left four sons. Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar was the widow of Lal Bisheswar Bakhsh Singh the son of Lal Mahpal Singh, the eldest son of Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh, Lal Chhatarpal Singh was the eldest male in the line of his second son, Lal Surajpal Singh was the eldest male in the line of his third son, and Lal Chandarpal Singh was the elder male in the line of his fourth and youngest son.

The taluka at the time the lists were prepared was known as Kundrajit Taluka. Partition ensued in 1872, when the four following talukas were created:—

Taluka Bargaon allotted to Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar, Taluka Tajpur allotted to Lal Chhatarpal Singh,

Taluka Shampur allotted to Lal Surajpal Singh,

Taluka Kanti allotted to Lal Chandarpal Singh.

Lal Chhatarpal Singh died on the 6th September 1899. He left a Will on which reliance was sought to be placed in the Court below, but that Will was not prepared in due form according to the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act; and the plaintiff, who is appellant in this Court, no longer seeks to found upon it. On the death of Lal Chhatarpal Singh the taluka came into possession of Lal Ram Kinkar Singh his only son. At that time two of the brothers of Lal Chhatarpal Singh were dead; a third Lal Balbhadar Singh was alive. Lal Ram Kinkar Singh died on the 6th of October 1907, leaving his widow Musammat Harnam Kuar who succeeded to the possession of the estate. The plaintiff Babu Badri Narain Singh is the only son of Babu Sripat Singh, one of the brothers of Chha-tarpal Singh. He has brought this suit for possession of the taluka; and he impleaded as defendants Musammatt Harnam Kuar, Har Shankar Partab Singh the elder son of Balbhaddar Singh, who had died in 1904, and the son of Babu Sheo Shankar Partab Singh the second son of Babu Balbhaddar Singh. Babu Har Shankar Partab Singh died, and in his place his five sons were then impleaded. The properties to which the suit relates were set out in schedules (a), (b) and (d) attached to the plaint, and the plaintiff also claimed mesne profits as set out in schedule (c). He claimed to be entitled by right of inheritance under (a) the terms of the primogeniture sanad granted by the Government, and (b) an ancient family custom of lineal primogeniture and he impleaded the defendants, other than Thakur Harnam Kuar, as persons interested to deny his title. At an early stage of the case it was stated by the learned Counsel who appeared for him that in setting out a custom of lineal primogeniture (paragraph 3 of the plaint) the plaintiff meant male lineal primogeniture, and that the custom which he alleged to exist, was identical with the rule of succession as laid down in the sanad. The defendants admitted that Kundrajit was a taluka which came into possession of the descendants of Babu Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh. They denied that it was impartible taluka, and they denied that there was any immemorial family custom, such as the law of primogeniture, by which the estate descended to the eldest member of the eldest branch of the family. They alleged that Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar had succeeded to the taluka in her own right on the death of her son. They further pleaded that the Kundrajit taluka having been brought in list IV of the lists prepared under section 8, the succession thereto was governed entirely by the ordinary law, and that the line of succession laid down in the sanad no longer applied, nor was the sanad preserved as a part of the personal law. They alleged that on the death of Thakurain Harnam Kuar the nearest reversioners of Lal Ram Kinkar Singh would be entitled to hold the property. As to part of the property claimed Thakurain Harnam Kuar objected that it was the self-acquired property of Lal Chhatarpal Singh or Lal Ram Kinkar Singh or Thakurain Harnam Kuar herself, and that if the sanad did apply to the talukdari property, it would not in any case apply to property so acquired; while respondents Nos. 2 to 7 took exception to a house, certain groves and certain lands as being the private property of Babu Balbhaddar Singh. They challenged the claim for mesne profits; and they denied that certain moveables mentioned in the schedules attached to the plaint were the property of Lal Ram Kinkar Singh. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the estate having come in list IV the conditions of the sanad no longer applied. He found that there was no family custom under which the estate descended to the nearest male heir. On the question of moveable properties he noted, and this is not denied, that the claim thereto was given up by the plaintiff's Counsel. As to the accretions to the estate and the private property of Babu Balbhaddar Singh he found that the issues relating thereto did not call for determination as the suit failed on the main grounds. He, therefore, dismissed the suit and allowed costs to the defendants. In the decree, which followed upon this judgment, two sets of Pleaders' fee were allowed.

The plaintiff has appealed. The memorandum of appeal is discussive and argumentative and may be condensed into the following grounds:—

Firstly, that the conditions of the sanad applied to this estate, secondly, that even if the sanad was superseded by Act I of 1869 it takes effect by the Crown Grants Act, in spite of Act I of 1869 or any other Act, thirdly, that the plaint definitely set out a custom of male lineal primogeniture, fourthly, that the appellant has proved by un rebuttable presumptions and unimpeachable documentary evidence that a custom of male lineal primogeniture, to the total exclusion of females, does obtain in the family.

fifthly, that in any event the costs payable by him in the first Court should be reduced by Rs. 3,000 as two sets of Pleaders' fee ought not to have been allowed against him.

As to the effects of the Crown Grants Act, this question may be disposed of at once. On the appeal coming on for hearing it was admitted by the learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant that he did not at all desire to argue that the Crown Grants Act operated to revive a sanad. That Act had the retrospective effect of giving statutory recognition to what might otherwise be considered an arbitrary act of the executive authorities; and, by its operation, the title created by the sanad became an unimpeachable title from the time of its creation. The Act would not have the effect of reviving a sanad which, having been granted, had lapsed or otherwise become inoperative before the said Act was passed. The sole effect which the Crown Grants Act can have upon this present case is that, in case we find that succession to the taluka is controlled by the sanad, the validity of the title thereby conferred will be unimpeachable.

The next and the main question which arises for decision is whether in interpreting the expression "ordinary law" as used in section 23 of the Act provisions of the sanad can be considered.

In the only reported case under list IV recourse was sought to be had to the sanad in the first Court but the plea was not pressed any further. That case, Parbati Kunwar v. Chandarpal Kunwar (1), is reported in its last stages. The decision of this Court will be found in Musammatt Parbati Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal Kuar (2), while a copy of the judgment of the first Court is on this record. In that case the daughter of the last undisputed owners sued for possession of the Majhgain Shahpur Estate in the Kheri District. In that case a primogeniture sanad had been given and in that case also the names of four persons had been bracketed together under one serial number in list IV. For the defence reliance was imprimis placed upon the primogeniture sanad; there were alternative pleas of adoption of the defendant, and of the exclusion of the plaintiff by custom. The first Court, reading section 3 and following the decision of the Judicial Committee in Brij Indar

Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (3), to which I shall presently refer, ruled that the limitations in the sanad had been wholly superseded by the Act; it found adoption not proved, but it found the plaintiff to be excluded by custom. The finding of the first Court as to the supersession of the sanad by the Act for purposes of succession was acquiesced in on appeal, but the appellant faintly contended that the effect of the Crown Grants Act was to revive the sanad. This argument was not successful. The appeal failed. Before their Lordships of the Privy Council the word sanad was not even mentioned, as appears from the full report to be found in Parbati Kunwar v. Chandarpal Kunwar (1). It is not that the appeal failed on findings of fact, and that the question of the sanad could not have come up for discussion.

The sanad was undoubtedly the first barrier which the plaintiff had to pass on her way to victory, and the other questions only confronted her when that barrier was safely passed.

Section 3 of the Act I of 1869 provides that recourse on a question of succession will be had to the Act, and not to the sanad. Section 3 first came up for interpretation in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (3), and their Lordships laid it down, following section 3, that the limitations in the sanad were wholly superseded by the Act. Their Lordships, in setting out their judicial opinion as to the effect of section 3, interpreted the word "condition" in the 4th paragraph of that section. And the amending Act III of 1910 added to the word "condition" in this section the words "other than those relating to succession" not in order to alter or amend the existing law, but to remove the misunderstanding which their Lordships had pointed out in Ranee Janki Koer's case (3). It would have seemed that section 3, as amended to make the position clear, removed any doubt as to whether recourse could be had to the sanad on a question of succession. But reliance is had upon the explanation to section 3, which was also added by the same amending Act. It is said that the sanad should be considered under section 23, because its conditions are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act; such an argument is surely begging the question. This Explanation seems to me to be an unfortunately worded and superfluous addition to the section. A reference to the history of the amending Act shows that in the Bill as proposed, this Explanation was not to be found; it was added on the day the Bill was passed into law, and was intended to make the position even more clear and not to qualify what had gone before. The mover of the Bill said that it was intended simply to make it quite clear what rule of succession it was desired to establish, namely, the rule provided in the Act. The provisions of the sanad are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act in those cases where by the direction of some provisions of the Act, reference has to be made to the sanad to discover the heir.

The appellant, however, seeks to rely upon the provisions of the sanad by reason of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (4), which was a case under list V. List V is defined as a list of grantees to whom a primogeniture sanad has been granted. In that case sub-section 11 of section 22 was under consideration. The rule set out in that sub-section is that in default of anyone taking under the previous sub-section, there should be preferred such persons as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe of such talukdar or grantee are subject. This their Lordships of the Privy Council held to be nothing else than a general relegation of parties to the situation in which they had been found apart from the Statute. But, say their Lordships, "that situation is found in the sanad itself," and in a later place in the judgment it is said, "the general reference to what is not covered by those specific rules must include a reference to the rights of parties as contained in the sanad, which was the original title to the property." Persons whose names appear in list IV and list VI (grantees to whom section 23 applies) stand on practically the same footing as regards succession to the estate as those in lists II, III, and V for whom no heir has been found in sub-sections 1 to 10 of section 22, that is to say, in both cases succession is regulated by the ordinary law of the religion and tribe. It is, therefore, manifest that a pronouncement as to the interpretation of the words "ordinary law" in sub-section 11 ought to be considered, unless a contrary intention appears, where the question for decision is as to the succession to an intestate's estate under section 23. The respondents rely upon the case of Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Rane Janki Koer (3). That was a case decided in 1877 which dealt with succession in list II. List II is defined as a list of those whose estates according to the custom of the family.....ordinarily devolve upon a single heir. In their ruling their Lordships pointed out that as to succession the limitations in the sanads were wholly superseded by Act I of 1869, and that the rights of parties claiming by descent must be governed by the provisions of section 22 of the Act. The appellant seeks to remove the apparent inconsistency between those two judgments by arguing that in the latter case their Lordships in using the word "wholly" only referred to sub-sections 1 to 10 of section 22. There can be no doubt that the dictum in Ranee Janki Koer's case (3) has formed the basis of numerous subsequent decisions; and it is a startling proposition to make that their Lordships had in that case expressed themselves without sufficient accuracy, and that the inaccuracy had not been discovered from 1877 up to the time when the decision in Debi Bakhsh Singh's case (4) was promulgated in 1910. It has been taken as good law ever since 1877 that for purposes of succession reference must be made to the Act and not to the sanad, and this is also the interpretation which has been put upon section 3 and upon this ruling by Messrs. Sykes and Jacob, the two gentlemen whose commentaries on the Oudh Estates Act are in more general use. No doubt the case of Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (4) might seem prima facie to have raised an inconsistency which the appellant has sought to explain as above. But a careful examination shows that there is no inconsistency whatever between the two judgments and that in deciding Debi Bakhsh Singh's case (4) their Lordships continued to follow and did not attempt to confine or qualify the dictum as to the wholesale supersession of the sanad for purposes of succession which was laid down in Ranee Janki Koer's case (3). In this latter case their Lordships laid down, as a general proposition that for purposes of succession limitation in the sanad was superseded by the Act. They then proceeded, having found that sub-sections 1 to 10 of section 22 did not apply, to consider the ordinary law of the persons with whom they were in that case concerned, that is to say, persons in list II: persons whose estates according to the custom of the family.....ordinarily devolved upon a single heir. They, therefore, looked for the single heir according to the law of the religion and tribe. In an exactly similar fashion their Lordships in Debi Bakhsu Singh's case (4), recognising the supersession, for the purposes of succession of the sanad by the Act, and finding that sub-sections 1 to 10 of section 22 did not apply, proceeded to take up the question of succession under the ordinary law of the persons with whom they were in that case concerned, namely, persons in list V, persons to whom sanads have been or may be granted by the British Government.....declaring that the succession to the estates comprised in such sanads shall be regulated by the rule of primogeniture. They thereby found that they had to look to the sanad. That was a case where the provisions of the sanad are not inconsistent with the Act. In the same fashion, if list V had been a list of those the succession to whose estate was to be controlled by the Muhammadan Law, they would have had to look at the Muhammadan Law. Similarly in this present case this Bench recognising supersession, for the purposes of succession, of the sanad by the Act, has to look to the heading of list IV to see who the person is whose succession it has to consider; he is a person to whom the provisions of section 23 apply, that is to say, a person the succession to whose estate is governed by the ordinary law. Or, to put it more simply, every estate is labelled as belonging to such and such a list; and the Court, applying section 22 (11) or section 23, as the case may be, looks at the label. If the label contains a reference to a sanad as list III and list V labels do, then that sanad will be referred to as part of the ordinary law. If the label contains no such reference, as would be the case in list II, list IV and list VI labels, then the Court will not refer to the sanad. I have no doubt, therefore, that, arguing as above, succession to the present estate is controlled by the ordinary law and not by the sanad.

The ordinary law is the law as set out in section 3 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), namely:—

1. any custom which has not been by any enactment altered or abolished, or declared void by a competent authority,

2 the Hindu, Law in cases where the parties are Hindus, except in so far as such law has been modified or abolished by any enactment and has been modified by any such custom as is above referred to.

The custom which has been set up in this present case as governing the succession in default of the sanad, is a custom of lineal primogeniture. I may here dispose of the third point which has been argued in this appeal. In the plaint itself the words "lineal primogeniture" written in Urdu and English characters were set out as being the custom on which the plaintiff relied. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff in his plaint did not set forth in clear terms that females were excluded from inheritance.

It was and is still argued for the respondents that the custom as set up in the plaint was one of lineal primogeniture which did not import the exclusion of females, and that the statement of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff that the family custom his client was alleging was the same as that set out in the sanad, was an afterthought and that the plaintiff should not be allowed to set up a new case different from his case in the plaint. Having regard to the fact that the plaintiff was setting up a custom in order to exclude a female, Thakurain Harnam Kuar, and having regard to the contents of the plaint generally and also to the undoubted probity and experience of the learned Counsel who was conducting the case and made the above statement for the appellant in the lower Court, I have no doubt that the plaintiff was not changing his ground and that the custom which was intended to be alleged in the plaint was a custom of male lineal primogeniture.

BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. THAKURAIN HARNAM KUAR.

It is objected for the respondents that a custom of male lineal primogeniture, excluding females, a custom which results in an impartible estate, is a custom inconsistent with list IV, and is, therefore, even had it existed, a custom which has been altered or abolished by enactment and, therefore, it would be no part of the ordinary law. It is said that impartible estates are provided for in list II, list III and list V. It is pointed out that under section 10 of the Act the Court will regard those lists as conclusive evidence that the persons named therein are such talukdars or grantees. Therefore, while we are to take it as conclusive that a person in list IV is a person succession to whose estate is governed by the ordinary law, we are invited to make the further conclusive presumption that, because his name is not in list II, he is, therefore, not a person succession to whose estate ordinarily devolved upon a single heir. Reference is made to the Deogaon case, Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (5). But I can find nothing in the words of their Lordships in that case, which dealt with succession to non-talukdari property, which lays down any such a dictum. The respondents would divide talukdars and grantees into three classes:—

(a) those who have a family custom of single heir succession;

(b) those who have had a rule of primogeniture statutorily conferred upon them by a sanad confirmed by the Crown Grants Act; and

(c) those who neither have a family custom of single heir succession nor a statutory rule of succession by primogeniture.

But to my mind the three classes are rather:—

(a) those who have elected to declare for a specified custom, viz., that of single heir succession;

(b) those who have a statutory rule of succession by primogeniture; and

(c) those who have elected to declare for no specified custom.

It is possible to hold of these last, that in not declaring for recording of a custom, they have thereby declared that there is no custom in their family and, therefore, I cannot agree that it is to be taken as conclusive that no estate in list IV can be an impartible estate. No doubt all partible estates will be found in list IV but because every hen is a bird, it does not follow that every bird is a hen. I have no doubt that a person whose name is in list IV, can set up a custom that this is an impartible estate.

If there did exist, in the Bisen Thakur family which owned the Kundrajit Taluka, a family custom of impartibility with or without female exclusion, the fact that there was a partition of that taluka into 4 separate talukas in 1871 will not prove, in the circumstances of the case, that the custom is abrogated. The Government was suspicious perhaps of Ishri Bakhsh Singh, father of Chhatarpal Singh, suspicious at one time of Lal Chhatarpal Singh also, and viewing with a favourable eye the capacity and loyalty of Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar, who had received the recognition of the authorities in Nawabi time, elected, when a re-grant was made after confiscation, to make a settlement with representatives of all four branches of the family of Babu Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh. But it was not the intention of the Government in restoring the property in a particular fashion, suitable to the exigencies of the time, to the family from whom it had been very recently confiscated, to break through the established customs of that family, if any existed. We have been referred to the Nuzvid case, Raja Venkata Rao v. Court of Wards (6). But there the circumstances were very different, as pointed out in the Ramnad case (7). The Hansapur case, Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajender Pertab Sahee (8), was a case where circumstances were much more plentiful than in this present case, consistent with an intention to create a new estate to which family customs were not meant to apply but family custom was there held to apply. The estate was in this present case granted almost at once to the family from whose possession it had been confiscated, and there is nothing which can show that it was the direct intention of the Government to supersede family customs of that family. The partition which followed in 1871 was a necessary incident of the joint title created by the Government; it was not the spontaneous act of the parties with a mutual recognition of co-parcenary rights but it arose out of the act of the paramount power, and as was said in the Ramurd case (7), when impartibility is impressed upon an estate by antecedent family custom, the presumption is that the grant was given with the customary incidents. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appellant is able to set up a custom of impartibility.

It is sought to establish the custom by oral evidence, by documentary evidence, and by presumptions which are argued to arise out of the conduct of the members of this family, the custom of allied families and the history of this family from a time shortly before the annexation of the Province of Oudh. The learned Counsel passed over the oral evidence with the remark that it cannot be said to be of any value on the question of custom. To that oral evidence I shall return later.

It will be convenient to consider briefly the occurrences which preceded and led up to and which followed the granting of the primogeniture sanad.

[After considering the history of the Estate and the documentary evidence in the case, the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner proceeded as follows:—]

Before I close this review of the conduct of members of this family it would be interesting to return for a moment to the suit which Balbhaddar Singh brought against Lal Raghuraj Singh for a one-fourth share in the Shampur Taluka, which had been held by Surajpal Singh's widow from 1892 till her death in 1901. That suit was brought in December 1903. I have already shown that he treated the estate as one subject to the ordinary Mitakshara Law, and claimed a one-fourth share on the allegation that Raghuraj Singh had been adopted out of the family. Balbhaddar Singh, therefore, was clearly not recognising the rule of primogeniture or gaddinashini in the family. Lord Collins, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council [Har Shankar Partab Singh

v. Lal Raghuraj Singh (9)], set out among the facts of this case "Surajpal Singh died childless and intestate on the 21st February 1892 and was succeeded by his widow Thakurain Raghubans Kuar who took a widow's estate." This shows that any custom of the exclusion of females or of primogeniture was not agitated by any party to that suit. It will be remembered that Raghuraj Singh had taken possession of the Bargaon Estate on the allegation that he was adopted by Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar. The line he took in his defence in Balbhaddar Singh's suit, as I have already noticed, was that he was not adopted by Lal Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, the husband of Baij Nath Kuar; and he challenged the authority of Baij Nath Kuar herself to adopt and claimed to remain the son of his natural father. It is obvious that it was a very unpleasant plea that he had set out to sustain. Now if Raghuraj Singh had any idea that a custom of primogeniture, with or without exclusion of females, prevailed in the family, he would have been able to plead that custom as a complete answer to Balbhaddar Singh's suit without, in any way, going back on the position he had already set up as the adopted son in Baij Nath Kuar's line. For a reference to the pedigree shows that, at the time Balbhaddar Singh's suit was brought, the next heir, according to the rule of primogeniture, would be the male owner in the line of the elder son of Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh, the owner, that is to say, of the Bargaon Taluka, but Lal Raghuraj Singh had constituted himself the owner of the Bargaon Taluka on an allegation of adoption, and had successfully maintained that position up to the Privy Council, Chhatarpal Singh's appeal in fact having only been dismissed in the Privy Council in the previous year, viz., on 10th December 1901. Lal Raghuraj Singh's action, therefore, in falling back upon a very unsafe, and apparently contradictory plea, instead of standing to the position which he had been successfully maintaining, is a very strong indication that no such custom existed. It seems to me clear, therefore, from a review of the documentary evidence and of the conduct of the members of this family that no such custom as that set out by the appellant is indicated.

The appellant points out that out of seven estates belonging to the Bisen Thakur clan in the Partabgarh district five estates appear in list II. The succession to those estates, therefore, ordinarily devolves by custom upon a single heir. It is argued that this Court ought to presume, therefore, that the same is the custom with reference to the other two estates, namely the estate of Dhangarh and the present estate, although they are entered in list IV. List IV and list II are not the same thing. I am of opinion that no such presumption ought to be made. Even if it could be made it would not support the presumption of male lineal primogeniture to the exclusion of females. All that can be gathered, as I have noted above as to the desires of these persons, is that Baij Nath Kuar was standing out for the inclusion of her name alone in list I of the lists which were prepared under section 8. It appears to me that the reason why this estate appeared in list IV is to be found in the Chief Commissioner's letter of 1860, and in Exhibit A 15, the reply forwarded by the Deputy Commissioner in accordance with that letter. With this letter, as I noted before, a list was submitted in which this estate was not shown. Turning to the tentative list of those whose names might appear in list II (Exhibit 7) to which also reference has been made, it will appear, as I have already shown, that in both the estates in that list which subsequently did appear in list IV, partition was in contemplation or had been accomplished. The Dhangarh Estate had already been divided by private partition, while in the letter with which the sanad for the present estate was forwarded it was definitely recognised that any of the shareholders could claim separation of their shares. It appears that the authorities looked upon this as an estate which was not still intact.

The appellant, therefore, has failed to show that females are necessarily excluded by any custom prevailing in the family. The respondents have quoted several instances where females did as a matter of fact succeed to the estate in the absence of a direct descendant. The first example they give is that of Thakurain Kablas Kuar of the Panwansi or Dhingwas Estate, and of her co-wife Thakurain Subhag Kuar. The case of Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (3) arose out of this estate. A sanad was granted to Kablas Kuar, but it was found (and the matter is deposed to by Lal Sheopartab Bahadur Singh, aged 70 years, the present talukdar of Dhingwas, giving evidence for the respondents) that on the death of the last male owner Lal Mahpal Singh without issue, in about 1852 A. D., his elder widow Thakurain Subhag Kuar succeeded to the estate till her death. On her death, Thakurain Kablas Kuar came into possession of the estate and it was on her death that the dispute arose which was eventually taken to the Privy Council. As the result of that case the title of the daughter of Kablas Kuar was established, no custom of exclusion being proved. This is an unimpeachable instance of the succession of two widows, and a daughter, in this particular estate, which was one of the estates held by Bisen Thakurs in this district. The example of the daughter succeeding the appellant explains by saying that that was a "tribal" not a family custom, and that he has been careful to avoid setting up a tribal custom. He set up, however, a custom which he alleged to be the custom of Bisen Thakurs: and he quoted the seven families in the district: and he alleged total exclusion of females. He alleged something more than a custom confined to his family, at least a local custom. We are indeed particularly concerned with the exclusion of widows: but the importance of this instance in one of the allied families cannot be entirely brushed aside. Another example is that of Thakurain Raghubans Kuar, widow of Surajpal Singh who left no direct heir. She held the estate from the time of Surajpal's death in 1892 until her death in 1901. It is argued for the appellant that Surajpal Singh's brother Raghuraj Singh was unable to claim that estate as he had already taken possession of the Bargaon Estate as the adopted son of Baij Nath

BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. THAKURAIN HARNAM KUAR.

Kuar. This explanation does not suffice. Partab Singh brother of Surajpal Singh's father was alive at that time, and could have sued. In default of him, if Surajpal Singh left no brother because of Raghuraj Singh's adoption, the next person entitled to claim would have been, as I have shown above, the male heir in the line of Mahpal Singh, the eldest son of Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh; and that would have been, according to his allegation, Raghuraj Singh, who had said he was adopted into that line. This Partab Singh was admittedly dead when Balbhaddar Singh's suit was brought. There is no doubt that Raghubans Kuar was left in undisturbed possession because her right to remain so was recognised. On the death of Surajpal Singh she claimed mutation of names. Exhibit A 28 is a copy of the order of the Deputy Commissioner in that case. Chhatarpal Singh and Partab Singh, Surajpal Singh, uncle, opposed that application. The order is most instructive. "In accordance with the Mitakshara Law by which the right of succession to this estate is governed she should succeed to it, but it has been somewhat ingeniously urged in opposition that her deceased husband, by granting her during his life a full proprietary right in certain villages, thereby willed that she should not succeed to his estate." This order clearly shows that her title to succeed was not assailed on the grounds that by family custom she was excluded. The next instance is that of Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar. She undoubtedly held the estate, and was recognised as its owner after the death of Lal Lachhman Singh without issue in 1843. Indeed, though this is not certain, it would appear that Thakurain Behans Kuar, widow of Mahpal Singh, held it for 2 or 4 years till her death, and Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar after her and that Thakurain Behans Kuar is herself an instance of female succession. But, the facts not being clear, the respondents do not rely upon her case as constituting an instance. Another instance upon which the respondents rely is that of Thakurain Sanath Kuar of Bhadri, another of the Bisen Thakur families in this district. She was not in possession up to the time of her death, but was superseded by Raja Jagat Bahadur Singh. The talukdar before her was Gopal Singh her husband, and on his death he was succeeded by his son Amarnath Singh who was a minor. Thakurain Sanath Kuar managed the estate, the boy died young, and Thakurain Sanath Kuar continued to hold the estate as owner. Raja Jagat Bahadur Singh, in his history Exhibit 49, which is of little general value as a controversy had arisen as to Chhatarpal Singh's rights to succeed, but is of interest when he tells his own immediate history, says that Thakurain Sanath Kuar became owner of the estate after the death of Amarnath Singh, and that he himself was afterwards adopted and took over the ownership of the estate after that adoption. Chhatarpal Singh himself on several occasions refers to this lady as talukdaria of Bhadri. He refers to her in his protest of 9th January 1862 (Exhibit 65), and he refers to her in his "history" (Exhibit 41), in both cases as a well-wisher who joined with other talukdars in persuading Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar to adopt him.

I have no doubt that Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar, Thakurain Raghubans Kuar, Thakurain Subhag Kuar, Thakurain Kablas Kuar and Thakurain Sanath Kuar are all quite recent instances, which cannot be ignored, of succession of a female other than a daughter to an estate in this family, where there was no direct heir.

It has been pointed out that, on the death of Chandarpal Singh, his widow did not succeed to the estate. The explanation is to be found in the first words of the Deputy Commissioner's order. She was a claimant, so were Chandarpal Singh's 1st son, 2nd son and grandson, the latter relying upon an oral Will. The Deputy Commissioner says, "None of these allege possession, for the good reason that I took steps to prevent them." It often occurs that on the death of a talukdar there is a danger of a breach of the peace, if there be more than one claimant with a following. It is no doubt to such a danger that the Deputy Commissioner refers: he took steps to prevent a breach of the peace by ensuring that no one should be able to take forcible possession. It is further noticeable that there was a son to succeed. The case of this lady cannot, therefore, be quoted as a case to the contrary.

It has, however, been argued with much skill in this Court that it is not for the appellant to prove actual exclusion of females. It is argued that by the ordinary law as found in the Mitakshara no female has anything but a right of maintenance in joint family property, therefore, when there is joint family property which is impartible, it will go by survivorship to a single heir. Therefore, by that law the estate would survive to the appellant on the death of Lal Ram Kinkar Singh: and, therefore, it would be for the respondents to show, by complete evidence and not a few odd instances, a custom at variance with this ordinary law, by which females were admitted to a right in joint family impartible property. We have been referred to two Madras cases, The Udayar Palayam case, Kachi Yuva Rangappa Kalakka Thola Udayar v. Kachi Kalyana Rangappa Kalakka Thola Udayar (10) and The Udayar Palayam case, Kachi Kaliyana Rengappa Kalakka Thola Udayar v. Kachi Yuva Rengappa Kalakka Thola Udayar (11). Now this is quite a new line of attack. The appellant definitely set out to prove a custom, totally excluding females, Cf. paragraph 14 of the grounds of appeal. He did not allege that all the members of the family of Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh constituted a joint Hindu family, nor even all the members of the family of Ishri Bakhsh Singh. There is no suggestion of such a position in either his pleadings or the evidence which was led on his behalf. It has been held, and it is admitted to be the law, that there is no inconsistency between a custom of descent by lineal primogeniture and the right of females to inherit. A rule excluding females must be proved by those who allege it. In Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th edition, at page 752, the learned author referring to a number of authorities writes: "when the property is impartible, as being a raj or ancient zemindari, of course it can only be held by one, and then the senior widow is entitled to hold it, subject to the rights of others to maintenance." It is evidently this that the appellant had in his mind when he pleaded that in his family they had the custom of lineal primogeniture, but a custom which also excluded females. Had he the least intention of claiming on the ground that this was joint family property, it is beyond doubt that such a position, easy, if true, to establish, and hard to disprove, would have been prominently and unequivocally set up.

Considering how the appellant has failed to prove, not only the total exclusion of females, but in particular the exclusion of widows in default of direct heirs, and how the respondents have established certain undoubted instances to the contrary it is unnecessary to discuss the oral evidence produced by the respondents, which chiefly denied the existence of such a custom, by a reference to the instances the respondents indicated.

If, therefore, it even be presumed, for argument's sake, that the appellant has established the impartibility of this estate, I have no hesitation in finding that he has not established the existence of any custom by which widows are excluded: not only has he failed to do so, but the respondents have, to my mind, succeeded in establishing the contrary. And this is sufficient for our purposes: it is not necessary for us to come to a definite finding as to the nature of this estate, whether it be a partible or an impartible estate.

The appellant objected in his grounds of appeal that no finding had been had on the question of accretions, or of the personal property of Balbhaddar Singh.

That question need not delay us long. It has been admitted for the respondents before us that any acquisitions made to this estate were made out of the income of the taluka, and that neither Lal Ram Kinkar Singh nor Thakurain Harnam Kuar had any private means or property, other than the property they received as talukdar. Section 23 deals with all the property and not only with the "estate" of the talukdar who dies intestate. This law will control all the property, unless perhaps there has been a distinct intention shown that the succession to some or all of the recent acquisitions should be regulated in some other legitimate manner. It is not at all pretended that there was any intention to hold any of these subsequent acquisitions, whatever they be, separate from the parent property; and, therefore, there would be a presumption, as was held in Thakur Ishri Singh v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (12), and more recently in Janki (12) 10 C. 792; 11 I. A. 135; 8 Ind. Jur. 331; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 528; Rafique and Jackson's P. C. No. 79; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 531,

BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. THAKURAIN HARNAM KUAR.

Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh (13), that the family property followed the law relating to the taluka. It had become, that is to say, properly parcel of the talukdari estate, and, therefore, the decision of the Judicial Committee in Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Kooer (14) has no application.

I would hold, therefore, that, if any properties in schedules 2 to 5 are subsequent accretions, they would be controlled by the family custom and the law of the taluka. There is not evidence upon which this Court could determine whether the specific properties, attacked by respondents Nos. 2 to 7 as being the private properties of Babu Balbhaddar Singh, are such properties, or are held under the talukdar; nor in view of the decision of this Bench, is it necessary to call for a finding on the point.

There remains the question of the two sets of Pleaders' fee allowed against the appellant. This ground of appeal was not argued before us in the opening speech for the appellant. The respondents Nos. 2 to 7 were interested to deny, and did deny, the appellant's title. They alleged in common with respondent No. 1 that the estate on her death would go to the reversioners, but they only were interested in the ultimate destination of the estate, respondent No. 1 being only interested in its retention in her hands. They could not risk, being defendants, having a finding as to primogeniture passed against them: and it was necessary for them to instruct Counsel independent of respondent No. 1. In the circumstances I think the Court was right in allowing two sets of Pleaders' fee to be shown in the decree.

For the reasons set out above I find that succession to this estate is not governed by the sanad, and that no custom has been established by the appellant by which a widow is excluded from inheritance where there is no direct heir. Such a finding suffices for the disposal of the appeal. The appeal, therefore, should be dismissed and the decree of the lower Court maintained. The respondents should have their costs.

KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C.—The facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment of my learned colleague and need not be repeated here. The parties are Bisen Thakurs, whose ancestor Rae Hom originally came from Majholi in the district of Gorakhpur. He succeeded to the Manakpur Estate by inheritance from the maternal grandfather, Raja Manik Chand, who is stated to have adopted him sometime in 1871 A. D. Raja Ragho Singh was the great grandson of Rae Hom. He had three sons Rae Askaran Singh, Rae Kashi Singh and Rae Khem Karan Singh. Rae Askaran Singh was the founder of the Kalakankar branch, whose descendant, Raja Hanwant Singh, was entered at No. 247 in list I and No. 111 in list II, appended to Act I of 1869. Rae Kashi Singh was the founder of the Panwansi or Dhingwas branch. One of his successors was Thakurain Kablas Kuar, whose name was entered at No. 257 in list I and No. 119 in list II of the said Act. Her estate formed on her death the subject of contest between her daughter, Ranees Janki Koer, and a son by another daughter of hers, Brij Indar Bahadur Singh, and two paternal kinsmen of her husband, the decision of which will be found reported as Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranees Janki Koer (3). Another successor of Rae Kashi Singh founded a separate taluka known as Dhangarh, which was entered in the name of his descendants, Sitla Bakhsh Singh and Shankar Singh, at No. 275 in list I and No. 24 in list IV of the said Act, and was subsequently divided between them in the proportion of nine annas and seven annas respectively. Rae Khem Karan Singh was the founder of the Bhadri, Dahiawan, Sheikhpur Chauras and Kundrajit branches. The Bhadri Estate was entered in the name of Rae Jagat Bahadur Singh at No. 254 of list I and No. 118 of list II; the Dahiawan Estate was entered in the name of Sheodat Singh at No. 263 of list I and No. 122 of list II; the Sheikhpur Chauras Estate was entered in the name of Dhaunkal Singh at No. 264 of list I and No. 123 of list II; and the Kundrajit Estate was entered in the names of Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar, Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh at No. 259 of list I and No. 22 of list IV of the said Act.

BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. THAKURAIN HARNAM KUAR.

The sanad granted in respect of the Kundrajit Estate to the four persons aforesaid was a primogeniture sanad. By a partition subsequently effected between them in 1280 Fasli, the Kundrajit Estate was split up into 4 mahals. The dispute in the present case relates mainly to the mahal known as Taluka Tajpur, allotted to the share of Chhatarpal Singh, who died on the 19th October 1899, leaving a son, Lal Ram Kinkar Singh, who succeeded to his estate. In his lifetime Chhatarpal Singh executed a Will (Exhibit 2), in which he declared that according to the custom of his family the succession to his estate was governed by the rule of primogeniture, and that he desired that his son Lal Ram Kinkar Singh should succeed to his estate and maintain the remaining members of the family. The Will was executed on the 6th September 1899 and was registered, but as Chhatarpal Singh died on the 19th October 1899 within three months of the execution of the Will, it was ineffectual, except as a declaration of custom, by reason of section 13 of Act I of 1869.

Lal Ram Kinkar Singh died on the 6th October 1907, leaving a widow Musammam Harnam Kuar, and a first cousin Badri Narain Singh, in the senior line; and the main question for consideration in this case is whether by virtue of section 23 of Act I of 1869, read with the primogeniture sanad granted to Chhatarpal Singh, or the custom of the family to which a reference was made by Chhatarpal Singh in his Will, Badri Narain Singh was entitled to the estate in preference to Musammam Harnam Kuar. The learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the widow and dismissed the claim. It is not disputed that Lal Lachhman Singh was the owner of the Kundrajit Estate, and that Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh represented the heads of the junior branches of the family of Lal Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh, their common ancestor. On the death of Lal Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh, Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar claimed to have succeeded to his estate as his mother and managed to get her name entered in the sanad in respect of the Kundrajit Estate jointly with those of Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh. It is not also disputed that a primogeniture sanad was granted to them in the form given at page 336 of Sykes' Talukdari Law of Oudh, and that if section 23 of Act I of 1869 is controlled or regulated in this instance by the rule of succession laid down in the sanad, the plaintiff Badri Narain Singh is the person who would be entitled to the estate of Lal Ram Kinkar Singh in preference to Musammam Harnam Kuar. It is further conceded that the same would be the result, irrespective of the sanad, if a family custom of lineal primogeniture, excluding widows from inheritance, was established to prevail in the family to which Chhatarpal Singh belonged.

As a primogeniture sanad was granted in this instance to Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar, Chhatarpal Singh and Chandrapal Singh, one would ordinarily have expected to find these persons entered in list II or list III of Act I of 1869, according as a custom of a single heir descent may have been found to prevail in their family or the rule of primogeniture was accepted by them. In a report submitted by the Tahsil officials on the 28th November 1858 (Exhibit 50) during the progress of the second Summary Settlement, it was stated that Taluka Kundrajit had never been divided, and in a list prepared on the 22nd December 1859 (Exhibit 51), showing the custom followed in the family of talukdars, the Kundrajit Estate was similarly described as governed by the rule of primogeniture. The Settlement Officer, however, adopted the course followed at the first Summary Settlement, to which I shall presently refer, and directed the settlement to be made with Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar and the heads of three remaining branches of the family of Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh. When a list was subsequently prepared on the 13th March 1860 (Exhibit A 15) under the order of the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, No. 7/217, dated the 18th January 1860, showing the persons who are willing to secure their landed property from being broken up by sub-division, their names were consequently omitted, though Chhatarpal Singh was till then protesting against the division of the estate.

The primogeniture sanad signed by Sir Charles Wingfield, the then Chief Commissioner of Oudh, bears no date, but was delivered sometime in April 1869 (Exhibits

1, 5 and 6). On the passing of Act I of 1869, the preparation of new lists or the revision of pre-existing lists was started, and it is significant that in the list prepared at or about that time by three Tahsil officials of the Partabgarh District (Exhibit 7), showing the names of the persons in Tahsil Behar, whose estates according to the custom and usage prevailing in their families before the 13th February 1856 devolved upon a single heir, the Kundrajit Estate along with the other estates belonging to the descendants of Rae Hom was shown as an estate, the devolution of which was governed by the said custom. This list too bears no date but was obviously prepared after the sanad was granted, for against the Kundrajit Estate, it contains a note to the effect that the sanad relating to it had been granted by the Government to the four co-sharers mentioned therein, and against the Dhangarh Estate there was a similar note stating that a talukdari patla was granted by the Government but on account of mutual disputes the sanad was returned and a private partition was effected, by which 9 annas were allotted to Sitla Bakhsh Singh and 7 annas to Shankar Singh.

Both these estates were eventually removed from the proposed list II and entered in list IV as appended to Act I of 1869, but for what reasons it is difficult to say. Paragraph 2 of Circular No. 15-643, issued by the Financial Commissioner of Oudh on the 27th January 1869, required that every sanad talukdar should be required to state in writing whether he desired to enter list III or IV and every grantee should similarly declare whether he elected for list V or VI. The instructions issued by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh to the Financial Commissioner, No. 158, dated the 19th January 1869, accompanying that circular emphasised that great care must be taken in ascertaining the wishes of the persons whose names were entered in the lists in regard to the list in which they desired their names should be entered, as names could only be changed from one to the other to correct a bona fide error, and the election was final. It was also pointed out that if an estate, for which a sanad was granted, was held in shares, the name of each sharer was to be entered in the list, and joined by a bracket, and that the rest of the entry was to be one. It does not appear whether any application was made by Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar or any of her co-sharers in writing, as required by the above circular, desiring that their names may be entered in list IV, or whether the Deputy Commissioner or any of his superior officers removed their names from the proposed list II of their own sweet will. It is possible that they may have considered that the estate had degenerated into a pattidar tenure within the meaning of the Circular of the Chief Commissioner, No. $\frac{7}{1217}$ dated the 18th January 1860, to which a reference is made in the letter of the Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh, No. 207, dated the 13th March 1860 (Exhibit A 15). It is equally possible that the failure of Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar and her co-sharers to intimate their choice of the list may have led to the entry of their names, in the only list possible, namely list IV. One application, purporting to have been made by Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar on the 24th September 1863 has been produced, wherein the said lady is described as having stated that the custom of her family was that the eldest son succeeded to the estate, and the younger brother got maintenance, and the taluka remained undivided. But the original, of which a copy has been filed, was summoned and examined, and it was found that it was not signed by the lady or by any of her authorised agents. The lady was literate, and the application bears no order on it, and the possibility of somebody else having put in that application in the name of the lady cannot be lightly disregarded. No other application made by the other sanad-holders, asking for the entry of their names in list IV, is forthcoming. The only application which Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar is shown to have really made was one on the 15th May 1869, in which she objected to the association of the names of Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh in the list of talukdars along with her on the ground that they were not her co-sharers and were only entitled to maintenance. If no application was made in writing by any of the sanad-holders, expressing their selection of the list, the only list to which they could be assigned was, as I have said, the residuary list, and the entry in list IV has, therefore, no greater bearing on the question of partibility than section 23 itself.

The explanation given by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant is that the choice of list IV was deliberately made, inasmuch as the sanad-holders did not desire that their estates should be governed by the special rule laid down in section 22 of Act I of 1869, which differed in many respects from the custom which Chhatarpal Singh said had prevailed in his family. The explanation is ingenious but hardly probable, for no application purporting to have been made by the sanad-holders is either available or forthcoming. Whatever the true reason may have been, a seeming inconsistency would thus be created between the rule of succession laid down in the sanad and the effect of the entry of the names of the said persons in list IV, if the interpretation suggested by the Counsel for the defendants-respondents be accepted.

That a family custom of impartibility can be established in respect of an estate entered in list IV, is a matter which hardly requires any argument, for a custom of impartibility is not outside the scope of the ordinary law. And if a custom of impartibility can be established in respect of an estate in list IV, a rule of impartibility or primogeniture, imposed by the sanad, cannot similarly be deemed to be outside the scope of the ordinary law.

The Kundrajit Estate was managed on behalf of Lal Lachhman Singh prior to the annexation of Oudh by his mother Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar in consequence of his minority. On the death of Lal Lachhman Singh, Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar continued in possession of the estate till 1263 Fasli, when Chhatarpal Singh managed to secure a qabuliyat for himself. His right to execute a qabuliyat was, however, contested at the first Summary Settlement, and by an order of Mr. Goldney, the Settlement Commissioner, it was directed that settlement shall be made with Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar to the extent of 4 annas and with Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh, representing the other three branches of Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh, to the extent of 12 annas, Chhatarpal Singh at that time undertook to arrange for the maintenance of Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh, and he apparently continued in possession of the 12 annas share. After the Mutiny at the second Summary Settlement, Chhatarpal Singh managed to get an order passed in his favour, directing that the settlement should be made with him (Exhibit 28); but before that order was carried out, Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar effectively raised an objection to that proceeding and succeeded in getting the settlement made in favour of her and Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh jointly (Exhibits 26 and 31). Chhatarpal Singh made various efforts to get the settlement made exclusively with him, asserting that according to the custom of the family he was exclusively entitled to the estate (Exhibits 19 and 32), but his objections were overruled.

Captain McAndrew, the Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh, subsequently tried to re-open the matter on the strength of a statement, prepared by the officials of Tahsil Behar in accordance with the Circular Letter of the Chief Commissioner No. $\frac{143}{2281}$ of the 11th October 1859, in which the custom of impartibility of the Kundrajit Estate and the adoption of Chhatarpal Singh by Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar were recognised (Exhibit 51), and sent a letter to the Superintendent and Commissioner, Baiswara Division, on the 25th September 1860 (Exhibit 23), recommending that the settlement, directed in the letter of the Special Commissioner, should be re-considered, as its effect was virtually to make a co-parcenary zemindari of the estate. The result of the correspondence which ensued, however, was that the Chief Commissioner refused to re-open the matter or to declare that the Thakurain was the sole owner of the taluka for her life; and sanads were accordingly directed to be issued in the names of all the four persons jointly (Exhibit D 222.)

The grant of the sanad to four persons did not, however, necessarily make the estate partible, except as between the persons to whom the grant was made; for the sanad provided that it was a condition of the grant that in the event of sanad-holders dying intestate, or of any of their successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. The intention of the Government in granting the sanad obviously was that the estate in the hands of each of the sanad-holders would be an impartible estate, descending by primogeniture on the nearest male heir. The entry of the estate in list IV would not similarly make the estate partible, because lists II and III did not necessarily exhaust the estates which were impartible either by custom or grant. List II contained the names of persons, in whose family a custom of a single heir descent was then ascertained to exist, but did not necessarily exhaust them. List III similarly contained the names of persons the succession to whose estates was by choice governed by the rule of primogeniture, but did not exhaust estates which were impartible otherwise.

Section 10 of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869 raises a conclusive presumption that the persons, entered in the lists, were talukdars or grantees of the kind described in those lists, but it raises no presumption as to what the ordinary law includes or excludes. Had the names of Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar, Chhatarpal Singh, Surajpal Singh and Chandarpal Singh, who had accepted a primogeniture sanad (Exhibit 1), been entered in list III, as they should have been, a conclusive presumption would have attached to their estate, showing that its devolution was governed by the rule of primogeniture. But the omission or failure to enter them in list III did not imply that their estate was partible, for list IV was only a residuary list of the talukdars not entered in the preceding lists II and III, and the effect of their relegation to the general list IV was that they were deprived of the benefit of the conclusive presumption which would have otherwise attached to their estate, and were liable to be placed on their proof, in case they wanted to establish impartibility either by a family custom or by a condition of the grant.

For the purposes of succession, the talukdars were divided into two main subdivisions, namely, those whose succession was governed by section 22 and those whose succession was governed by the ordinary law of the tribe or religion to which they belonged. The object of the lists was not to lay down any rule of succession, but merely to classify the talukdars and grantees for purposes of succession according to the information which was then available to the Government or brought to its notice. The difference between lists II and III and list IV is represented by the difference between the special rule of succession laid down in section 22, and the protection of the ordinary law, prescribed by section 23, or the difference between a conclusive presumption and the necessity of positive proof, where the question of impartibility is at issue.

The meaning of the words "ordinary law" has been the subject of much discussion in this case. It could not merely imply the personal law of the intestate's tribe and religion, because the personal law applicable to Hindus and Muhammadans has, in many instances, been modified and is controlled by the Indian Statutes. In the case of Hindus, for instance, the personal law of Hindus is controlled and governed in some respects by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856), the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) and the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and the Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), wherever they are applicable. In the case of Muhammadans the provisions of the Muhammadan Law are similarly controlled and governed in some respects by the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), wherever they are applicable. It cannot, therefore, be said that a reference to the "ordinary law" in section 23 is merely meant to imply the personal law, uncontrolled by custom or acts of the Indian Legislature. As pointed out by Lord Hobhouse in a case of list II, the effect of the 11th sub-section of section 22 is simply to refer the parties to the law which would govern the descent of the property when the special provisions of the Act are exhausted, and such ordinary law would include custom [Bhai Narindar Bahadur Singh v. Achal Ram (15)]. In Parbati Kunwar v. Chandarpal Kunwar (1), Lord Collins applied the same rule to a case of list IV, governed by section 23. In other words, when the special rules of succession laid down in section 22 are exhausted, and section 22, clause (11), is reached, or when section 23 is applicable, the situation governing the succession has to be found apart from the Statute, that is in the ordinary law applicable, as if Act I of 1869 had not been passed. That ordinary law would include not only custom but also a sanad, where the sanad contains a rule of succession, which is enforceable by Statute. In Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (4), where a question arose as to the right of certain persons to succeed to an estate entered in list V under section 22, clause (11), of Act I of 1869, their Lordships of the Privy Council, after pointing out that section 22, in so far as it described, in the first ten of its sub-sections, the specific order of heirs, preferred to the succession, must have force given to it to the effect of standing as a statutory substitute for any line of succession, which might have been set forth in the sanad, observed:—"When sub-section 11—a sub-section which comes at the close of the long list of specific stages of prescribed succession—sets up the rule that in default of any one taking under the previous sub-sections, there should be preferred such persons as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law, to which persons of the religion and tribe of such talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee are subject'. Their Lordships do not see their way to hold that this is anything less than a general relegation of parties to the situation in which they would have been found apart from the Statute." They then went on to say that the situation was found in the sanad itself, and that while, as had been said, the specific rule of succession in Act I of 1869 must be held to displace it, the general reference to what was not covered by those specific rules must include a reference to the rights of the parties, as contained in the sanad, which was the original title to the property. They adverted also to the reference to the sanad in lists II and V of section 8 of Act I of 1869, but were content to treat it either as an affirmance or by way of narrative of the sanad itself. Their Lordships further emphasised that observation by referring to section 23 and pointed out that the result reached was the same, and that the declaration contained in list V of section 8 and the condition of the sanad, being part of the original title to the property, formed an essential part of that regulation of the ordinary law of the religion and tribe, and would have been respected accordingly. Section 23 does not, it is true, refer to the sanad, but refers to the ordinary law, which would, however, include the family custom, if any, and the sanad, where the sanad contains a rule of succession, enforceable by Statute. In any event, the entry in list IV does not involve any variation of or statutory substitute for the line of succession laid down in the sanad, and if it involves no variation, the ordinary law applies, and the sanad would have as much force, as if the special rule of succession laid down in Act I of 1869 had not been enacted.

Act XV of 1895 was enacted to remove doubts as to the power of the Crown to impose limitations and restrictions upon the grants and other transfers of land, made by it or under its authority, and section 3 of that Act declared that all previous restrictions, conditions and limitations, contained in any such grant or transfer as aforesaid, shall be valid and take effect according to their tenor, any rule of law, Statute or enactment of the Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding. In Sheo Singh v. Raghubans Kunwar (16) effect was given to the rule of succession, laid down in the sanad, in respect of an estate entered in list II; and except where the rule of succession, laid down therein, is definitely superseded by a family custom or a later Act of the Legislature, effect must still be given to it in regard to the estate comprised therein.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the defendants-respondents that Act I of 1869 wholly superseded the sanad; and reliance is placed in support of that proposition on the decision in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (3). In that case the estate of a female, entered in list II, was the subject of contest between her daughter on the one hand and a grandson by another daughter and certain paternal kinsmen of her husband on the other, and the contention urged on behalf of the persons who denied the right of the daughter was that the estate intended to be conferred on Thakurain Kablas Kuar was a life-estate, and that in any event, even if it was her stridhan, her daughter was excluded from it by virtue of her sex and under the terms of the sanad. A custom, excluding females from succession, was also set up but was not established. Their Lordships found that the sanad conferred and intended to confer a full proprietary and transferable right in the estate upon Thakurain Kablas Kuar and her male heirs according to the law of primogeniture, but "as regards the succession, the limitation in the sanad was wholly superseded by Act I of 1869 and that the rights of the parties, claiming by descent, must, therefore, be governed by the provisions of section 22 of that Act." As the contending parties were claiming in that case a right to succeed to the estate under section 22, clause (11), the interpretation of section 23 of Act I of 1869 was not then in issue. In the Secretary of State v. Moment (17) and Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (4) and in the more recent case of Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (5), their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out the desirability of not treating the decision in a case as an authority for what, apart from the particular facts of that case, was not raised or discussed therein. In none of the cases, in which the decision in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (3) was followed excepting that of Musammatt Parbati Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal Kuar (2), in which the question raised was one of revival, not of survival, and the supersession of the sanad by list IV was taken for granted, any question under section 23 was raised, involved or discussed; and while it is true that the special rule of succession laid down in section 22 supersedes the rule of succession, laid down in the sanad, so far as it goes, there does not appear to be any warrant for the assertion that section 23 serves the same purpose, because no positive rule of succession, destructive of the sanad, is laid down therein. In matters of succession, Act I of 1869 supersedes the sanad, as far as that Act lays down a special rule of succession, but where the Act itself says, as when clause (11) of section 22 is reached or in a case under sections 23, 30 or 31, that the succession shall be governed by the ordinary law of the tribe or religion to which the intestate belonged, the search of the heir according to the ordinary law must be made outside the Act or, as Lord Shaw has put it, in the situation apart from the Statute, that is, as if Act I of 1869 had not been passed.

The Bill to provide for the succession to and the rights in respect of certain talukas and granted estates in Oudh, as originally introduced by Lord Canning, contained in section 4 rules regulating the devolution of estates according to the law of primogeniture in cases where, owing to a pre-existing custom, the law of primogeniture had prevailed, from former years, or where a sanad or grant had been given, declaring that succession to the estate, comprised therein, shall thereafter be regulated by that law. In regard to all other estates the provision made by that Bill in section 5 was that succession to all talukas and granted estates in Oudh other than those mentioned in the preceding section, would in cases of intestacy continue to be regulated by the general or local law applicable to such talukas or estates, as if the Act had not been passed. In explaining the provisions of that Bill at the time of introducing it, Lord Canning observed that after the grants had been made and by a subsequent order of the Governor-General the principle of succession by the rule of primogeniture in respect both of the talukas which had been restored and of estates newly granted was introduced. The principle was affirmed but was not accompanied by any details. But being an Act of the Government of India, he believed that there could be no doubt of its having the full force of law. The present Bill, therefore, would only declare the principle more formally and provide in detail for the manner in which the rule of primogeniture should take effect. It would provide that in case of intestacy, the estate or taluka should go to the natural born heir, that is, to the eldest son; after failing such heir it should go to an heir by adoption; and failing an adopted heir, to the nearest collateral heir; in default of all these it would provide that the estate should go to the widow for her life and at her death to such son, as she might adopt according to the custom of her family; and lastly if all these should fail, that the estate should pass to such persons as would inherit, if this Act were not made law. (Oudh Papers for 1865, page 92.) In cases of ambiguity in the provisions of any enactment, as in the case of ancient documents, the highest Courts have invariably allowed the historical examination of the circumstances, leading to the particular enactment or provision [In re Leavesley (18) and Hilder v. Dexter (19)], and if, as stated by Lord Canning, the object of section 5 of his Bill, which now represents in another form the provisions of section 23, was to leave the person concerned to the operation of the ordinary law, the necessary implication is that that ordinary law was to be ascertained and applied, as if that Act had not been passed.

It is next urged that the object of Act I of 1869 was no other than to regulate the course of succession and to supersede the rule relating thereto laid down in the sanad. This is unquestionably true, where the Act lays down a special rule of succession, different from that laid down in the sanad, but could the same have been intended, where the Act merely says that the succession to the remaining estates shall be governed by the ordinary law? It is suggested that the preamble to Act I of 1869 indicates such an intention. A preamble is a key to open the meaning of the makers of the Act and the mischief it was intended to remedy [Salkeld v. Johnston (20)]; but it cannot control or cut down the express provisions of the Act itself [Sutton v. Sutton (21).] The preamble in this case, after referring to the grant of proprietary rights in diverse estates under certain conditions by the British Government, goes on to say that, whereas doubts may arise as to the nature of the rights of the talukdars or grantees in such estates and the course of succession thereto, it was expedient to prevent such doubts and to regulate such course, and to provide for some other matters connected therewith.

A perusal of the correspondence which preceded the passing of Act I of 1869 shows that the doubts related both to the validity of the orders of the executive Government, conferring a permanent, heritable and transferable right in the estates granted, burdened with certain conditions, and to the order of succession which was to govern their devolution according to the rule of primogeniture laid down in the sanad or according to the custom or personal law. In regard to the former, legal opinion was taken as to the operation of section 65 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, on the orders and directions of the Chief Commissioner of Oudh and the Government of India (Oudh Papers for 1865, page 143); and as regards the latter, paragraph 136 of the Oudh Administration Report for 1860-61 stated: "Several cases of succession have already occurred. In one of these the gaddi had always existed in the family of the deceased talukdar, who died intestate and without progeny. It was found that it was a rule of the family, that in such a case the estate went to the widow, who could adopt any member of the clan with the consent of the brotherhood. The Chief Commissioner, however, ruled that the law of primogeniture must, under the Governor-General's instructions, be enforced; that by the law the succession of a female is not recognised, and that the estate must descend to the nearest male heir, who in the case in point was the father of the deceased, he having succeeded by adoption. The present Officiating Chief Commissioner being doubtful whether His Excellency intended to set aside local customs in families in which the gaddi had always existed, and substitute in their place the strict rule of primogeniture, has referred for further orders." (Ibid, page 34).

Though designed to remove doubts and regulate the course of succession, the Act did not, however, regulate the course of succession, except in regard to certain estates and to a certain extent, for in section 22, clause (11), and sections 23, 30 and 31 recourse was left to be had to the ordinary law to which the members of the intestate's tribe and religion were subject.

BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. THAKURAIN HARNAM KUAR.

Sections 3 and 6 are similarly relied on in proof of the supersession of the sanad, but these sections, instead of superseding the sanad, only go to affirm it. The sanad is specifically referred to in sections 3, 6 and 8 and indirectly referred to in sections 4, 5 and 11. Sections 3 and 11 expressly declare that every talukdar holding an estate shall be deemed to have a permanent, heritable and transferable right therein subject to all the conditions contained in the sanad under which the estate was conferred by the British Government. In Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (3) the conditions referred to in section 3 have been taken to imply the conditions of loyalty, good service and the like, and that would unquestionably be the case where the property in dispute appertains to lists II, III or V, for the rule of succession laid down in the sanad is superseded pro tanto by the special rules of succession prescribed by section 22 of the Act. Their Lordships there observed that the positive limitations contained in section 22 were not in any way controlled by the general provisions of section 3; and the same might be said in regard to the language used in section 11, where lists II, III and V are concerned. But in the case of the other lists, which are not governed by any positive limitations such as those contained in section 22, it might well be doubted whether their Lordships intended that the remaining conditions of the sanad were to be entirely superseded or treated as a dead letter. The situation created by sections 3, 4 and 21 of the U. P. Amending Act (III of 1910) has no relevancy, because that Act does not apply so as to disturb vested rights. As pointed out by Lord Haldane in Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co. (22), a precedent is of value on account of the principle it embodies or the light it throws on its determination. But if that decision is applied to other cases, regardless of the particular facts under which it was arrived at, the situation reached may lead to complicated results.

Section 1 of the Bill, introduced by Lord Canning to regulate the succession to talukdari estates, provided that the talukdar with whom the Summary Settlement had been made or to whom an estate had been granted had a right to transfer the estate to any person he liked "subject, however, to all conditions of service expressed in the grant or order under which such taluka or estate is held and saving all subordinate rights of occupancy or otherwise in such taluka or estate" (Oudh papers for 1865, page 88). By Act I of 1869, the proviso was extended to all the conditions affecting the talukdars contained in the orders of the 10th and 19th October 1859, appended to the Act, and to all the conditions contained in the sanad under which the estate was held; and Mr. Strachey, who introduced the Bill which subsequently became law, in discussing the provisions of section 3 said: "It will be observed that there is an important change at the end of section 3. As the Bill originally stood, it provided that the estate should be held subject to all the conditions affecting it in the form of sanad, contained in the orders passed by the Governor-General of India on the 10th and 19th of October and re-published in the schedule of the Bill. It was subsequently pointed out that all the sanads are not in that form, but that several other forms had for some reason or other been adopted. As it would be evidently inadvisable to invalidate those sanads, it was thought proper to insert words 'subject to the conditions under which the estate was held', and the form of sanad has consequently been omitted from the schedule" (Proceedings of the Council of the Governor-General for 1869, page 19). The opinion then expressed by Mr. Strachey in explaining the provision is, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lal Mullick (23), of no great value, except for the purpose of indicating the history of the changes that were made from time to time while the Bill was under consideration, (Halsbury's laws of England, Vol. 27, page 141). It cannot, however, be disputed both from what Lord Canning said, and what Mr. Strachey reiterated, that the object of Act I of 1869 was not so much to do away with the sanad as to explain and extend the rule of primogeniture laid down therein, and to give another opportunity to those who had not previously taken primogeniture sanads to make a final selection of the list. It was open to the Legislature to modify or supersede the rule of succession, laid down in the sanad, but such an intention ought to be clear and manifest. Sections 6 and 22 bear evidence of a manifest intention to supersede the sanad, so far as they go, but there are no other sections, from which such an intention can be inferred or deduced. Section 23 contains no positive rule of succession, and merely leaves the persons entered in list IV to the protection of the ordinary law. Having regard to the manner in which the lists were prepared, lists II and III cannot be deemed to have exhausted the cases of impartibility, for as the Chief Commissioner of Oudh observed in paragraph 9 of his letter of the 13th August 1863, there were within his knowledge 12 well-known gaddi families which did not agree to change their old sanads and take primogeniture sanads in return (Oudh Papers for 1865, page 97). The sanads represent the root of the title, and must be given force, unless superseded by custom or some positive Act of the Legislature. Section 23 of Act I of 1869 is not such an Act, for it suggests the search for an heir outside the Act by reference to such other laws, including a sanad or custom, as might be applicable to the estate. The ordinary law, referred to in section 22, clause 11, and section 23, must, therefore, be deemed to be the law as restricted, controlled or qualified by custom or by the conditions of the grant, if any, and succession must be determined accordingly.

The evidence afforded by the histories, filed by the different members of the branch, to which Chhatarpal Singh belonged, including that by Chhatarpal Singh himself, when read with the other evidence adduced in the case, establishes that the custom of a single heir descent prevailed in the family from the time of Rae Hom. There were no occasions during the early period of the history of the family, when none but a widow was available, except one referred to in the history filed by Jagat Bahadur Singh (Exhibit 49); but it is not clear whether in that case, the family was joint or separate, for in a joint family a brother would generally be preferred to a widow. The subsequent instances, which have, however, occurred in the branch of Ajudhia Bakhsh Singh, leave no room for doubt that widows have succeeded to the exclusion of brothers or nephews. On the death of Mahpal Singh, his senior widow, Musammatt Subhao Kuar, succeeded to the estate and on her death the estate went to his junior widow, Musammatt Kablas Kuar. On the death of Musammatt Kablas Kuar, the property went to her daughter, Musammatt Janki Kuar, though a son of another daughter of hers and some paternal kinsmen of her husband were alive. On the death of Surajpal Singh, his widow, Musammatt Raghubans Kuar, succeeded to the estate to the exclusion of Raghuraj Singh, the brother of Surajpal Singh, and Partab Singh, another male member of the family. On the death of Musammatt Raghubans Kuar, Balbaddar Singh sued for possession of a one-fourth share of that estate, but was unsuccessful. The finding of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Har Shankar Partab Singh v. Lal Raghuraj Singh (9) was that Musammatt Baij Nath Kuar had succeeded as a widow and that the property of her husband devolved on her death on Raghuraj Singh. Indarpal Singh and Ranbir Singh, two of the witnesses of the plaintiff, admit in their evidence that females succeed to the inheritance, in certain circumstances, and though that fact is now denied by the plaintiff, it is clear from his statement (Exhibit A 39) that the entry of the name of the defendant-appellant was made with his consent. The succession of Thakurain Baij Nath Kuar on the death of her son, Lal Lachhman Singh, and those of Musammatt Raghubans Kuar and Musammatt Sanath Kuar on the death of Surajpal Singh (Exhibit A 28) and Amar Nath Singh (Exhibit 49) respectively similarly indicate that a widow or mother was not necessarily excluded by reason of her sex, though the estate might be impartible. My learned colleague has discussed the evidence adduced on the point in considerable detail, and it is, therefore, not necessary to refer to it here at any greater length. In the Will, executed by Chhatarpal Singh (Exhibit 2), a reference is made to a custom by which the estate devolved on the eldest son, and the junior sons were only entitled to maintenance, and a practical instance in which effect was given to that custom is found in the proceedings which resulted in Sumer Singh getting some property from his brother Chandarpal Singh in lieu of his maintenance (Exhibits 15, 16 and 81).

The effect of the primogeniture sanad was to give a new title to the grantees, unfettered and unrestricted by any previous conditions, but in spite of that grant the old custom was preserved by the family and maintained. It continued in full force and was given effect on all occasions on which succession opened out on the death of any male member of the family, and not one instance has been cited, showing that a particular kinsman was successful in dislodging a widow from succeeding to the estate by reason of her sex. The conclusion, which can be drawn from the above circumstances, is obviously one in favour of the claim of a widow succeeding to the estate, although the devolution thereof was governed by a custom of a single heir descent. With the exception of two branches of the family, all the other branches of the family of Rae Hom are admittedly entered in list II and have been following the custom of impartibility. The primogeniture sanad granted to Chhatarpal Singh also imposed impartibility on the estate, and in the absence of evidence to show that the custom was one of pure lineal primogeniture, as alleged in the plaint, and that a widow was excluded from inheritance, the plaintiff is not entitled to oust her from the estate.

The conflict between the rule of succession, laid down in the sanad, and the custom of the family creates another position of some difficulty. Under section 3, clause (b), of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) predominance is given to custom in matters of succession, unless it has been expressly altered or abolished by that or any other enactment or declared to be void by any competent authority. The custom of the family will, therefore, govern the succession in preference to any rule laid down in the sanad, for that rule is as much capable of being superseded by a positive enactment of the Legislature as by custom.

With regard to the properties entered in Schedules II to V appended to the written statement, it is not disputed that they were acquired partly by Chhatarpal Singh and partly by Ram Kinkar Singh from the income of the estate comprised in the sanad. It is not shown that they had any other sources of income. The custom of the family would govern their devolution as much as that of the property comprised in the sanad. It is not necessary to determine whether the sanad will apply to them or not. No arguments have been addressed to us in regard to the personal property claimed by defendants Nos. 2 to 7.

Defendants Nos 2 to 7 claim reversionary rights in the estate. Their rights are not identical with those of defendant No. 1 and there is no reason why, if they have been dragged into the case, their costs should be treated as having merged in those of defendant No. 1. The contingency of the plaintiff or any of those defendants succeeding on the death of Musammatt Harnam Kuar is still uncertain.

For the above reasons I agree in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 31
OF 1907.

February 16, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Beachcroft and Mr. Justice Walmsley.

In re SRIMOTI PRASANNA MOYEE
BASU—APPLICANT—APPELLANT.

In the matter of the Will of KRITANTA KUMAR BOSE.

Probate, grant of, delay in—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 19 (H) (4), 19 (I)—Motion of Collector, delay in, effect of.

The grant of Probate to a petitioner, who has filed the valuation required by section 19 (I) of the Court Fees Act and has also paid the Court-fee requisite under that section, cannot be delayed on account of the Collector's omission in making a motion under section 19 (H), sub-section (4), of the Court Fees Act. [p. 577, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Deligate, first Court, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 30th January 1917.

FACTS.—In this matter Srimati Prasanna Moyi Basu, executrix to the Will of the late Babu Kritanta Kumar Basu, made an application for probate in the Court of the District

GOPAL CHANDRA MUKHOPADHYA v. PROBHA CHANDRA BISWAS.

Delegate of 24 Pergannahs. The application was made on 3rd May 1916, and Probate was ordered to be granted on 28th July 1916 and the affidavit as to valuation was sent to the Collector of 24-Pergannahs on 29th June 1916; but the Collector made delay in sending his reports as to the valuation.

Thereafter an application was made under section 19 I of the Court Fees Act, praying for issue of Probate on the valuation made by the petitioners on which proper duty had already been paid. The District Delegate rejected the application recording the following order:—

“Collector has not as yet sent his report. The applicant prays for the issue of a certificate at once under sub-section (2), section 19-I of the Court Fees Act, but in this case there is no motion by the Collector under section 19 H, sub section (4). I do not find any provision to issue a certificate pending enquiry by the Collector regarding the valuation. Prayer rejected.”

Against this order the petitioner preferred an appeal to the High Court.

Babu Bipin Behary Ghose (with him Babu Bipin Chandra Bose), for the Appellant, read sections 19 H, 19 I and 19 J of the Court Fees Act. Section 19 I, clause 2, provides that grant of Probate shall not be delayed even if the Collector makes a motion, but in this case there is no motion and yet the grant of Probate is being delayed. There is a provision for realization of deficit Probate duty by the Collector, and the Government revenue will not suffer in the least if Probate certificate is granted.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra (Senior Government Pleader), for the Government, contended that he could not support the orders of the District Delegate and observed that the public revenue was safe as the Collector could recover any excess duty payable by suit and cited Nikunja Rani v. Secretary of State (1).

JUDGMENT.—The learned Government Pleader, to whom we ordered a notice of this application to be given, has conceded that he cannot oppose this application for issue of Probate.

(1) 31 Ind. Cas. 460; 22 C. L. J. 375; 20 C. W. N. 504; 43 C. 230.

The petitioner has filed the valuation required by section 19 I of the Court Fees Act and has also paid the fee requisite under that section. The learned Judge seems to think that because the Collector has not made a motion under section 19 H, sub-section (4), the probate cannot be granted. Sub-section (2) of section 19 I says that the grant of Probate should not be delayed by reason of a motion by the Collector under section 19 H. If the grant is not to be delayed in a case where the Collector has made a motion, we do not see on what principle the grant can be delayed where he has not made a motion.

The appeal is allowed and Probate will be issued at once.

Let the order be sent down at once.

Appeal allowed.

A restricted scope is not to be attributed to section 4 of the Partition Act. The section applies even where the person who claims partition of a family dwelling-house has also obtained a transfer of a share of other family property.

JUDGMENT.—We are not disposed to accept the argument whereby a restricted scope is attributed by the appellant to section 4 of the Partition Act of 1893. The interpretation he seeks to put upon the section is that it has no application when the person, who claims partition of a dwelling-house, has also obtained a transfer of a share of other property. This limited construction was negatived in the case of Khirode Chandra v. Saroda Prosad (1). In our opinion the effect of section 4 is to exclude the dwelling-house from the partition suit if one or other member of the family is willing to pay the price thereof and purchase it as provided in that section. This was the contingency which happened in this case. It was faintly argued, as a last resort, that the application of section 4 was excluded by reason of the rent sale. Mr. Justice Walmsley has conclusively shown that the rent sale did not, for any practical purpose, affect the mutual rights and obligations of the parties. Consequently section 4 is applicable and in that view there is no doubt that the decree of Mr. Justice Walmsley is correct.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Suit for damages for breach of contract—Appeal, second, whether lies—Mortgage—Zar-i-peshgi lease—Ejectment by lessor—Mortgagee, right of, to recover damages for dispossession.

Under the terms of a contract embodied in a registered instrument the plaintiff was entitled to remain in possession of certain land for five years. After the expiry of that period the proprietors of the land obtained a decree for the ejectment of the plaintiff from the Revenue Courts. The plaintiff then sued the defendants for a sum of Rs. 125 with interest on the allegation that he could not be legally ejected from his possession over the land without the payment of that sum.

Held, (1) that if the plaintiff's suit could be treated as a suit for damages for breach of contract, the second appeal to the High Court was barred by section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the suit was cognizable by a Small Cause Court; [p 579, col 1.]

(2) that if the contract upon which the plaintiff based his suit was a mortgage, then inasmuch as he was not in possession at the date of the suit, he was not entitled to recover the sum paid by him. [p. 579, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore.

Mr. Sheo Diyal Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit arising out of a certain contract embodied in a registered instrument of the 2nd of October 1903. Under this instrument the plaintiff obtained possession of certain land of which the predecessor-in-title of the defendants was the owner. It is admitted that under the terms of the contract the plaintiff was entitled to remain in possession for five years. After this period had expired the proprietors of the land instituted proceedings against the plaintiff for his ejectment, describing him as a lessee or tenant of the land in question. The case was contested in the Revenue Courts up to the highest Court of revision, but ended in a decree for the ejectment of the plaintiff.

The present suit is based upon the allegation that the plaintiff could not legally be ejected by the defendants from his possession over this land without the defendants first paying him a sum of Rs. 125. The claim is for this sum with interest. The Court of first instance decreed the claim and that decree has been reversed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore. The real question about which the parties have been disputing is whether the document of the 2nd of October 1903 was really a lease or a mortgage. The main point taken in the appeal now before us is that the defendants, having succeeded in obtaining from the Revenue Courts the ejectment of the plaintiff by representing him as a mere lessee, were not entitled in this suit to obtain a decree in their favour on the strength of certain legal difficulties based upon the finding that the document in question was in reality a mortgage, though drawn up under the form of a lease. To this contention there appears to be more than one answer. If the plaintiff had come into Court alleging that he was a lessee, who had formerly held under a contract of lease, pure and simple, and that he had been deprived of his possession as such lessee under circumstances which amounted to a breach of contract on the part of his lessors, for which breach of contract he was entitled to recover damages to an amount sufficiently apparent from the terms of the contract itself, he might or might not have had an arguable case. The suit, however, would have been a wholly different suit from that actually brought, and it would beyond question have been a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, within the meaning of section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Supposing that it were possible at this stage to treat the plaintiff's suit as having been nothing more than what is above stated, we could not entertain a second appeal in this matter, in view of the provisions of the section above referred to, the subject-matter of the present suit being admittedly less than Rs. 500 in value. As a matter of fact, the plaintiff based his suit upon the allegation that he was in reality the mortgagee of this land under the contract of the 2nd of October 1903. He distinctly alleged that the contract in his favour amounted in law to a possessory mortgage, although it was drawn up in the form of a zar-i-peshgi or a premium lease. This plea by the plaintiff was admitted by the defendants in their written statement. It may be contended that, in making this admission, the defendants were departing from the position taken up by them in the Revenue Courts. The materials on the record before us make it a little difficult to determine this point with certainty; but in any case it seems impossible to hold that the plaintiff is entitled, at a subsequent stage of the litigation, to make it a grievance that an important allegation of fact contained in his own plaint was admitted by the defendants. If the contract of the 2nd of October 1903 was in the eye of the law a mortgage, then the reasoning of the Court below is correct. What the plaintiff really obtained under this contract of mortgage was a right in law to treat his mortgagors as ex-proprietary tenants of the land in suit, and to get a rent assessed on them as such. This point was clearly laid down by a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, in Dipan Rai v. Ram Khelawan Rai (1), the principle of which seems to have been affirmed in subsequent decisions of this Court. We cannot concern ourselves with the question whether or not the Revenue Courts were right, on the law or on the facts, in ejecting the present plaintiff from his possession over the land in suit. We know that he was not in possession on the date on which this suit was instituted and the Court below is right in saying that he, being out of possession and coming into Court as plaintiff, was not entitled, either to a decree for recovery of possession (which he did not even claim) or to a decree for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 125 paid nominally as a premium upon the contract of lease, if that payment is to be regarded as having been in reality the mortgage-debt advanced upon a contract of mortgage. On these grounds this appeal must fail and we dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

An adjudication by a Court determining the right of one party to an account for certain years and dismissing the claim for certain other years comes within the definition of a decree as given in section 2, clause (4), Civil Procedure Code, and as such is appealable. [p. 580, col. 1.]

A claim for mesne profits is not a claim the value of which cannot be ascertained. The plaintiff in such a case must, therefore, put a valuation on his claim and pay ad valorem Court-fee thereon. He cannot recover anything in excess of the valuation thus put by him. [p. 580, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—This is an appeal against an order by the learned Subordinate Judge determining the period within which mesne profits shall be payable. Two preliminary objections have been made. The first is that no appeal lies and the second is that the Court-fee which has been paid is insufficient. The question whether an appeal lies or not has to be determined with reference to the definition of the word decree in the Code of Civil Procedure. If the order by the learned Subordinate Judge amounts to a decree within the terms of that definition then an appeal lies, otherwise there is no appeal. In that definition it is said that a decree means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final. This order by the learned Subordinate Judge certainly appears to be a conclusive determination of the right of one party to an account for certain years in the suit and the dismissal of the claim of that party for certain other years in suit. It is, therefore, in my opinion a decree within the meaning of that definition, and this view of the matter has the support of the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (1). The change in the wording of the definition of the decree with reference to the terms of the former section 244 does not appear to me to be relevant in the present instance, for the passage in their Lordships' judgment on which I rely occurs in the portion of the judgment which precedes the discussion of the meaning of the definition of the decree as it formerly stood. I would, therefore, hold that an appeal lies.

In regard to the amount of Court-fee payable, it cannot be said to be a case in which the value of the appeal cannot be ascertained. The appellant hopes, if he succeeds in this appeal, to obtain a large sum which he has stated in his plaint. The Court-fee payable is, therefore, in my opinion an ad valorem fee. In expressing this view we are conscious that we are departing from what was considered to be the practice and it would, in our opinion, be fair to allow the appellant time until Monday the 26th February 1917 to amend the valuation in his plaint. Now that he is aware that he will have to pay an ad valorem Court-fee he may, if he thinks it desirable, amend the valuation in his plaint. If he does so, he will be limited to the amount stated in his plaint and will not be permitted to recover any amount in excess of that. On that date an order will be given giving the appellant time to pay the Court-fee.

The appellant has been treated with some indulgence. The respondent Rai Bahadur Baijnath Goenka is entitled to his costs for this day's hearing. I assess the fee at five gold mohurs. The other respondent is not entitled to any costs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

A suit for mesne profits is a suit for money demanded as damages or compensation and in that sense it is to be assessed with an ad valorem fee. Even if it be regarded as a suit for an account, the Court Fees Act, section 7 (iv), in its last clause is peremptory that any such suit shall be approximately valued. The same provision has now been introduced into the Civil Procedure Code. The old practice of allowing plaintiffs to include in a suit for land a suit for money as mesne profits without paying any Court-fee upon the mesne profits was undoubtedly wrong and in my view a circular should be issued to the lower Courts drawing attention to this error in practice.

Order accordingly.

The doctrine of contemporanea exposito must be restricted to the acts and conduct of the grantor beginning contemporaneously with the grant and continued for a long course of years and should not be extended to acts and conduct done, say, 40 years after the date of grant. [p. 583, col. 2.]

Government, which absolutely owned certain lands, leased them to the plaintiffs. On the date of the lease, there were tenants already on the land. One of the terms of the lease which the plaintiffs obtained on renewal (and on which date the tenants claimed permanent rights of occupancy) was that the lessees will not do any act "which may grow to the grievance or damage of the Government of India or the Government of Madras or their tenants." Subsequent to the grant, one of the grantees described himself as a mirasidar in the pattas granted to the tenants and 11 years before the renewed lease one of the lessees recognised the right of permanent occupancy in the tenants and issued pattas in recognition thereof.

Held, that this covenant was the usual one in English indentures creating leases by which the lessor protects himself against the acts of his lessees which might injure other tenants of his, and could not be construed as conferring permanent rights of occupancy on tenants in the occupation of the land. [p. 584, cols. 1 & 2.]

Held, also, that it could not be said in the circumstances of this case that the plaintiffs represented themselves as acting on behalf of these tenants also or ever did represent these tenants when or before they obtained a renewal of the lease from Government and that in such circumstances they could not be presumed to have secured an advantage which they must hold for the benefit of the tenants as trustees under section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act. [p. 585, col. 1.]

Where land really belongs to Government, no question of estoppel and no question under section 43 of Act IV of 1832 arise so as to interfere with the rights of the subsequent grantee from the Government. [p. 585, col. 1.]

A tenancy by estoppel cannot be created where the act of the landlord which is relied upon and which created a lesser right than the landlord represented himself to be entitled to create, did confer upon the tenant a right as lessee for some term, however short. [p. 585, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—In these 61 connected second appeals the appellants are the principal defendants in the suits. The suits were brought in ejectment, the appellants being treated as having been sub tenants from year to year of persons who owned rights in the lands as grantees of lease-rights under the East India Company under a grant of 1801, that grant being a grant of lease rights for 99 years. After that grant expired in January 1900 the plaintiffs became direct lessees of the Government (from the date of the expiry of the prior grant) for another term of 99 years. The prior grant of 1801 is evidenced by the indenture Exhibit P. 1, while the new grant of 1904 is evidenced by the indenture Exhibit A.

The following facts may be set out to understand the conditions on both sides.

The East India Company claimed to be the owners of the lands in dispute in January 1801. It appears from the Chingleput District Manual that in 1760 a grant was made to the East India Company of the Chingleput District by the Nawab Muhammad Ali as a jaghir or estate and that the grant was confirmed in 1763. This word jaghir is a word of very undefined significance, but as regards the particular lands in dispute the East India Company considered themselves to be the owners. Soon after

SWAMINATHA MUDALI v. SARAVANA MUDALI.

January 1801, the Company became the sovereign power for the territories in which these lands were situated and it is of course absurd to speak of them thereafter as jaghir-dars of these lands under themselves or to speak of these lands as a jaghir estate.

Now the lease of 1801 under Exhibit P was made to two European gentlemen, Messrs. Roebuck and Abbott, who seem to have already (presumably with the Company's permission) almost completed a brick building on a portion of the 300 cawnies of the leased lands and seem to have effected other improvements. The material portions of this document Exhibit P are to the following effect:—

(1) The lessees and their heirs and assigns etc., were entitled "to have, hold, use, occupy, possess and enjoy the leased lands" "with all the benefits and advantages" at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,575 in consideration of a small premium of five pagodas paid then and the payment of additional premia of Rs. 105 to be paid at the end of every thirty years.

(2) The lessees, etc., "shall not do or cause anything to be done upon the leased premises" "which shall grow to the annoyance, grievance or damage of the said Company, their tenants or the inhabitants or their bounds."

(3) If the lessees, or their heirs, or assigns, etc., shall commit breach of any of the covenants, the Company may "re-enter" upon the leased premises "or any part thereof in the name of the whole" and "have again, possess and enjoy the same." Subsequently, by successive assignments the right under Exhibit P—which I shall call grant-ownership—passed in 1816 to a Mudaliar belonging to the well-known Manali family. See Exhibit Q. Since then this grant-ownership has remained either with the members of the Manali family or with the members of a family connected with them by marriage; and at the time of the expiry of the lease in January 1900, the grant-ownership was vested in Manali Ramakrishna Mudali, the father of the present plaintiffs.

About the year 1840, the Manali Mudaliar who then owned the grant-right seems to have sold the lands to his brother, claiming not only the grant-ownership right but also the right as mirasidar in the lands. For the first time evidently, about 40 years after the grant, the person representing the original grantees seems to have set up an independent mirasi right in the lands. See Exhibit S. Then about the year 1850 or so, this alleged mirasi right in the lands seems to have become the subject of dispute between the grant-owners and their tenants now represented by the defendants. That mirasi right which included the occupancy right in the lands was finally decided to belong to the grant-owners as between them and their tenants. See Exhibits D to G. In 1889, however, about 11 years before the expiry of the term of the grant, the tenants seem to have been recognized by the then grant-owner as having occupancy rights in their holdings. These documents of recognition—the pattas—have been noted in the footnote at page 37 of the judgment of the District Munsif. When the term of the grant of 1801 expired in January 1900, the Revenue Officers of the District entered into correspondence with their higher officers as to the proper mode of the future disposal of these lands. In May 1900 Manali Ramakrishna Mudali applied for the renewal of the lease for another term of 99 years, or, in the alternative, for the grant of a ryotwari patta to him by the Government. The tenants seem, in rivalry, to have applied for the grants of ryotwari pattas to themselves. While these questions were being considered, Ramakrishna Mudali died. The present two plaintiffs are his sons and in December 1904 they were granted a renewal lease evidenced by Exhibit A.

These suits have been brought in ejectment after the issue of notices to the defendants to quit the lands.

The lower Courts decreed the plaintiffs' suits on these two findings of facts, namely, (1) that the East India Company were full owners of the plaintiff lands (known as Pczhal lines lands) at the time of the grant of 1801 and that the Government were full owners at the time of the second grant of 1904 to the plaintiffs; and

(2) that no miras right (whether it means permanent occupancy right or whether it means the peculiar right of some Chingleput mirasidars to swathantharam, kuppatam and other minor perquisites in consideration of their once having been full kudicaram owners) – that no miras right vested either in the grant-owners or in any of their successors or in the tenants (defendants).

Now Mr. Rangachariar for the appellants (defendants) contested the validity of the above two findings of fact and he also argued a long array of other contentions which, however, might be summarised under 2 or 3 heads as follows:—(1) that under the grant A itself of 1904 the Government recognized the occupancy rights of the defendants and that, therefore, the plaintiffs cannot contest such rights, which they were bound to recognize under the terms of their own grant;

(2) that in 1839 there was a contract by the then grant-owner Vythilinga Mudali to transfer the rights of occupancy to the tenants and that there was such a transfer in 1839; and

(3) that even if the transfer and the contract of transfer of 1839 conferred no permanent kudivaram right in favour of the defendants (the tenants), they were entitled, after the plaintiffs got the second grant, to claim such occupancy rights (at least during the 99 years' term of the second grant) as against the plaintiffs, (a) on the strength of section 18 of the Specific Relief Act, or (b) under the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, or (c) under section 90 of the Trusts Act, or (d) on the doctrine of estoppel.

As regards the first question, namely whether the East India Company were full owners, the first grantees, viz., the two European gentlemen to whom the Company granted the lease, could not surely deny the title of their landlord who claimed full ownership. Mr. Rangachariar was obliged to argue that even at the time of the grant there were some mirasidars—some unknown people who had occupancy rights in these lands. That is very improbable, as it appears from Exhibit B that the lands were waste lands and that it was only the grantees under Exhibit F who made improvements and built buildings thereon. We are asked to give no weight to Exhibit B on the ground that it contains some mistakes. The lower Courts are entitled to find facts on the evidence including the documentary evidence. The question of the weight to be given to the evidence rests with them, not with us in second appeal. Even if the East India Company were known as jaghirdars in 1801, a jaghirdar might have absolute interests in waste lands and even in cultivated lands, and the presumption which has been adopted in respect of grants of jaghirs by the British Government cannot reasonably be applied to grants made by the Nawabs of the Carnatic. It also appears to me from the documents contained in Exhibit Z that the Government, the tenants, the plaintiff's father, all acknowledged the right of the Government to dispose of these lands in their absolute discretion, either by granting ryotwari patta to anybody they liked or by granting a fresh lease. As I have already suggested, even if the East India Company were mere jaghirdars, they became full owners after the territory passed to them by treaty and their grant must be a grant of the right to directly take possession of the soil of the lands as lessees, unless it is shown that somebody else owned the kudivaram rights in the lands in 1801. As regards the alleged mirasi right of others, it was only (as already remarked) about 40 years after the grant that it was first set up and the Government is clearly not bound by what the successors of their grantees stated behind the back of Government. The case of Raghojirao Saheb v. Lakshmanrao Saheb (1) relied upon by Mr. Rangachariar has no relevancy. Their Lordships of the Privy Council point out in that case the danger of relying upon the doctrine of contemporanea exposito and restrict the application of the doctrine to the acts and conduct of the grantor, beginning contemporaneously with the grant and continued that for a long course of years. Here we are asked to extend that doctrine to declarations of the grantee's successor made 40 years afterwards behind the back of the grantor. I think that we ought to accept the finding of fact of both the lower Courts that no mirasi right existed in these lands in 1801 in any person other than the East India Company and if none existed then, no such right could have come into existence afterwards which could be set up validly against the Government. It may also be noted here that these lands were carved out of two villages by an artificial line and hence they seem to have become known as Fuzhal Line lands. The usual argument that villages in the Chingleput District were formerly miras villages could not, therefore, be applied to these lands. It is unnecessary to speculate whether this assertion of miras right in 1840 for the first time (there being no indication in the assertion itself as to how the miras right was acquired or how it originated) was due to the grantee's anxiety to protect himself against his tenants' setting up occupancy rights in themselves or whether it was due to his intention to claim occupancy rights for his successors against the Government after the expiry of the term of the grant or to both motives. On the findings that the Government owned and own the absolute right in the soil of the lands and that they are not mere melvaramdars, it is unnecessary to consider another contention raised by Mr. Rangachariar that the lands formed part of an unsettled jaghir estate [clause 2 (c) of section 3 of the Estates Land Act] and that the tenants occupying lands therein are ryots in such an estate entitled to permanent occupancy rights from the date when the Estates Land Act came into force, under section 6 of the Act. The above disposes of contentions 1 and 2 of Mr. Rangachariar.

As regards the third contention, namely, that the Government itself by Exhibit A directed the plaintiffs not to interfere with the occupancy rights of the defendants. This contention is founded upon the following covenant in Exhibit A, namely, that the lessees, their heirs, etc., will not do any act, "which may grow to the grievance or damage of the Government of India or the Government of Madras or their tenants." Mr. Rangachariar argued that "their tenants" meant the tenants of the lands, namely, the defendants. This clause has been taken from the former indenture Exhibit P of 1801 where the words are "the damage of the said Company, their tenants or the inhabitants or their bounds." Clearly the expression "their tenants" in Exhibit P means the Company's tenants. The same expression when used in Exhibit A clearly means "the tenants of the Government of India or the Government of Madras." This covenant is the usual covenant in English indentures creating leases, by which the lessor protects himself against the acts of his lessees which might injure other tenants of his (i.e., of the lessor) either of the same land or of neighbouring lands, and also against acts of his lessee which might cause nuisance or damage to neighbouring landowners.

The 4th contention of Mr. Rangachariar was argued in a rather indefinite way. That is, sometimes he argued that the event of 1889 on which he relied was a contract to transfer rights in lands and at other times as if it was a completed transfer of such rights. I shall consider his contention in both of its aspects. So far as I could find from the written statement (paragraph 9) the defendants do not set up that there was a contract by Vythilinga Mudaliar to transfer his mirasi or occupancy right to them: Nor do they set up that there was an actual transfer of any such right. A transfer of the permanent occupancy right in immoveable property can be made either by a registered instrument or by giving possession if the transfer was an oral transaction of sale. As I said, I cannot find any language in the written statement, which could be treated as asserting a transfer to defendants at that time of an occupancy right. On the other hand, paragraph 9 says and implies that Vythilinga Mudaliar had not yet got any occupancy right and that the ryots had occupancy right all along, that that right of theirs had been judicially recognised and that all that Vythilinga Mudali did was himself to recognise the right which had been in the tenants from the long past. The theory of transfer being thus brushed aside, there is the question of the contract to transfer. Again, I cannot find that there was a contract to transfer any right, set up in the written statement. It denies that Vythilinga Mudaliar had any right of occupancy which he could contract to transfer. Assuming, however, for argument's sake that there was a contract to transfer, or that there was a transfer, I shall shortly consider the contentions based under the heads (a), (b), (c) and (d) already set out. Coming to section 18 of the Specific Relief Act, it has no application as the defendants do not seek any specific relief in this case based on any such contract, that is, they are not suing for specific performance of the alleged contract of transfer of occupancy rights to last for the second term of 99 years. With regard to section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, that applies to cases where a person erroneously represents that he is authorised to transfer certain rights in immoveable property. No such representation is alleged and we are asked to imply such a representation as having been made in 1889. It is impossible, in my opinion, to imply any such representation from the mere fact that in issuing pattas Vythilinga Mudaliar called himself the mirasidar of the land and then acknowledged the tenants' * * * * * (kaipaihu) rights. Coming to section 90 of the Trusts Act, it applies to cases where a tenant for life or co-owner or mortgagee or other qualified owner avails himself of his position as such and gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of other persons interested in the property, or where he representing all persons interested in such property gains any advantage. It is impossible from the facts of this case to hold that the plaintiffs represented themselves as acting on behalf of these tenants also or ever did represent these tenants when or before they obtained the renewal. On the date of the renewal of Exhibit A, they had themselves ceased to have any interest in the lands. Nor had defendants any rights in the lands on the date when the fresh grant was made. Section 90 of the Trusts Act, therefore, has no application [see also Hattikudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas Sahib (2), where Hannay, J., and myself (myself with some hesitation) held that where a land really belongs to Government, no question of estoppel and no question under section 43, Act IV of 1882, arise so as to interfere with the rights of the subsequent grantee from the Government.]

Coming to the question of estoppel, a tenancy by estoppel cannot be created where the act of the landlord which is relied upon (and which created a lesser right than the landlord represented himself to be entitled to create), did confer upon the tenant a right as lessee for some term, however short. (See Foa on Landlord and Tenant, page 473.) See also Weller v. Spiers (3).

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 30, 52—Enhancement of rent, suit for—Undivided share in meaning of.

An undivided share in a parcel or parcels of land is not a holding within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, therefore, no suit for enhancement of rent in respect of such share would lie either under section 30 or section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The word 'parcel' in the definition of the word 'holding' cannot be said to mean an undivided share. [p. 586, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decision of the Special Judge, Shahabad, dated the 8th July 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Shahabad, dated the 19th May 1913.

Mr. Baidyanath Narayan Sinha, for Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Krishna Suhai and Nirsu Narayan Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—These two appeals arise out of two suits for the enhancement of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The grounds upon which the enhancement is prayed for are increase in area under section 52 (1) (a) and rise in prices under section 30 (b). The landlord's case in Suit No. 562 out of which Appeal No. 163 arises was that the tenant held a certain area of land bearing No. 1 and also certain undivided shares in other areas of land which bore Nos. 15 and 25. In the other suit the landlord's case was that the tenant held a certain specific area of land bearing No. 2, and also undivided shares in certain areas of land bearing Nos. 3 and 16.

The main defence was that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties inasmuch as the other tenants who held shares in the one case in Nos. 15 and 25, and in the other in Nos. 3 and 16 have not been made parties. The finding of the Court of Appeal is in accordance with the landlord's case, namely, that there is a separate tenancy in each case, consisting of a specific area of land held together with undivided shares in certain other areas of land.

It was contended before the learned District Judge and it has also been contended before us that under the Bengal Tenancy Act a suit for the enhancement of rent cannot be brought in respect of such tenancies. Both sections 30 and 52 of the Act require that the landlord should be the landlord of a holding, and a holding has been defined in the Act as meaning a parcel or parcels of lands held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy. It is contended that an undivided share in a particular area of land is not a parcel or parcels of land within the meaning of the definition of holding. Therefore the tenancies to which these two suits refer were not holdings within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, therefore, the landlord had no right of enhancement under sections 30 and 52, inasmuch as he is not the landlord of a holding so far as either suit was concerned.

It has been held in a series of cases, Baidya Nath De Sarkar v. Ilim (1), Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (2), Haribole Brohmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (3), Ahadulla Sheikh v. Gagan Mollah (4), Parbatty Debya v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (5), that an undivided share in a parcel or parcels of land is not a holding within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is practically no authority to the contrary, though there is the opinion expressed by Petheram, C. J., in the case of Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (2), where the view taken was that the owner of an undivided fractional share in a parcel of land is the owner of that share in every part of it, and he is, therefore, the holder of an undivided share in every part of it. The weight of authority is on the other side and has ever since been continuously adverse to this view. In our opinion the weight of reason is also on the same scale. It appears to us to be difficult to hold that the word 'parcel' in the definition of the word 'holding' can have been intended to mean an undivided share. It is suggested that recourse may be had to the preamble to section 2 in which this definition occurs, where the usual reference is made to the repugnance in the subject or context, but it does not seem possible to say that there is any repugnancy in the subject or context either in section 30 or much less in section 52. On the basis of an obiter dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council it has been held that a right of occupancy can be acquired in an undivided share in a holding, but the reasons for the opinion have not anywhere been stated. In any event the argument which would result in such a conclusion in respect of a right of occupancy would be different from those applicable merely to the interpretation of the definition of the word 'holding.' The opinion appears to have been given with reference to the former Act of 1869.

The result is that we must hold that in the present instance the tenancies, the rent of which the landlord sought to enhance, were not holdings within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that, therefore, no suit to enhance lay under section 30 or section 52 of that Act. The result is that the appeals must be allowed and the suits dismissed with costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—Second Appeals Nos. 1053 and 1256 of 1915 are by the tenants, defendants; and the first question argued in them is whether the complaints on which the decrees appealed against were obtained, were duly presented, the presentation having been to the Head Clerk of the Deputy Collector, the Court of first instance, and it is alleged, not an officer appointed on this behalf within the meaning of Order IV, rule 1. The point was first taken at the trial in the concluding argument; there was, therefore, no reason why the Deputy Collector should, at that stage, record evidence regarding it or why the lower Appellate Court should do so in appeal. The Deputy Collector's statement in his judgment that Head Ministerial Officers have been authorised to accept complaints and other papers must in the circumstances be accepted. Receiver of the Nidadavole and Medur Estates v. Suraparazu
(1), relied on by the defendants, is not in point, since in it the Head Clerk had admitted that he had no authority and there is no such admission before us. This objection is accordingly unsustainable.

The next question is regarding the lower Appellate Court's finding on issue No. 5, that clause 8 of the suit pattas is valid and that rent must be calculated in accordance with it. On the latter point, there is no dispute, defendants admitting that the crop was removed without notice to the plaintiff, and that, therefore, the clause, if valid, is applicable. In Second Appeal
No. 1053 of 1915 plaintiff relies upon a previous decision, Exhibit C1, as res judicata; in Second Appeal No. 1256 of 1915
he relies on it merely as evidence of custom.

It is unnecessary to deal with the objections that Exhibit C1 was obtained against a person, who was dead at its date, and not

NAWAL KISHORE NATH SAHI DEO v. JALESHWAR DAYAL SINGH.

against the predecessors of the present defendants, since they were first made in this Court and there are no distinct materials in the record for their disposal. The more important objection is that Exhibit C 1 was obtained for Fasli 1311 under Act VIII of 1865 in a Court, which would not be competent to try the suit, in which it is now proposed to plead it, and, therefore, it cannot be res judicata under section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The answer is that the general doctrine of res judicata is not in question, but the application of the special rule stated in section 52 (3), Estates Land Act, under which muchilikas decreed for any revenue year remain in force until the beginning of the year for which fresh ones are exchanged or decreed, and that there is no reason for restricting the scope of the general reference to muchilikas decreed to those decreed by any particular description of Court. Such a restriction was, no doubt, imposed on the interpretation of the section in Vaddadi Jagannadha Bhupathi Deo Garu v. Paddala Appalasawmy (2), on the ground that pattas and muchilikas under Act VIII of 1865 were current for one year only and that the Legislature cannot be supposed to have intended to enlarge their currency. But the words of the section are clear, as they stand, and there is, in my opinion, no necessity or justification for reference to extrinsic considerations in order to their construction. In Raja of Pithapuram v. Jonnalagolla Venkatasuabba (3), the restricted interpretation was supported also on the ground that any other would have given retrospective operation to the section, in the sense presumably that the effect of the exchange of patta and muchilika would be extended beyond the period originally contemplated by the parties to it. But, if that case cannot be distinguished on the ground that, unlike the present, it deals with non-occupancy tenants, there is still no reason for treating this objection as decisive. For the presumption against a retrospective construction is not applicable, simply because a part of the requisite for the action of the Statute is drawn from the time antecedent to its passing (Maxwell's Interpretation of Statute, 3rd edition, page 307) or where the Statute affects only the procedure of the Courts (page 313); and in the present case, the unrestricted effect of the section is only to recognise a relation, which existed before the Act, and to direct its continuance until it is terminated by the method for which the Act provides. I would, therefore, respectfully dissent from the two decisions referred to and hold that Exhibit C is res judicata in Second Appeal No. 1053 of 1915. The objection therein to the lower Appellate Court's finding on issue No. 5, therefore, fails.

NAWAL KISHORE NATH SAHI DEO v. JALESHWAR DAYAL SINGH.

Subordinate Judge of Ranchi. The appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondents for possession of plots which are numbered in the plaint from 1 to 7. The respondents' case was that all seven plots lay within their village Hesel and were in their possession till they were dispossessed by reason of certain proceedings taken by Survey and Settlement Officers, which resulted in the seven plots being demarcated as part of the village Ranchi belonging to the appellant. Besides the appellant other persons were impleaded as defendants on the ground that they were in possession of the property as tenants or otherwise. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit except as to a portion of plots Nos. 5 and 6. The respondents appealed and the appellant filed a cross-appeal. The Judicial Commissioner allowed the appeal of the respondents and decreed the suit as regards plots Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 but dismissed it as regards plots Nos. 1 and 7. It appears that in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner the respondents withdrew their claim to plots Nos. 1 and 7 and we are no longer concerned with those two plots. As regards plots Nos. 2 to 6 the Judicial Commissioner differing from the Court of first instance came to the conclusion that they all lay within the respondents' village Hesel and were in possession of the respondents either directly or through tenants till the survey proceedings of 1908 which resulted in the dispossession of the respondents. The only point taken on behalf of the appellant is that the suit is barred by the Bengal Survey Act V of 1875, and reliance is placed on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Bisseswari Koer v. Ram Protap Singh (1). That was a case in which the plaintiff sued for confirmation of possession alleging that he was in possession. He failed to prove possession and the Court held that the suit was barred by section 62 of the Survey Act. The judgment in that case distinguishes that case from such a case as the present, in which the respondents being admittedly out of possession claimed possession as owners of land from which they had been dispossessed by reason of Survey and Settlement proceedings. The present suit was based on the alleged title of the respondents, a title which has been found to be proved by the lower Appellate Court. There is nothing in the decision referred to which in any way shows that the present suit is barred. On the contrary there are passages in the judgment of that case which show that the present suit is not barred by the Survey Act. The Judicial Commissioner in a lengthy judgment examined all the oral and documentary evidence and came to the conclusion that the respondents had proved their case. There is no reason whatever for not accepting his finding and if his finding is accepted the defendants' Appeal No. 621 of 1916 must be dismissed.

Appeal No. 947 is an appeal by the plaintiffs in the suit, who are respondents to appeal No. 621. It relates to plots Nos. 3, 5 and 6. Plot No. 3 was in possession of the second defendant to the suit, Babu Basanta Kumar Banerji, and in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner the plaintiffs said that they did not wish to recover khas possession as against him. As regards Nos. 5 and 6 it appears that those plots or parts of them are in possession of some of the other defendants. They have shown no right to retain possession of those plots and the decree in respect of plots Nos. 5 and 6 should, in my opinion, be a decree for khas possession. To this extent I would allow Appeal No. 947 but I would dismiss it as regards plot No. 3. In Appeal No. 947, I would make no order as to costs. Appeal No. 621 should, in my opinion, be dismissed with costs.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I concur. There is nothing in the Survey Act itself to bar a suit like the present one to recover possession based on title.

Appeal No. 621 dismissed.*

Rent payable by instalments—Limitation—Receipt for perty Act (IV of 1882), s. 108 (j).*

The principle of section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act applies to all kinds of leases, including agricultural leases even though the section itself does not apply to agricultural leases. [p. 592, col. 1.]

The liability of co-sharer tenants in a mokhasa holding to pay rent to the landlord is joint and several. [p. 592, col. 1.]

The onus of proving that the landlord, by his conduct, treated each fractional sharer as liable only for a proportionate share of the rent and released each of the fractional sharers from liability for the rest of the mokhasa kattubadi rent lies on the party setting it up. [p. 592, col. 2.]

The release of one or more of joint obligees of his or their liability in one year cannot affect their joint and several liability for the rents of the subsequent years unless there has been a contract as between the landlord and all the joint tenants to divide a joint holding and the total rent in definite shares or unless there have been several such agreements between the landlord and each of the several joint tenants by which the landlord relinquished his right to proceed against that tenant in all future years for more than a particular fraction of the total rent. [p. 592, col. 1.]

The party, therefore, who sets up that the joint and several liability which once existed has been split up so as to oblige the lessor to sue the separate sharers for only specific fractions of the rent, ought to prove by cogent evidence the number of shares into which the holding was put up and the definite rent payable by each such sharer and the agreement of the landlord to substitute several liabilities for the original joint and several liability. [p. 592, col. 2.]

Section 37 of the Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865) which provides for interest at 12 per cent. per annum on arrears of rent due, is applicable to claims for rent of the nature of kattubadi. [p. 593, col. 1.]

In a suit for kattubadi brought before the Madras Estates Land Act came into force, the relation between the parties is governed by the Madras Rent Recovery Act, VIII of 1865, and the landlord is entitled to interest on arrears at 12 per cent. per annum till date of suit. [p. 593, col. 1.]

The decree should provide for subsequent interest at 6 per cent. [p. 593, col. 1.]

A landlord cannot stipulate with his tenant that only a particular form of receipt for payment would be accepted if tendered as evidence in Court. [p. 594, col. 1.]

Where rent for a particular fashi is payable in instalments, the cause of action for rent due for that fashi accrues only from the date on which the last instalment becomes due. [p. 593, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—These two regular appeals and the two second appeals connected with them have arisen out of two suits, one brought in the District Munsif's Court of Tanuku and the other brought in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Ellore between the same parties. The plaintiff in the two suits is the Receiver of the Nidadavole Estate. The defendants own 2 mokhasa estates, one of which consists of three villages, and they own that estate in certain shares, the exact number of shares not appearing from the evidence on record or from the pleadings. The three villages forming (as above stated) one mokhasa estate contain cultivable lands, the extent of which is about 105 and odd pattis.

The three questions which have been argued in the two appeals and in the two second appeals may be formulated thus: Are the defendants (about 24 in number) severally liable to pay certain specific fractional shares of the kattubadi rent claimed by the plaintiff or, are they jointly and severally liable for the total kattubadi rent? (2) Are the arrears of kattubadi claimed in the District Munsif's Court's suit for Fasli 1307 and in the Sub-Court suit for Fasli 1312 barred by limitation as held by the lower Courts? (3) Is the plaintiff entitled to interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the arrears claimed in the suit till the respective dates of the suits and whether the lower Courts were justified in allowing interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the amounts claimed from the date of suits till the date of realisation and, if not, what is the equitable order as to the interest after the dates of the suits?

As regards the first question, I think out of the voluminous documentary evidence filed on the defendants' side those documents which have come into existence after 1896, when a former Dewan of the zemindarini withdrew two suits which he had brought against some of the sharers in the mokhasa with the intention of bringing the suits against all the mokhsadars jointly and severally liable, are of almost no value: I am also of opinion that the receipts, iusalams and the distress notices issued by the tanadars, amildars, shroffs, gumastas, samutdars, etc., on the footing that the numerous sharers in the mokhasa were severally liable for the proportionate amount to the extent of lands held by them respectively out of the 105 pattis, are also of very little value, especially seeing that some of the karnams and samutdars seem to own shares in the mo hasa and one of them is the 4th defendant in the suits. Then we have the oral evidence which is also of very little value. We have thus only got to consider the documents Exhibits I, II, XIII to XVII, XXX, XXXI, XXXII, XXXIV to XXXVII, XLVI and XLVII. It is admitted that till about 1852 the mokhasa villagers paid a consolidated kattubadi rent of Rs. 3,826. It is also conceded that the burden lies on the defendants to prove that the zemindar or zemindarini by his or her conduct treated the fractional sharers liable for the kattubadi rent and not only so, but that he or she released each of the fractional sharers from liability in all future years for the rest of mokhasa kattubadi rent. The earliest of the documents above-mentioned is Exhibit XLVII, the order in a suit of 1868 brought by the zemindarini

Papamma Row acting as guardian of her minor grandson by adoption. This document only shows that two of the several sharers in the mokhasa were sued for by her for some kattubadi due and that the plaint was returned for being presented to the proper Court. I do not think that this evidence is of any value to show that the zemindar by his guardian relinquished the right of the zemindar to hold these two defendants liable for the whole of the kattubadi rent or released the other sharers in the mokhasa from the co-ordinate liability to pay the amount of the rent sued for in that particular suit. I might here state that it is not denied that for about forty years before 1899 (when she died) Papamma Row was the zemindarini, except for an interval after his death when that adopted son's minor son was the zemindar under her guardianship. The next document Exhibit XLVI is a judgment in a suit of 1887 brought by her adopted son and continued by Papamma Row as guardian of her adopted son's minor son. That suit was brought against one of the sharers in the mokhasa for the rent due for one fasli. The suit was dismissed. There is nothing again in it to show that the plaintiff gave up her claims against the other sharers for the fractional rent sued for. Exhibits XXXII and XXXV need not be separately considered, as Exhibit XXXII seems to be the same as Exhibit XLVII and Exhibit XXXV is merely the decree in the suit in which the judgment Exhibit XLVI was pronounced. The next set of documents is Exhibits XXXVI, XXXVII and XXXVIII which are records in Original Suit No. 368 of 1892 brought against two of the sharers in the mokhasa estate for the fractional share of the kattubadi rent. It does not appear what became of the suit. These documents do not take us further. The next suit is a Small Cause Suit of 1895 and it seems to have become afterwards an original suit of 1893 and Exhibits I and II are the plaint and judgment in that suit. In that suit, there is a distinct finding that there had been no agreement between the plaintiff and the tenant defendant finding either side about the division of the mokhasa estate or the division of the kattubadi rent and that case, to say the least, does not help the defendants. Then we have the documents Exhibits XXX, XXXI, XXXIII and XXXIV, which are connected with a Small Cause Suit of 1887 which was brought for a fractional rent against one of the sharers. The suit was also dismissed and here again, there is nothing to show that the plaintiff gave up her claims against the other fractional sharers of the mokhasa estate. Thus, all that appears is that between 1887 and 1897 there were about half a dozen suits brought against certain of the fractional sharers. It has to be remembered that even if a promisee absolves one of the joint promisors from liability for a particular amount due under the joint contract, that does "not discharge the other joint promisor or joint promisors nor does it free them from responsibility to the other joint promisor or joint promisors." (See the analogy of section 44 of the Contract Act). Further, the joint and several liability arises owing to the relation created (when the mokhasa holding was originally granted) between the landlord and grantee of the inam, that that joint and several liability gives a distinct right at the end of each year to the landlord to recover the rent of that year and that the release of one or more of the joint obligees of his or their liability in one year cannot affect their joint and several liability for the rents of the subsequent years, unless there has been a contract as between the landlord and all the joint tenants to divide a joint holding and the total rent in definite shares or unless there have been several such agreements between the landlord and each of the several joint tenants by which the landlord relinquished his right to proceed against that tenant in all future years for more than a particular fraction of the total rent. The existence of a contract or such contracts seems not to be very probable in these cases, as I find that the number of the shares into which the mokhasa lands have been divided among the defendants, the equality or the inequality of the shares and the exact amount of rent due by each sharer are all left in great doubt and indefiniteness. In Original Suit No. 42 of 1866 between these tenants among themselves (to which the zemindar was not a party) there seems to have been a division into fourteen shares; whether these sharers were equal or unequal, whether the amount of kattubadi itself was divided equally or unequally among the fourteen sharers and what the several amounts due by each sharer was even among themselves are not proved and even the decree in that suit has not been produced. It appears also from the evidence that the fourteen shares afterwards became thirty shares and I find in one case about one-fortieth of the rent was sued for from one sharer and the desposition of some witness in a former suit (I do not see how that evidence is at all relevant) was filed to show that a fractional sharer is liable to pay a rent of Rs. 2 and odd out of Rs. 3,826. (See Exhibit XXXIV.) Again, it is clear from the Transfer of Property Act, section 103, clause (j), that the liability of a lessee to pay the whole rent due by him cannot be got rid of by his transferring portions of his lease right to others, and the principle of that section applies to all kinds of leases though the section itself may not apply to agricultural leases. The party, therefore, who sets up that the joint and several liability which once existed has been split up so as to oblige the lessor to sue the separate sharers for only specific fractions of the rent, ought to prove by cogent evidence the number of shares into which the holding was put up and the definite rent payable by each such sharer and the agreement of the landlord to substitute several liabilities for the original joint and several liability, and I agree with the lower Courts in their view that the evidence in this case falls short of establishing that position.

The next question in the tenants' appeal and second appeals relates to the amount of the annual kattubadi, whether it is Rs. 2,826 as claimed by the plaintiff or Rs. 2,900 and odd as alleged by the defendants. The lower Courts have given satisfactory reasons for their conclusion that it is Rs. 3,826 and it is at that rate that the rent has been claimed by the plaintiff and has been paid by the tenants for several years. The story of the defendants that they were paying this higher amount all along through mistake is not worth serious notice. This contention was not also pressed before us. The next question relates to the rate of interest till the date of suit and the rate of interest to be awarded after the date of suit. It must be admitted that the learned District Munsif, while allowing interest at 12 per cent. as claimed by the plaintiff, gave no specific reasons for the award of interest either because no issue as to the rate of interest or as to the liability for interest was raised before him or (it may be) because the question was not argued before him. The learned Subordinate Judge also has not given any reasons for the award of interest at 12 per cent. But it is clear that when these suits were brought, the zemindar and the mukhasadar were landlord and tenant governed by the Madras Act VIII of 1865. Though in Lakshminarayana Pantulu v. Venkatrayanam (1) it was decided that as between the tenants of the first class of kattubadi inamdars and their zemindars the provisions in Act VIII of 1865 as to the necessity for the exchange of pattas and muchilikas to enable the zemindar to bring a suit for the kattubadi rent are not applicable, that same judgment contains observations indicating that other provisions of the Act (not connected with rights arising from the exchange of pattas and muchilikas) do apply as between the zemindars and such tenants. These suits having been brought before the Estates Land Act came into force, the relation between the parties are governed by Act VIII of 1865 as decided in Gopisetti Narainsawmi Naidu v. Tallunraju Vencatasubrayudu (2). The decisions in Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 31 of 1904 and 424 of 1904 are also direct authorities for the position that section 37 of the Rent Recovery Act (which provides for interest at 12 per cent. per annum being claimable on rent due) is applicable to claims for rent of the nature of kattubadi. The award of interest at 12 per cent. till the date of suit by the lower Courts must be upheld. As regards subsequent interest after the date of suit, I think it is equitable to reduce it to 6 per cent., which is the usual rate allowed by Courts. In the result the Regular Appeal No. 99 of 1909 and the Second Appeal No. 100 of 1909 are dismissed, except with the slight modification as to the rate of subsequent interest in Appeal No. 99 of 1909. The appellants must pay the plaintiffs' costs as the appellants have substantially failed.

Coming to the landlord's appeals Regular Appeal No. 109 of 1909 and Second Appeal No. 917 of 1909, three points have been raised in these appeals. The first relates to the question whether the claims for the rent due for Faslis 1307 and 1312 are barred. According to plaintiffs' own documents, the rents were payable in each fasli in four instalments in the months of September to December of that fasli. The suit in the Munsif's Court and the suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court were brought in June 1901 and in July 1903 respectively, about three and a half years after the last of the instalments in those two respective faslis fell due. The lower Courts were, therefore, right in treating the claims for the rent of those two faslis as barred by limitation. The next contention of the plaintiff is that though he did not claim in his plaint interest from the respective instalment dates in each of the other two faslis (for the rents of which he obtained decrees) and though he claimed interest in the plaints in the two suits only from the ends of those two faslis, he is entitled to be awarded in the decrees additional interest between the dates of the instalments and the ends of the faslis, as his claim for one of the three faslis in each suit was dismissed as barred. The plaintiff chose to give up the interest between the dates of the instalments and the end of the faslis in order, if possible, to escape from the bar of limitation as regards the rents of Faslis 1307 and 1312. The failure of that insidious attempt cannot justify a revival of the right which he deliberately relinquished in the plaint as regards a portion of the interest. I would, therefore, disallow this contention also.

The last contention on the plaintiff's side is that the receipt given by his own officers for the portions of the rents ought not to be accepted by the Courts, as he had given notices to his officers and in the villages that unless receipts are given in particular forms prescribed by him payments made and receipts given in other forms to evidence the payments would not be accepted. short, the plaintiff wanted to make his own law as to the evidence to be accepted by Courts as to the fact of payment of rent by his tenants. This is a contention which has only to be stated to be at once rejected. The plaintiff's Appeal No. 109 of 1909 and Second Appeal No. 917 of 1909, therefore, fails and are also dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—This was a suit for the recovery of money alleged to be due in respect of certain payments which were undertaken to be made by the executant of a registered deed dated the 29th March 1907. Under that deed an advance of Rs. 12,000 had been made to a zemindar. The deed recites that in lieu of this bond certain zemindari rights were made over to the person who made the advance at what is called a fixed annual rental of Rs. 903-4-0 for a period of nine years. The property was said to be made over under a zarpeshgi thicca and the persons to whom the property was thus made over were to deduct Rs. 620 on account of interest of the zarpeshgi and to pay the balance of Rs. 83-4-0 annually, instalment after instalment, according to the kists detailed in the bond. There is a promise in the bond to repay the advance in the year 1323, and that upon this repayment the document is to be returned, if the repayment is not made the person who made the advance is to remain in possession of the property until the advance is repaid in full; and until the advance is repaid the properties are to be considered to have been hypothecated; they are not to be transferred or encumbered, and, if they are so transferred or encumbered by the owner, the transfer is to be considered null and void. If the persons who made the advance are dispossessed of the property they may then immediately sue for the recovery of the advance made, by them from the other properties and persons to whom the advance was made.

The learned Munsif held that the suit for these arrears of the annual payment of Rs. 83-4-0 was a suit for rent and, therefore, only three years' dues could be recovered. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has held that these dues were not rent but that they were payments due under a registered agreement and, therefore, the Article of the Limitation Act which is applicable is Article 116, and the claim for the entire six years was not barred by limitation. It is contended before us that the learned Munsif was right and that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong. If the suit was for rent, then undoubtedly the land being agricultural land the special period of limitation of three years provided for in the Bengal Tenancy Act would apply.

The question we have to determine is, whether the suit was for rent or not, and a decision upon that question depends upon whether the person who is liable to make these payments was a tenant. Did he hold under the person to whom the payments had to be made? It seems clear to us that upon the terms of the bond the land was held as security for the advance which had been made. The holder of the land was entitled to remain in possession until he was redeemed, and if his possession was disturbed he was entitled to recover the advance which he had made. That being the nature of the deed, we are of opinion that the deed was an usufructuary mortgage, and that the person in possession held possession as a mortgagee and did not hold under the person to whom these annual payments were due. That being so, these amounts which were annually payable were due from him as mortgagee under an arrangement with the mortgagor and were not due from him as a tenant. The suit was not for rent and the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation.

In disposing of the appeal it is well to make clear that the plaintiff admittedly is entitled to a decree as against the appellant only for one-half of the rent due for the six years. It is admitted before us that the other half has already been received by him from the defendant No. 2.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Pre-emption—Hindu Law—Rishtedar qaribi, grandfather's brother's daughter's son, whether is.

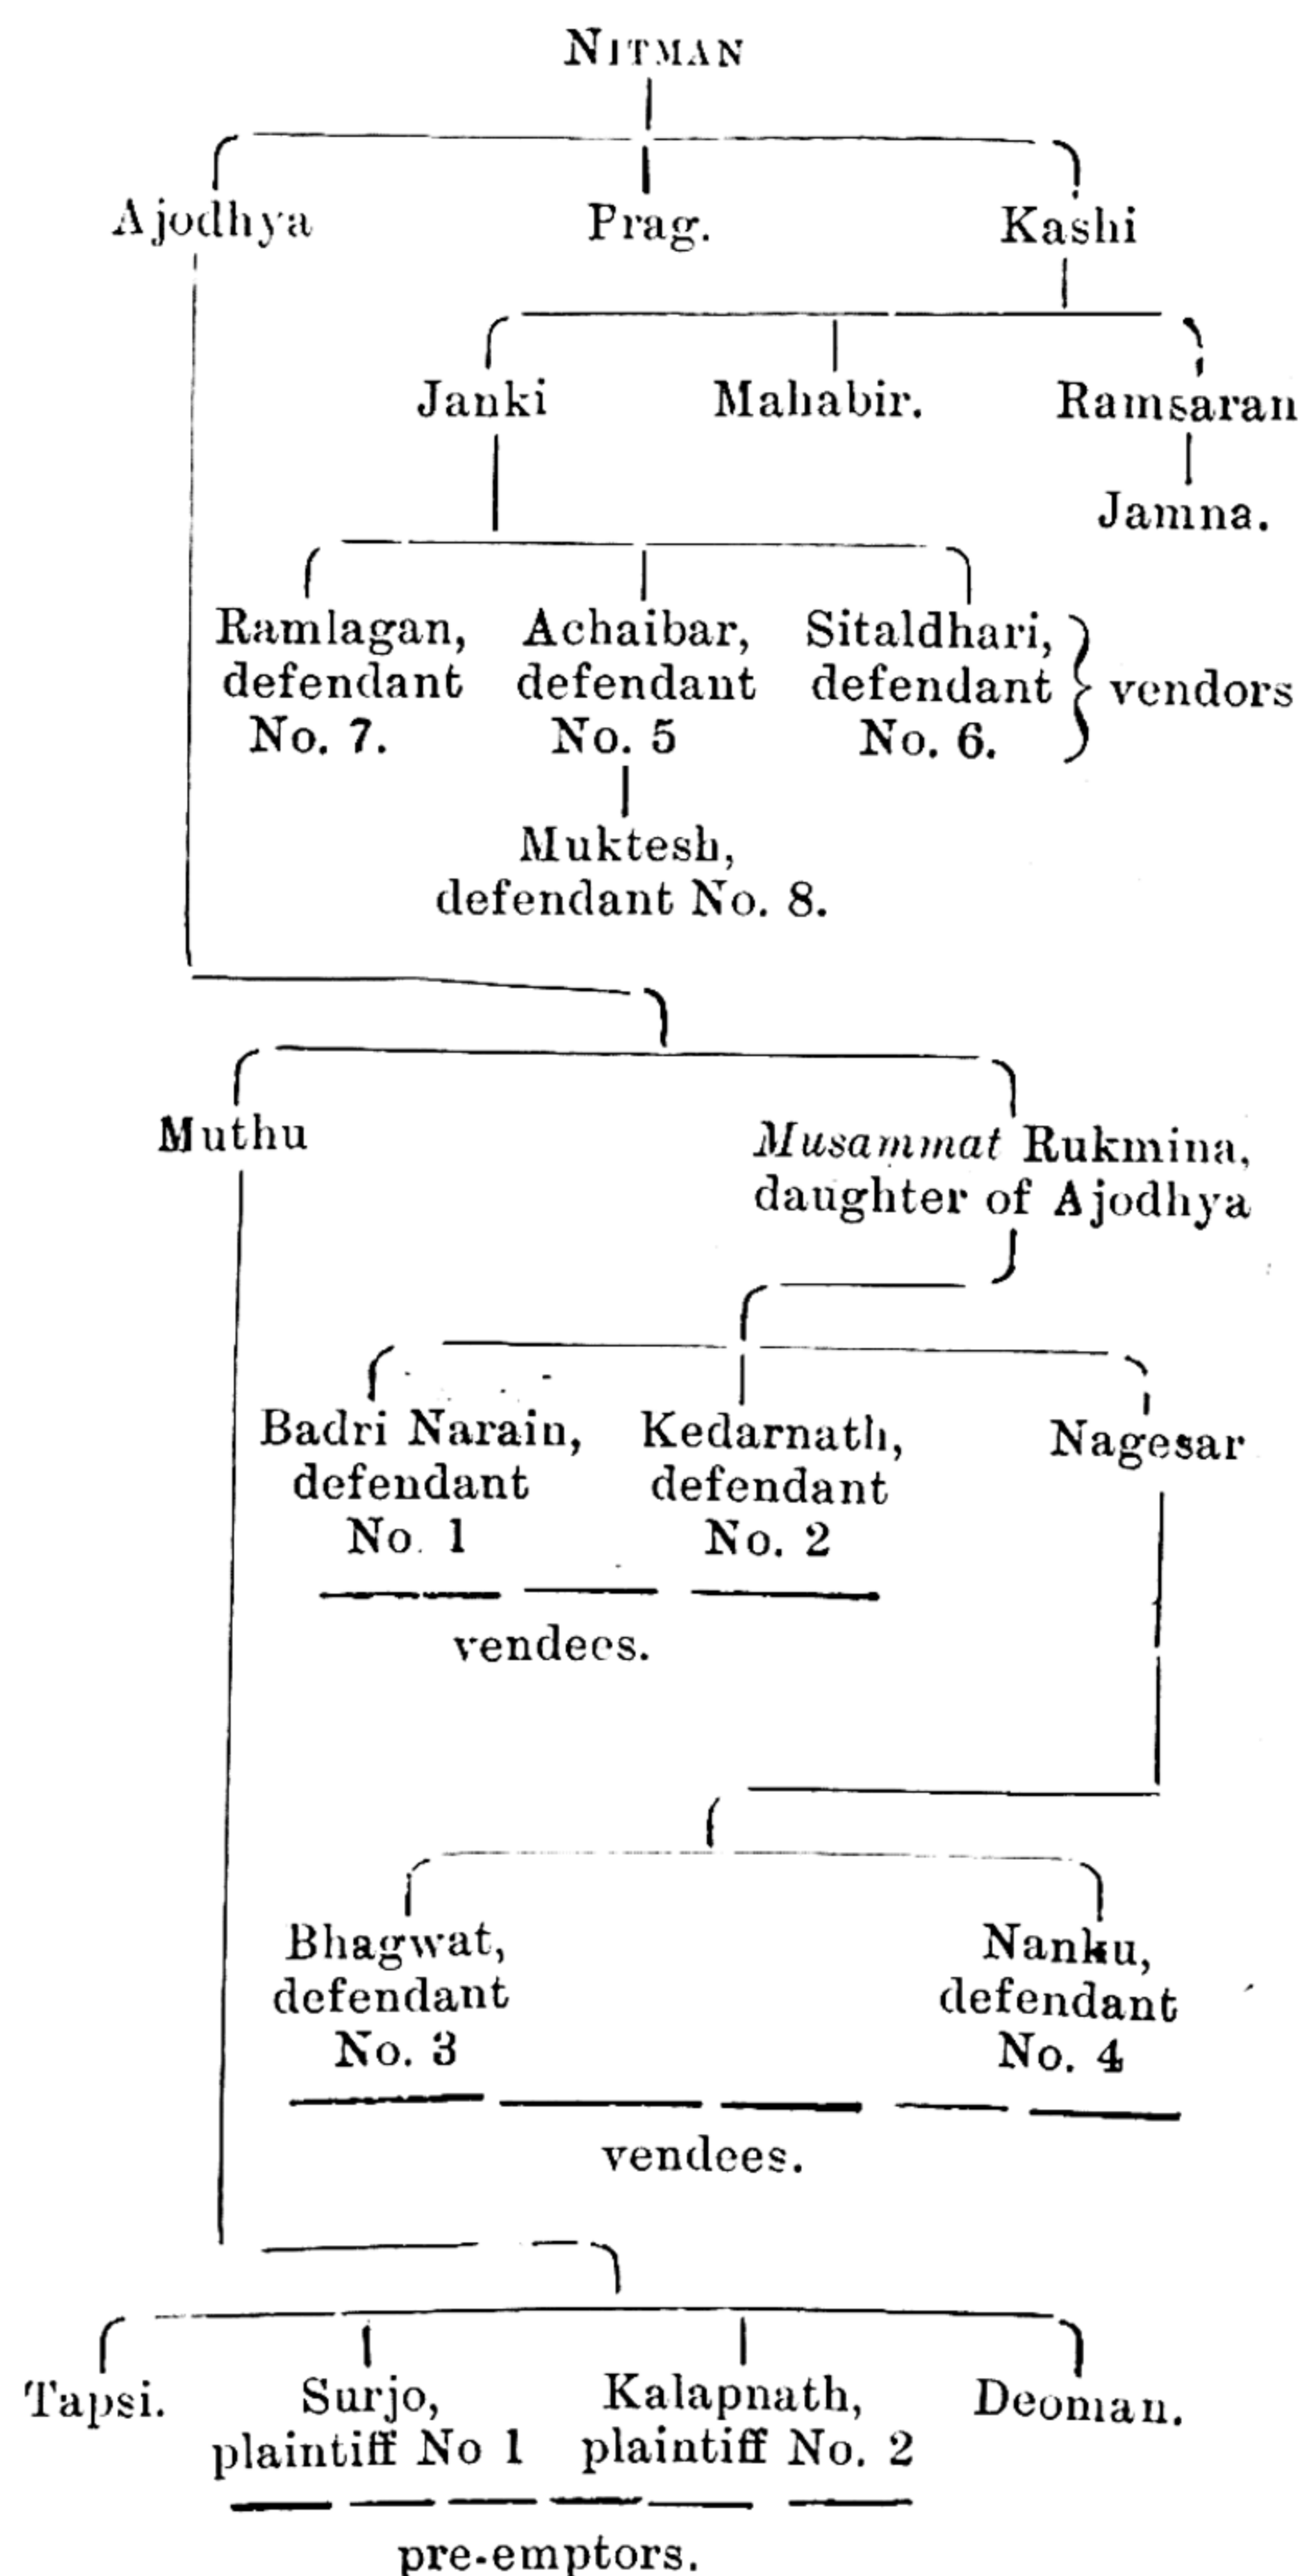

A grandfather's brother's daughter's son is a rishtedar qaribi. [p. 596, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 5th September 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Gorakhpur, dated the 16th May 1916.

FACTS.—This was a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree. The plaintiffs appealed.

The following pedigree will help in understanding the facts of the case:—

The vendors were the grandsons and a great-grandson of Kashi.

The vendees were the sons and grandsons of a daughter of Ajodhya, brother of Kashi.

MOHINI MOHAN GUHA v. JHANDA MIA CHOWKIDAR.

The pre-emptors were the grandsons of Ajodhya. The wajib-ul-arz ran thus:—

"Jab koi hissedar haqiyat apna intiqal karna chahne to awwal biradar haqiqi, dusre rishtedaran qaribi, tisre hissedaran sharikpatti. bad hissedaran deh ke hath muntakil kar sakta hai, agar in men se koi bho-e lene ki khwahish nahin kare ya qimat wajibi nahin dewe to intiqal kuninda ko ikhtiyar hoga ki jiske hath chahe farokhat karlewe."

The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit by the following judgment:—

"The defendant purchasers have appealed against a decree of pre-emption on the ground that the lower Court has wrongly given a preference to the plaintiffs as being blood relations of the vendors whereas the purchasers are also blood relations and co-sharers.

There were three brothers, Ajodhya, Prag and Kashi. The vendors are descended from Kashi. The plaintiffs and defendants are both descended from Ajodhya, the plaintiffs are his son's sons and the defendants are his daughter's sons. The lower Court has made a mistake (i) in holding that the words blood relations exclude blood relations ex parte materna, (ii) in mixing up marriage with relationship through the mother, (iii) in holding that the defendants are not heirs to the vendees.

The lower Court referred to a ruling, Mahabir Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad (1), where it was held that a son-in-law was not a blood relation. Of course, for he had no blood in his veins which came from his father-in-law. A phrase in that ruling has been taken by the lower Court to refer to relations ex parte materna but it is by no means clear that the Hon'ble Court meant to refer to facts other than the facts before it. Under ordinary Hindu Law the defendants are heirs to the vendors and the only point is that they are more remote heirs than the plaintiffs; but there is nothing stated in the wajib-ul-arz as to any preference among blood relations themselves. The words blood relations are words borrowed from English Law and they have the ordinary meaning in English Law. I may, however, note that even if the words used had been cognates interpreting "rishtedar qaribi", then, as Mayne on page 716 states, relations through the mother are also cognates.

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 495; 14 A. L. J. 447.

I consider that the defendants are also blood relations and the plaintiffs have no preferential right of pre-emption and I dismiss their suit with costs in both Courts."

Mr. Braj Mohan Vyas, for the Appellants.—The sole question is whether the vendees who are the vendor's father's father's brother's daughter's sons and grandson are the rishtedar qaribi of the vendors. I submit they are not. The ruling reported as Mahabir Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad (1) clearly lays down that in Hindu families the daughter marries into an entirely different family and that she becomes a member of that family and to a large extent ceases to be a member of her own family.

Moreover, the word "qaribi" "is very suggestive. Here are two persons the pre-emptors and the vendees. The question is who is rishtedar qaribi. The plain answer is, the pre-emptors, and if succession were to open to-day the vendees will not be heirs. The pre-emptors would be, as they belong to the same stock.

JUDGMENT.—We think the view taken by the Court below is correct.

Taluq, noabad—Tenure-holder, interest of, whether permanent and heritable.

The interest of a tenure-holder with regard to uncultivated lands of a noabad taluq is not permanent and heritable. Therefore a tank in a noabad taluq, which is more or less silted up, and a portion of the waste land, can be settled by Government with a person other than the original tenure-holder. [p. 597, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 29th July 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, South Ranjan, dated the 29th October 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Khitish Chandra Sen), for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court makes out a new case and finds that defendant No. 4 obtained a settlement of this tank from Government. The lower Appellate Court was clearly wrong in so doing. The land was a part of noabad taluq. The holding is permanent, though the rent is variable, so the Government could settle the land only with the original tenure-holders. Refers to Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Secretary of State (1) and Haider Ali Sikdar v. Secretary of State (2) and to the District Gazetteer of Chittagong, page 148. The tenant is entitled to get settlement but not of the uncultivated lands. The Government should have settled this land with the tenure-holder, under the noabad taluq.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen), for the Respondents, contended that inasmuch as the tank in question formed part of an uncultivated waste land of a noabad taluq, the appellants could not come and say that the Government should have settled it with the original tenure-holders. There is no authority to show that the rule that the interest in a noabad taluq is permanent and heritable and the revenue payable to Government is only variable applies in the case of uncultivated lands also. The Government was not required by law to settle the uncultivated land with the original tenure-holders, so the appeal ought to fail.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the learned District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 29th July 1915, reversing the decision of the Munsif of South Ranjan. The plaintiffs brought the suit to recover possession of a share in the tank. The first Court decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision and dismissed the suit.

Two points have been argued in this appeal. First of all, the learned Judge has found as a fact that the defendant No. 4 obtained a settlement from the Government of this tank. It is said that that was a new case and, therefore, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was not entitled to find that case in favour of the defendant No. 4. I do not think that that is so. That case seems to have been set up at the outset and the statements of the Munsif in his judgment, though perhaps not so clear, go to warrant the fact.

The other point that has been raised is that this land forms a part of what is known as noabad land. It is said that the Government could only settle the land with the original tenure-holders, that is, that an interest in a noabad taluq is permanent and heritable and that the only thing that is liable to be varied is the amount of the revenue payable to the Government. It is admitted that the authorities show that, at any rate, with regard to uncultivated lands, that rule does not apply. In this case the land is clearly uncultivated. It was a tank which is now more or less silted up and a portion of waste land. There is nothing in the authorities to show that it is necessary for the Government to settle this uncultivated land with the tenure-holders under the noabad taluq.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpore.

Messrs. Narain Chunder Sinha and Pancha Nand Ghose, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Palit and Chandra Sekhar Sarkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—This is an appeal against the grant of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed to the testator's widow Thakurain Kusum Kumari. The appeal is by the defendant caveator, who is a somewhat distant agnate of the testator, Thakur Protap Narain Deo. The property is of considerable value, being the estates known by the name of the Lachhmipur Raj, in the District of Bhagalpur and the Sonthal Pergannas.

Protap Narain Deo had succeeded to the estate as an adopted son. The finding of the Court is that death took place at 2 A. M. on Sunday the 23rd of November 1913. The evidence is that the Will was executed at 10 A. M. the previous morning, Saturday the 22nd November.

At the commencement of the year 1913, the testator Protap Narain Deo had four wives but no children. The respondent Thakurain Kusum Kumari is his eldest widow.

The story of the execution of the Will told in the evidence is as follows:—

In February or March 1913, the testator had a draft Will prepared by one Rai Tarini Prasad Bahadur, a leading Pleader of Bhagalpur, in favour of his eldest wife Kusum Kumari above referred to. The execution of the Will was postponed in the hope of having an issue and with that in view the testator married a fifth wife in June 1913. In August 1913 the idea of making a Will again came under discussion. Tarini Prasad's draft was looked for but was missing and another draft was prepared by another Pleader named Jogendra Nath Bose, Tarini Prasad having died in the meantime. This second draft was settled by Babu Chandra Sekhar Sircar, a leading Pleader of the Bhagalpur Bar. On this draft being taken to the testator at Deoghar where he was staying with his third, fourth and fifth wives, the testator said that he wanted to execute a Will in favour of his third wife who had been nursing him, his illness being consumption. Thereupon a draft in favour of the third wife was made by one of the Pleaders who had brought the second draft to him at Deoghar. This draft in favour of the third wife was taken to Babu Chandra Sekhar Sircar for revision. The Pleaders returned with the revised draft and a note from Chandra Sekhar advising the testator against the course which he was proposing to take. This note is dated the 19th November. Four Pleaders attended upon the testator on Friday the 21st November with the draft and the note. One of these Pleaders pressed the testator to execute the Will in favour of his first wife. The testator remained silent, the Pleader then suggested that he should adopt. He refused and the Pleaders left Deoghar in the course of that day. During that night the testator had a conversation with his third wife in which he intimated to her his intention to follow the advice which had been given to him and she assented. Accordingly on the morning of Saturday the 22nd November he informed his Dewan that he was of opinion that the Will should be executed in favour of his first wife. The Dewan asked if he should send for the Pleaders who had taken away the draft; the testator answered that he had found the original draft made by Tarini Prasad in February or March previous. The only alteration necessary was to include the fifth wife whom he had married since the preparation of that draft. Alterations were accordingly made and the Will executed and attested by as many as nineteen attesting witnesses. The Sub-Registrar was sent for and came after his day's work was over at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The Will was registered by him at 4 o'clock. That night at about 2 A. M. the testator died.

To prove the execution of the Will six of the attesting witnesses have been examined. There is also the evidence of the third wife Champaklata Kumari in support of the Will, although she is not actually an attesting witness thereto, and there is the evidence of the Sub-Registrar who registered the Will on the day that it was executed. Among the attesting witnesses is one Babu Jamini Bhusan Roy, a medical practitioner of some distinction who had been summoned from Calcutta to attend the deceased during the last days of his illness. The evidence, therefore, as it stands, is of considerable weight.

The arguments by which this evidence has been assailed are as follows:—

It is said that the circumstances do not sufficiently explain the sudden change in the disposition of the testator after the departure of his legal advisers on the evening of the 21st of November. It is suggested that the Dewan manufactured the Will and had it registered. But in the first place no adequate motive for the manufacture of the Will can be suggested. The only result of the Will was to give the widows a power of adoption. In the absence of a Will the widows would have succeeded in any case although without the power to adopt. There was no motive for altering the Will in favour of the first wife so far as the Dewan was concerned, unless it be said that he wished to prevent litigation. Such a wish would clearly be an inadequate motive for running the risk of perpetrating a forgery. It is said that the story about the draft made by Tarini Prasad Bahadur in February or March 1913 is improbable; that the sudden finding of the draft by the testator ought not to be believed; the draft had previously been missing. It is pointed out that Tarini Prasad's draft bears no signature and that the witness Abdul Gaffur who is said to have taken the instructions of the testator to Tarini Prasad was not examined. The suggestion is that the evidence is false and it was considered safe to mention the name of Tarini Prasad as he had since died. There is no doubt that there is something in this comment. On the other hand it is a minor point and the comment is clearly insufficient to outweigh the value of substantial positive evidence of the execution of the Will. The only other comment on the evidence in which there is any substance at all is with reference to the comparison of the signatures upon the Will with the signatures on two documents Exhibits A and B of the year 1911. In the endorsement on the Will for the purposes of registration the spelling of the word "Narain" is different. The signature on the third page of the Will—the letter ye of the word "Sri"—is differently formed and all the signatures in the Will are in what is called the shekasta form of handwriting, while the signatures in Exhibits A and B are in formal handwriting, resembling print. This comparison, however, in my opinion is not of sufficient substance to outweigh the valuable positive evidence. It is clear that these shekasta signatures in the Will are not copies of the forms of signature on Exhibits A and B. It may be that the testator adopted the shekasta style of writing during his illness. The testator was known to the Sub-Registrar who had been introduced to him at a Darbar. The acceptance of the appellant's case involves, therefore, the subornation of a Government Officer, the Sub-Registrar. The witnesses include persons who would naturally be present; the mosaheb, the guru, a local doctor, and the estate Kaviraj. There is also the evidence of the Calcutta physician, an independent witness. I have read this evidence and have not been able to find any sufficient ground for saying that the District Judge was wrong in giving credence to it.

The affirmative evidence offered by the caveator to prove that the story of the execution of the Will was untrue consists mainly of the evidence of one Narain Panda. He says that at the time when the Will was supposed to be executed four of the attesting witnesses to the Will including the Calcutta physician were sitting with him and were not with the Thakur. This evidence has been dealt with at length by the learned District Judge and the witness has been rightly discredited. It is, of course, extremely improbable that if the Thakur was seriously ill that morning as the witness admits, the Calcutta physician should not have attended upon him.

I accordingly find that the Will is a genuine document.

I have next to consider whether the Thakur

at the time he executed the Will had a sound disposing mind. No doubt he was emaciated and weak, but the Will was one with which his mind had been occupied for some months previously. The alternatives which his mind had to choose from were a Will in favour of his elder wife on the one hand and a Will in favour of the third wife on the other. The terms of the Will would be the same in either case and had previously been settled. It is difficult to conceive that if any strength remained in the mind at all there would not be strength enough to choose between these two alternatives. The Calcutta physician states affirmatively that he was capable of understanding business at the time when he executed the Will. His condition does not appear to have been materially altered for three or four days before his death and there is the fact that he received the Pleaders on the previous evening and had mind enough to refuse to adopt when they requested him to do so. It has been argued that Colonel Browne the English Doctor should have been examined regarding the testator's mental condition, but Colonel Browne left on the 19th and he would not have been able to give a decided opinion as to the condition of the mind of the testator at the time when the Will was executed. There was no doubt that his condition caused alarm on the 19th, yet we have the affirmative evidence of the Calcutta physician that his mind was not prostrated and it was quite clear that it was not. The Sub-Registrar, who saw him at 4 o'clock on the evening of the day the Will was executed, says that he was not in an unsound state of mind and that he gave rational answers to questions put by him. All the attesting witnesses give evidence to the same effect. It must be remembered too that his third widow Champaklata says that he discussed the terms of the Will with her during the previous night. On behalf of the caveator the main evidence relied upon in this connection is the evidence of Sarat Chandra Mukherjee who was the retained Pleader of the Estate. It was he who engaged Colonel Browne and the Calcutta physician Jamini Bhusan; he went with them to Deoghar on the evening of the 18th Tuesday and saw the testator twice a day until the time of his death. When he saw him on the Friday morning he says the testator could not speak; sometimes he made expressions of merriment and pointed out by moving his fingers. His evidence does not appear to me to displace to any material extent the evidence that the testator was of sound disposing mind, especially as the witness says that on the Friday morning he exhorted the testator to adopt a son—a statement which implies that his impression was that the mind of the testator was not completely prostrate.

It is then contended on behalf of the caveator that the validity of the Will is vitiated by the fact of the importunity which was exercised by the Pleaders. Such pressure, however, as was brought to bear upon the testator was directed mainly to persuade him to adopt a son. There was some pressure also no doubt in favour of the elder wife but he resisted this pressure. He refused to adopt a son and he would not assent to a Will in favour of his elder wife. The Pleaders left, and it is clear from the evidence of Champaklata that he consulted the latter and before finally deciding to make a Will in favour of his elder wife obtained her assent. No doubt in cases of importunity it is important to bear in mind the weakness of the testator's condition. But he had the strength of Will left sufficient to resist the pressure brought upon him to adopt. It is, therefore, impossible to find that he did not exercise an independent will. The Pleaders had no sort of hold over him; it was a case of independent advice given from outside by persons who had no sort of control over the testator. It is said that the Pleaders told him that it would be illegal to make a Will in favour of his third wife; but it is only the Dewan who uses the word illegal in this connection and he only says that it was the Vakil Sarat who told the testator that it would be illegal. Now it is quite clear from Sarat's evidence that he had little, if any, influence over the testator. The other legal advisers had not suggested that a Will in favour of the third wife was illegal, and I am not satisfied that any impression was created in the mind of the testator that a Will in favour of the third wife would be illegal. There is nothing in the evidence of Champaklata to suggest that any such idea was in the mind of the testator.

NARAIN DEO v. KUSUM KUMARI.

The result is that I find that the Will was executed by the testator and he had a sound disposing mind at the time and that the Will was not vitiated by any improper importunity. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The subject-matter of litigation in this appeal is the Will of one Thakur Pratap Narain Deo. He was possessed of large property known as the Lachhmipur Estate in the District of Bhagalpur. He died at about 2 A. M. on November 23rd, 1913. The Will propounded is said to have been executed by him in favour of his first wife, petitioner respondent, on 22nd November 1913, at about 10 A. M. and to have been registered that very day at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon by the Sub-Registrar of Deogarh at the residence of the deceased under Act XVI of 1908 in force in the District of the Sonthal Pergannas. The testator died childless leaving five wives behind him, the eldest being named Thakurain Kusum Kumari and the third Thakurain Champaklata Kumari. It is unnecessary to mention the names of the other wives for the purposes of this case.

On January 5th, 1914, Thakurain Kusum Kumari applied before the District Judge of Bhagalpur for the grant of Probate of the aforesaid Will of her late husband, and in the alternative for grant to her of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. On 21st February 1914 a caveat was lodged before the District Judge by one Srimat Narain Deo, the youngest of three brothers who claimed to be next of kin to Lalit Narain Deo, whose adopted son the deceased Thakur Pratap Narain Deo was. An objection raised in the lower Court that caveator had no locus standi to oppose the application for the grant of Probate applied for was overruled by the District Judge by his order dated 25th November, 1914. After contest the District Judge of Bhagalpur granted the petitioner Letters of Administration with the Will annexed and rejected the objection of the caveator by his judgment dated 15th June 1914. The caveator has appealed to this Court. The appellant alleged in his objection petition in the lower Court that the testator died on the 22nd November 1913, and not on 23rd as stated by the applicant, suggesting thereby that he had died before the execution of the Will. This allegation has not been substantiated and in view of the overwhelming evidence on record to the contrary the appellant has given it up in this Court.

The main grounds urged before us by the learned Counsel for the caveator are as follows:—

1. That the Will was not executed at all by Thakur Pratap Narain Deo and the signatures on the Will are not his signatures.

2. That the testator at the time he is said to have executed the Will was not possessed of sound disposing mind.

3. That the Will is not the result of the free volition of the testator but is the outcome of importunity of persons surrounding him.

As to the first of these, namely, that the Will was not executed at all by Thakur Pratap Narain Deo, Counsel for the appellant has based his contention mainly upon the fact that the signatures of the testator on the Will in question are different in style from those on certain documents, Exhibits A and B, filed in the lower Court. The Will in question has been attested by several witnesses, six of whom have been examined in this case. These witnesses have sworn that the testator put his signatures on the Will in their presence. The most important of these witnesses is the Kaviraj of Calcutta, Jamini Bhushan Roy, M. A., M. B., who attended the deceased from the 19th till his death on the 23rd November. The other witnesses are the Dewan and some other servants of the testator. The Sub-Registrar who has also been examined says in his evidence that he saw the testator sign the Will in his presence at the time when the admission of the testator was taken by him for the purpose of registering the Will. No sufficient reason has been assigned by Counsel for the appellant why the evidence of these witnesses should not be accepted. In face of the direct evidence of these persons it is impossible to set aside the Will on the mere difference in style between the signatures on the Will in question and those on Exhibits A and B. The signatures on Exhibits A and B appear to be similar, while the signatures on the Will in question appear to be different in style from those on Exhibits A and B. The signatures on Exhibits A and B are in ordinary style, while those on the Will in question are in a style called shikasta. No expert has been examined in this case to prove that the signatures on the Will and those on Exhibits A and B are of different persons, and it is difficult for us to say that they are not of one and same person. The documents, Exhibits A and B, were executed in May and September 1911, respectively, and the Will is dated November 22nd, 1913. The difference in the style may possibly be accounted for by the difference between the dates of these documents. Besides the signatures on the Will were affixed when the testator was admittedly ill. This may be another reason for the difference in the style of the signatures. It is difficult to override the direct evidence of the persons who saw the testator put his signatures on the Will by conjectures based upon the difference in the style of the signatures. To set aside the direct evidence in this case involves a conspiracy of the Dewan and the servants, and notably of the Calcutta Kaviraj and of the Sub-Registrar of Deogarh to set up a false and fabricated Will. There is no motive for such a conspiracy, and it is impossible to conceive what advantage could have been gained by these persons in setting up a false Will.

The Sub Registrar knew the testator personally, and has mentioned this fact in the endorsement on the Will. It would have been extremely dangerous for the Dewan and the servants of the testator to put up a false person to admit the execution of the Will before the Sub-Registrar. The Kaviraj of Calcutta is a medical practitioner of high status who has calls in the mofassil, is M. A., M. B., of the Calcutta University, a Fellow of the said University and a member of the Senate. A faint insinuation has been made against him of having possibly been bribed in order to put his signature on the Will as an attesting witness and thereafter to prove the Will in Court by false evidence. Far from having been substantiated, the charge against him is, in my opinion, base and groundless. The motive suggested is also not adequate. I have, therefore, no hesitation in accepting the direct evidence in this case that the Will was executed and signed by the testator.

The learned Counsel for the appellant complains that certain documents called for by him, namely the account books of Dabi Prasad Marwari and the Power-of-Attorney executed by Thakur Pratap Narain Deo in favour of the Hon'ble Sheo Shankar Sahai Bahadur, C. I. E., have not been produced in order to enable the Court to compare the signatures on those documents with the signatures on the Will. There does not appear to be any substance in this complaint, when the direct evidence on record proves beyond doubt that the testator did actually sign the Will.

The second contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant, namely, that the testator was not possessed of sound disposing mind at the time of the execution of the deed is based upon the fact that the testator was suffering from pthisis or consumption for sometime before his death; that he was bedridden at the time of the execution of the deed and that he died only about 13 hours after the execution of the Will. This contention is concluded by the evidence of the aforesaid Calcutta Kaviraj. The fact that he has attested the Will as a witness is in itself sufficient to show that he as a medical attendant believed that the testator was possessed of sound disposing mind. He was constantly in attendance upon the deceased from the 19th of November till his death. He has already stated in his evidence that the deceased was capable of understanding business.

The Sub-Registrar, N. N. Mukherji, says in his evidence that the deceased gave rational answers to the questions put by him at the time when he went to take his admission for the purpose of registering the Will.

The evidence of the Kaviraj and the Sub-Registrar is conclusive to show that the deceased was of sound mind both when he executed the Will at 10 A. M. and when he admitted the execution thereof and put his signatures thereon at 4 P. M. on the 22nd. The other witnesses corroborate the evidence of the Kaviraj and the Sub-Registrar.

There is no reason why the evidence of his third wife, Champaklata, should not be accepted as proving that the deceased was perfectly sound and capable of executing the Will in question. The evidence is that from the 19th to 21st the deceased was actually engaged in and applied his mind to considerations regarding the making of a Will by him. On the 21st he possessed sufficient strength of mind to resist the suggestions made by his Pleaders that the Will should not be executed in favour of his third wife. No doubt the deceased was ill for sometime before, but illness is not in itself sufficient to invalidate a Will unless it impairs the mind in such a manner as to deprive the executant of the power of understanding the consequences of making the Will. This is clear from Explanation 4 of section 46 of the Indian Succession Act, which embodies the principles enunciated in Judicial pronouncements both in England and in India. I am, therefore, of opinion that the deceased was possessed of sound disposing mind when he executed the Will. I do not agree with the appellant in his contention that Colonel Browne should have been examined in the case. The evidence of Colonel Browne will not be very material for he saw the deceased only on the 19th, whereas the Calcutta Kaviraj was in attendance all through from the 19th up to the time of his death.

The third ground urged by the Counsel for the appellant against the Will is that it is not a voluntary act of the testator but is the result of an importunity of the people surrounding him. It is said that the deceased had long before abandoned the idea of executing a Will in favour of his first wife, and on the 21st November, that is only a day before the execution of the Will, he distinctly expressed his intention of making a Will in favour of his third wife in spite of the suggestions of his advisers to the contrary, and that it is impossible that the deceased could have, of his own accord, changed his mind so suddenly and that the Will in question must, therefore, have been the result of the persistent solicitations of the Dewan and other persons who surrounded him, when the deceased had physically and mentally become infirm and incapable of resisting the importunity offered to him. The contention does not appear to be borne out by the facts proved in the case. The evidence is that so far back as February or March 1913, the deceased had contemplated making a Will in favour of his first wife and had also a draft made for that purpose by a leading Vakil of the Bhagalpur Bar, namely, Rai Tarini Prasad Bahadur. The execution of the Will was, however, postponed at that time, as the deceased thought of marrying a fifth wife in the hope of getting an issue and in fact did marry. In August 1913, he again reverted to his intention of making a Will in favour of his first wife and had another draft made, as the draft of Tarini Prasad was missing at the time.

When the second draft was shown to him at Deogarh, the deceased said that he wanted to make the Will in favour of his third wife. His Dewan and the Pleaders who had come from Bhagalpur with the draft pointed out to the Thakur that it was the custom of the family that the eldest wife should get the property and that the execution of the Will in favour of the third wife might lead to litigation. But the deceased did not listen to this advice and had a draft of the Will in favour of the third wife made by his Dewan Nadiya Chand Dutt. This draft was sent by him to Babu Chandra Sekhar Prasad, a leading Pleader of the Bhagalpur Bar, for revising it. Babu Chandra Sekhar made some alterations in the draft and returned it to him, with a note that the execution of the Will in favour of a junior wife in preference to the first would be a departure from the old and ancient custom of primogeniture prevailing in the family and might lead to litigation. He also suggested in his note that the difficulty might be avoided if the Thakur were to adopt a son to himself. The draft and the note bear the date 19th November 1913, and were put up to the deceased on the 21st, in the presence of three Pleaders from Bhagalpur and a Pleader from Calcutta. The Pleaders gave him the same opinion as was embodied in the note of Babu Chandra Sekhar mentioned above, and added that he should execute a Will in favour of his first wife. The Thakur remained silent, meaning thereby that he did not approve of the suggestions. The Pleaders then proposed to him that he should adopt a boy, to which the Thakur said that he would not adopt because he thought that he might get an issue. The Pleaders then left him and went away to Bhagalpur by the evening train that very day.

It is contended by the appellant that the above amounted to an importunity offered to the deceased to execute a Will in favour of the first wife. I do not agree with this. All that the above amounts to is that the Dewan and his Pleaders pressed upon his consideration what they considered to be a good advice, but an advice or even persuasion cannot be said to be unlawful unless it deprives one's freedom of the will and amounts to coercion. It was pointed out by Lord Cranworth in Boyse v. Rossborough (1) that an influence in order to be undue within the meaning of any rule of law which will make it sufficient to vitiate a Will must be an influence exercised either by coercion or by fraud. Vide Williams 47-51. Section 48 of the Indian Succession Act says that an importunity must take away the free agency of the testator in order to render a Will void. As a matter of fact the deceased did not yield to the advice offered to him and rejected it, and the Pleaders left the place.

On the night of that day he said to his third wife that he wanted to execute the Will in her favour but that everybody else was of a different opinion. The third wife told him that she herself had no objection to the Will being made in favour of the eldest wife. The third wife had in the meantime consulted her father who was at Deogarh, and her father told her that she should not take a Will in her favour as that would lead to litigation. The consultation of the testator with his third wife on Friday night after the Pleaders had left seems to me to be the determining factor in the final intention of the testator to execute the Will in favour of the first wife. It was to please the third wife, who was nursing him during his illness, that the testator had thought of altering his original intention of making a Will in favour of his first wife, and when she herself said that she would like the Will to be executed in favour of the first wife there was nothing to prevent the testator from giving effect to his original intention. It is significant that the first wife was not at Deogarh at that time and so she could not influence him to make the Will in her favour, and there is no reason why the Dewan and other servants would exercise an undue influence on her behalf.

It is thus clear that when at 7 A. M. of the 22nd the testator said to his Dewan that he would execute the Will in favour of the first wife, he did so out of his own accord and in the exercise of his own judgment in the matter, and not on account of any importunity offered to him.

The original draft of the Will made by Rai Bahadur Tarini Prasad was put by him in his box as he wanted to marry the last wife for getting an issue. This draft was taken out by him, and after some necessary corrections being made was handed over to one Abdul Gafoor for fairing it out. There was no necessity for him to consult the Pleaders again, or to have another draft made. Abdul Gafoor wrote the Will in question from the draft. The deceased had the Will read to him before putting his signatures thereon in presence of the attesting witnesses, including the Calcutta Kaviraj referred to above. Abdul Gafoor has not been examined in the case, and this omission has been severely commented upon on behalf of the appellant. I think the scribe should have been examined, but in view of the unquestionable evidence on the record of the Will having been duly considered and signed by the testator, the omission to examine Abdul Gafoor is not at all fatal to the case of the respondents.

It is needless to refer to the authorities quoted by the appellant's Counsel in the course of his arguments. There can be no dispute that the onus is upon the propounder of the Will to prove that the testator not only did make the Will but that he possessed sound testamentary disposition at the time of making the Will and that he made the Will of his own accord, and not on account of any importunity or coercion. This has to be determined by the actual facts established in the case under consideration. As shown above, it has been proved in this case that the Will was duly made and that the testator was not in any way unlawfully influenced in making the Will. The appellant has not rebutted satisfactorily the evidence adduced by the respondent that the Will was duly made by the deceased.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 319—Symbolical possession—Limitation.

An order of Court giving symbolical possession to an auction-purchaser under section 319, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, on an application by the auction-purchaser made more than 3 years after the sale is confirmed is not without jurisdiction and a nullity, as such an order can be made by the Court of its own motion, without the intervention in any way of the auction-purchaser, and no period is fixed for such an order under section 319 of the old Code. [p. 606, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Dacca, dated the 11th September 1915, reversing that of the 2nd Additional Munsif, Narayangunj, dated the 30th April 1915.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chunder Basak (with him Babu Prokash Chunder Pakrasi), for the Appellants.—Under section 318 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and Article 178 of the Limitation Act of 1877, delivery of possession could have been given to the decree-holder auction-purchaser up to June 1902. So any delivery of possession given after that date was a nullity and without any effect. There was in this case no proper legal delivery of possession, as the delivery of possession was not made within the statutory period from the confirmation of sale. Any delivery given by the Court after the proper time would not place the auction-purchaser in a better position. It is settled law that as between the parties to the suit symbolical possession is as good as actual possession, but to make the principle applicable, the delivery must be within time. There cannot be any legal delivery of possession by the Court if the Court professes to give it after the time within which the possession should have been delivered. The limitation in this case would run from the date of confirmation of sale. There must be some limit of time within which possession should be delivered. Even under section 319 of the Code of 1882 the Court cannot postpone it for an indefinite period of time. So the present suit being out of time should fail.

Babus Upendra Lal Roy and Suresh Chunder Das, for the Respondents, were not called upon in reply.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this case is one of limitation. It appears that the defendants were the owners of the property in dispute, an 8-anna share in a sikmi taluq. That property was sold for arrears of rent at the instance of the landlord Radhika Mohan Roy on 9th May 1899 and purchased by the decree-holder himself. The sale was confirmed on 20th June 1899. The sale certificate was issued on 6th May 1904. Symbolical possession was given under section 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 on 23rd July 1904. The present plaintiff bought the property from the representative of the decree-holder on 8th June 1906, and filed the present suit to recover possession on 9th March 1914. If the time be taken to have run from the date of the confirmation of the sale on 20th June 1899 the suit would obviously be out of time. If, on the other hand, it is taken to run from the date of the delivery of possession to the purchaser, i.e., 23rd July 1904, the suit is not barred.

The Code of 1882 is applicable to the case. It is admitted that the property was in possession of tenants under the defendants-judgment-debtors. Section 319 was, therefore, the section which applied to the delivery of possession in this case. The purchaser appears to have made an application for delivery of possession but to have made it more than three years after his right to make that application had accrued. He would, therefore, be out of time under Article 178 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Section 319, however, does not like section 318 prescribe that the Court's order shall be made on application by the purchaser. Whether this was an intentional difference in the sections or not it is not necessary to discuss. There is, however, this distinction that under section 318 the presence of the purchaser would be necessary before he could be put in possession by the Court. It may have been thought, therefore, necessary that in such a case he must first apply for delivery of possession before the Court could give it to him. Under section 319 all that has to be done is to affix a copy of the certificate of sale in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaim to the occupant by beat of drum or some other customary mode, at some convenient place, that the interest of the judgment-debtor has been transferred to the purchaser. This could be done by the Court of its own motion and without the intervention in any way of the purchaser. In any case it has not been shown us that any period of limitation was fixed by the law as it then stood for an order by the Court under section 319. If that be so, it cannot be said that the order of the Court dated 23rd July 1904 giving symbolical possession was without jurisdiction. It is conceded by the learned Pleader for the appellant that if this view be taken, the point of limitation cannot be successfully pressed.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

An admission of the rate of rent in a road-cess return some years prior to the years for which rent is claimed is not conclusive as to the average rate. [p. 607, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Saran.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dyal and Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. N. Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—The suit which gave rise to the present appeal was a suit brought by the landlords against their tenants for bhauri rent of the years in suit. The landlords have an interest in the village to the extent of one-third. They have made all the co-sharer landlords parties to the suit.

Issue No. 2 raised in the suit was to the following effect :—

"What was the quantity of produce for the landlord's share and what is its price?"

The first Court gave a decree to the plaintiffs for rent in proportion to the one-third share which the plaintiffs had in the village at Rs. 5 per bigha. The reason why this rate was adopted was that in 1309 the plaintiff Ram Sahai had filed a road-cess return on behalf of all the co-sharers in which he had stated the lands to be bhauri; but for the purpose of re-valuation he had given a certain figure in order to indicate the value of the produce and this figure was Rs. 5. It was held by both the Courts below that inasmuch as the plaintiffs in 1309 had stated that the rate was Rs. 5 per bigha they cannot be allowed to go behind their statement.

On behalf of the appellants it is contended that they ought to have been allowed to produce evidence as to the amount of produce for the years in suit but that they have not been allowed to do so. It appears from the order sheet that on their behalf not a single witness was examined although they had given a list of witnesses.

It is further contended that Rs. 5 was the figure for 1309 and that since that year the prices of crops have risen and that the appellants should have been allowed to prove the actual produce for the years in suit and should have been given a decree in accordance with the produce for those years.

An issue having been framed as quoted above, I think it was necessary that the plaintiffs should have been allowed to adduce evidence in order to rebut the presumption arising from their own admission that the average rate was Rs. 5 per bigha.

For these reasons I would remand this case to the lower Appellate Court, so that an opportunity may be given to the appellants to adduce whatever evidence they wish to rebut the presumption arising from their admission that the rate was Rs. 5 per bigha.

The District Judge is requested to decide this issue after an opportunity is given to the plaintiffs to adduce their evidence as to the actual produce of the lands for the years in suit and to return the record to this Court, together with his findings on this issue, not later than the second week of July 1917.

ROE, J.—I agree. The issue will be decided by the District Judge. The evidence may be put on the record either by himself or by the Subordinate Judge.

Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a suit to set aside an ex parte rent-decree on the ground of fraud.

In order that the plaintiff may succeed in this suit, it is necessary for him to show that an earlier decree obtained in the High Court is also invalid on the ground of fraud.

Both the lower Courts have held that the plaintiff cannot maintain this suit without first setting aside the High Court decree by a suit framed for this purpose. The learned Subordinate Judge based his decision on the ground that the plaintiff was no party to the High Court decree. But this is no reason why the plaintiff should not show that the High Court decree was obtained by fraud or collusion under section 44 of the Evidence Act.

In Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, 5th edition, it is remarked: "With regard to the parties who may show fraud, it is clear that a stranger to a judgment, against whom such judgment is used as evidence, may impeach it on the ground of fraud in the suit in which it is so used." The plaintiff here is a stranger to the judgment and if the judgment is used against him as evidence, he is entitled under the section to impeach it. Both the lower Courts were, therefore, wrong in holding that the suit is not maintainable.

The case is sent back to the Court of first instance for decision on the other issues.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 22—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 248—High Court Original Side decrees, revivor of—Decree against several persons—Notice, issue of, to some—Limitation, fresh starting point of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 182, 183.

Both on the reason of the thing and on the analogy of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code which apply the doctrine of revivor to India, as regards the revivor of the decrees of the High Court, Original Side, notice must go to the parties against whom it is sought to revive the decree. [p. 608, col. 2.]

Explanation 1 in the 3rd column of Article 182 of the Limitation Act refers only to applications under the Article and has nothing to do with the revivor of Original Side decrees. [p. 608, col. 2; p. 609, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court, in Civil Suit No. 203 of 1899.

Messrs. Venkatasubba Rao and Radhakrishnayya, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Ramachandran, T. Venkatasubba Aiyar and Narayana Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises an interesting point as to which Mr. Venkatasubba Rao has candidly put the authorities before us. The question is whether Mr. Justice Bakewell was right in holding that an order of revivor of a decree on the Original Side made against the first defendant under section 248 of the old Code was inoperative as against the 2nd defendant to whom no notice went. The term "revivor" in the 3rd column of Article 183, as is well known, refers to the Common Law practice which prevailed in the Supreme Courts in India under which, if a writ of execution was not sued out within a year and a day, it was necessary to revive the decree by a process known as scire facias or more fully scire facias quare executionem non habeat, that is to say, by calling on the judgment-debtor to show cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against him. When the Code of Civil Procedure came to be enacted, the rule was embodied in what was section 248 of the old Code and now Order XXI, rule 22, under which when an application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree, notice is to go to the person against whom execution is prayed, requiring him to show cause, on a date to be fixed, why the decree should not be executed against him. This rule requires notice to go against the person against whom execution is applied for, and the 6th sub-section of the 3rd column of Article 182 of the Limitation Act provides that when such notice has been issued, the date of issue of notice to the person against whom execution is applied for to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him is to form a fresh starting point. We think both on the reason of the thing and on the analogy of the provisions of the Code which apply the doctrine of revivor to India that as regards the revivor of Original Side decrees, notice must go to the parties against whom it is sought to revive the decree. The whole doctrine, as is explained in the passage from Blackstone cited in Mr. Justice Bakewell's judgment, had its origin in the presumption of satisfaction which was held to arise when execution had not been applied for within a year after the date of the judgment. As regards Article 182, Explanation 1 in the third column provides that where the decree or order has been passed severally against more persons than one, the application shall take effect against only such of the said persons or their representatives as it may be made against. But where the decree has been passed jointly against more persons than one, the application, if made against any one or more of them, or against his or their representatives, shall take effect against them all. This only applies to applications under Article 182, which in terms excludes applications such as the present provided for by Article 183. The Explanation refers only to applications under Article 182 and has nothing to do with the revivor of

ABINASH CHANDRA DAS v. HEM KUMARI DAS.

Original Side decrees. For these reasons we think that the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell is right and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs of the 1st respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 148, Sch. II, para. 16—Award fixing time for payment—Court, whether can extend time.

A valid award on a voluntary reference in a pending suit is binding and conclusive on all the parties and the Court is not authorised to interfere with any portion of it. [p. 610, col. 1.]

Where in a suit, the matter in dispute is referred to arbitration by agreement of the parties and an award is duly made by which one of the parties is directed to pay a certain sum to the other party within a specified time and a decree is made thereon, the Court has no power to extend the time fixed by the award for the payment, even on the ground that the case is a hard one. [p. 610, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Nadia, dated the 18th March 1915.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy (with him Babu Upendra Narayan Bagchi), for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the application for execution. The award was made on the 23rd December 1913 and the time allowed to defendant No. 1 to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 3,600 was six months. The six months allowed by the award expired on 3rd June 1914. The payment into Court of Rs. 3,600 on the 4th June 1914 was clearly out of time and so the appellants were entitled to possession in accordance with the terms of the award. The lower Court held that it had power to extend the time and the payment on 4th June was a good payment. The lower Appellate Court has erred in holding that the Court had the right to extend the time fixed by the award of the arbitrators. The Court cannot interfere with the award of the arbitrators in any of its points. The Court has erroneously exercised jurisdiction in extending the time.

Babu Hara Prasad Chatterji, for the Respondent.—The decree on the award is made in the form of a decree in a redemption suit.

[FLETCHER, J.—It is not a decree under the Code of Civil Procedure.]

Section 148, Civil Procedure Code, applies to this case. Under this section the Court may, in its discretion, enlarge the period originally fixed even when that original period has expired. This section applies to an award made by arbitrators. When the money has been deposited before final decree for redemption has been made and the Court has accepted the money, the principle of Bepin Behary Shaha v. Mokanda Lal Ghosh (1) should be followed. Here the Court must have condoned the delay of the respondent, when it accepted the deposit.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Nadia, dated the 18th March 1915. The appeal is preferred against an order dismissing an application for execution. The facts are as follows:—The defendant No. 2 in the month of January 1901 mortgaged a certain property to the plaintiff to secure the sum of Rs. 4,750. A suit was brought on the mortgage and it was decreed for the sum of Rs. 7,000. In execution of that decree the property was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff, the mortgagee, for the sum of Rs. 5,800. On attempting to take possession the plaintiff was resisted by the defendant No. 1, on the allegation that she (defendant No. 1) had a lease of the property after the date of the mortgage for a term of eleven years expiring in the year 1322 B. S. So her lease has now wholly expired. The plaintiff then instituted a suit for possession. By agreement between the parties the matter in dispute was referred to arbitration. The arbitrators duly made their award on the 3rd December 1913 and the award was as follows:—"Our award on the issues considered together is that the plaintiff should get khas possession of the properties in suit by evicting the defendants, unless the defendant No. 1 pays to the plaintiff Rs. 3,600 including costs and interest within six months from this date." No money was paid in accordance with the terms of the award within the six months allotted, which expired on the 3rd June 1914. On the 4th June 1914, the sum of Rs. 3,600 was, however, paid into Court. No payment having been made up to the 3rd June 1914, on the 5th June 1914, the plaintiff applied for possession in accordance with the terms of the award, the award having been filed in Court in the ordinary way and a decree having been passed thereon. The learned Judge of the Court below held that he had power to extend the time fixed by the award, that the payment into Court on the 4th June 1914 of Rs. 3,600 was a good payment and that, therefore, the defendant No. 1 had complied with the terms of the award. It may be noticed in passing that the first defendant did not pay any portion of the Rs. 3,600 to the plaintiff within the time fixed by the award. The learned Judge held, however, that he had power to extend the period fixed by the award. In my opinion, he had not the power to do so. The statement in Russell on Arbitration which may be taken as a correct statement of the law on the point is to this effect. I read from the Chapter I, page 307, of the Ninth Edition: "A valid award on a voluntary reference is a final and conclusive judgment as between the parties respecting all the matters referred by the submission. It binds the rights of the parties for all time without appeal both as to fact and law;" and again in the same chapter at page 318 the learned author states. "Upon an award for the payment of money at a particular time and place, the party who is to pay ought to come and tender the money at the time and place even if the other party be not there to receive it." It is quite clear that the arbitrators were acting within their powers when they directed that the payment should be made within six months from the date of their award, and that being their judgment, it is binding and conclusive on all the parties and the Court is not authorized to interfere with that portion of the award any more than with any other portion of the award. The learned Judge clearly had no jurisdiction to extend the time on the ground that the case was a hard one. As to whether the case is a hard one, it may be doubted whether it is so. This lady, the defendant No. 1, had a lease for eleven years which has now expired. The right of redemption that was given to her was clearly for the purpose of supporting that lease for eleven years, which she would be deprived of by the plaintiff having purchased in execution of a decree on his mortgage which was executed prior to her lease. But that reason has now ceased to exist. The lease has now come to an end and the defendant No. 1 has enjoyed all the rights that she had under that lease which is not binding as against the plaintiff. I think that the learned Judge was wrong when he extended the time fixed by the award. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and in lieu thereof direct that execution do issue on the terms of the award for the purpose of giving khas possession of the properties to the plaintiff. The contesting respondent must pay to the appellant his costs in this Court as well as in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 780; 36 C. 122 at p. 128; 8 C. L. J. 547.

BEGAN KUER v. JHARI MAHTON.

CHAMIER, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the respondent for possession of immoveable property on the strength of a deed of sale executed in his favour. The first Court dismissed the suit on grounds which it is not necessary to specify. The District Judge reversed the decree of the first Court and passed a decree in favour of the respondent. The appellants have pleaded inter alia that the respondent was merely the creature of a Mukhtar named Jagdish Narayan and had paid them nothing. At the trial evidence was given by the respondent that he was the real purchaser and by the appellants that the real purchaser was Jagdish Narayan. In the course of his judgment the District Judge used language which seemed like a finding that the respondent was no more than the benamidar of Jagdish Narayan. There being some doubt whether the finding was sufficiently definite, we adjourned the hearing of the appeal and subsequently heard the parties on the evidence relating to the question whether the respondent was the real purchaser or only a benamidar. Having examined the evidence I have no doubt whatever that the real purchaser was Jagdish Narayan and that the respondent was only his benamidar and has no interest whatever in the land claimed in this suit. There is a long string of decision in the Calcutta High Court according to which a benamidar cannot maintain a suit of the kind now before us. I think that we ought to follow those decisions in this Court, whatever our personal views on the subject may be. I would allow this appeal, reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore the decree of the first Court with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

THULJARAM ROW V. GOPALA AIYAR.

JUDGMENT.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—This is an appeal of the 2nd defendant, the present owner of the equity of redemption in a suit by the mortgagee to enforce his security. The mortgagee was himself the owner of the lands. He sold them to the 1st defendant's deceased husband one Jatavallabar on the 5th January 1899, who on the same day mortgaged them to the vendor to secure Rs. 11,000, the bulk of the price. The mortgagor covenanted to pay interest at half a rupee per cent. per month i.e., 6 per cent. per annum once every year. He agreed to pay Rs. 1,000, out of the principal amount on the 30th July 1899 and the balance immediately the vendor mortgagee's minor sons attained majority, which event happened in April 1905, when the youngest of them became a major. In default of payment of the latter sum on the due date, the mortgagor agreed to pay interest at 12 annas per cent. per month (i.e.) 9 per cent. per annum. Most of the interest has not been paid and no portion of the principal money, and the suit is to recover the mortgage money by sale of the security. The plaintiffs—the 1st is the mortgagee and the other two are his sons—claimed interest at the rate of 9 per cent. not merely on the sum of Rs. 10,000, but also on the sum of Rs. 1,000. It was allowed by the lower Court and the first point raised in the appeal is against that claim. The language of the mortgage-deed is quite plain and against the claim of the plaintiffs. The decree of the lower Court must be modified by allowing interest on the Rs. 1,000 at 6 per cent. per annum instead of 9 per cent.

The 2nd point is more serious and it is this. The mortgagee in 1903 sued for the interest accrued due till then and for the Rs. 1,000 out of the principal. He prayed for the sale of a part of the security, viz., that specified in Schedule B to that plaint to realise the interest and of another part specified in Schedule A to realise the principal amount. Jatavallabar was the 1st defendant in that suit but he died before the trial and on his death, the present 1st defendant was brought on the record. Besides Jatavallabar, three other persons who apparently claimed the A Schedule property adversely to both the mortgagor and the mortgagee, were made defendants. Jatavallabar or the present 1st defendant did no appear to defend the suit, but the other defendants set up their adverse title. At the final hearing, the plaintiff after having adduced evidence as regards his claim for interest against the mortgagor, 1st defendant, applied for leave to withdraw his claim for Rs. 1,000, the first instalment of the principal, with liberty to file a fresh suit on the ground that he was not ready with his evidence to prove his title to sell the A Schedule properties with which alone the contesting defendants were concerned. This was allowed by the Judge and a mortgage-decree was passed for the interest by sale of the B Schedule properties; as regards the claim for Rs. 1,000 the order was: "suit withdrawn in respect of claim B with liberty to sue again and plaintiff to pay corresponding costs of defendants Nos. 2 to 4." The appellant contends that the order permitting the withdrawal was beyond the competence of the Court and is a nullity and the present suit, in so far as it includes a claim to recover Rs. 1,000 and the subsequent interest, is barred as the matter was res judicata. There is a short answer to this contention, viz., that if the previous order is a nullity, that being the only order which disposed of the claim for Rs. 1,000, that claim still remains undisposed of and must be tried, and it has now been tried in this suit. In Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (1), which was principally relied on by the appellant, the 1st Court had dismissed the suit on the merits and in appeal, that dismissal was confirmed; but the Appellate Court, in addition, purported to give leave to withdraw the suit, which permission was held to be a nullity. The result was the original dismissal of the suit became final and the matter became res judicata under section 11 of the Code corresponding to section 13 of the Code of 1882. That appears also to have been the case in Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (2). There was a dismissal of the suit for want of evidence which was a dismissal on the merits, as is shown conclusively by the subsequent proceedings in the case. There was first a summary appeal to the Sudder Court, but they held that the appeal must be brought by way of a regular appeal, i. e., not as an appeal from an order, but as from a decree on the merits; and on a regular appeal being preferred, the appeal was dismissed. See page 164 of the report; Macpherson's Civil Procedure, Chapter XXXIX, for summary appeals. There was no question of permission to withdraw, for there was no such procedure then, and there was only a statement that the order then passed which was a decree for dismissal was not intended to bar the plaintiffs from proceeding as if the action had not been brought. This statement, it was held by their Lordships, could not prevent the actual dismissal from operating as a bar to the maintainability of the subsequent suit under section 2 of the Act of 1859, which corresponds to the present section 11 of the Code. That those decisions do not affect the present case is obvious, for there had been no adjudication of any sort in the case on the claim of the plaintiff and the matter cannot, therefore, be treated as res judicata. The decision of their Lordships in Parsotam Gir v. Narbada Gir (3) is conclusive on the point. In that case there was first a suit for recovery of possession of certain villages which was decreed by the first Court which decree, on appeal to the High Court, was reversed and the suit dismissed. The Appellate Court, however, expressly stated that they were not deciding on the rights of the parties. A second suit was brought by the same plaintiff against the representative of the same defendant for the same reliefs and their Lordships, reversing the judgment of the High Court, held that the subject-matter of the second suit was not res judicata.

The provisions of clause 3 of Order XXIII, rule 1, do not help the appellant as there has been no withdrawal without permission and the appellant is not entitled to treat one portion of the order, that giving permission, as a nullity while holding the plaintiff bound by his withdrawal.

It is not, therefore, necessary to express an opinion on the question, whether an order granting permission to withdraw with liberty to sue again, in a case where the Court grants such permission on an erroneous construction of the provisions of law which gives the power, is a nullity. But with all respect to the learned Judges who decided otherwise, I venture to doubt whether such an order is a nullity as one passed without jurisdiction, strictly so called. When a Court is properly seized of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit and of the parties, orders passed in violation of the provisions of law regulating the further proceedings in the suit in relation to the subject-matter till the termination of the suit cannot be said to be so totally without jurisdiction as to render them nullities. It can only amount to a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction; for example, there is Order I, rule 10, which gives power to the Court to add or strike out parties; if an improper order is made under that rule, can the parties ignore it and treat it as a nullity though such an order may be said to have been made in one sense without jurisdiction? [See the language used by Lindley, L. J. in Moser v. Marsden (4).] Or again if an injunction is issued or a Receiver appointed under conditions or in circumstances not coming within the terms of the sections conferring the power, can a party treat those orders as nullities? I think the true rule is that if the Court has jurisdiction to pass orders of a particular kind, that in a particular case it passed an order which it should not have passed is not a case of total want of jurisdiction so as to render that order a nullity. This is well illustrated by Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (5), where a Court having general jurisdiction of such suits rendered judgment for recovery of land outside its territorial jurisdiction and yet that judgment was held not to be a nullity.

The consequence of holding that an order giving permission to withdraw with liberty to sue again is a nullity and is capable of collateral attack may be serious. The terms of the rule are wide, and in particular cases it may be very difficult to decide whether permission should or should not have been granted; orders improperly passed but with jurisdiction and orders passed without jurisdiction are incapable of precise definition. In this very case there was a serious argument that the order was quite proper, at any rate it was not one passed without jurisdiction, though we are inclined to hold that the permission should not have been granted. If a party who is dissatisfied with such an order is to be allowed to treat it as a nullity in a subsequent proceeding, without vacating the order by proper proceedings, the plaintiff may be subject to a serious risk, conceivably without any fault of his own. This was the view taken in Perumal v. Pichan (6) by my learned brother and another learned Judge of this Court which was not cited at the Bar and in Chhajju v. Khyali Ram (7) by the Allahabad High Court. This contention must, therefore, be disallowed.

Two more points were taken, but were not pressed. The decree of the lower Court will, therefore, be modified in respect of interest as stated above and the appeal otherwise dismissed. The appellant will pay and receive proportionate costs here and in the Court below from the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs have preferred a memorandum of objections; but there is no substance in the points taken and it must be dismissed with costs.

It is argued that 9 per cent. is to be substituted for 10 per cent. as regards the principal, and the decree of the lower Court will be amended accordingly.

C. R. P. No. 1046 of 1915 is also dismissed, as it has now become unnecessary.

BHUPENDRA KUMAR SARKAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Rani KISSORI DASI EXECUTRIX TO THE ESTATE OF LATE RANESWAR BHOWMIK
— DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 68—Landlord and tenant—Interest on arrears of rent disallowed—Regulation VIII of 1819—Collector, whether has judicial capacity—Collector, power of, to make order as to costs in proceedings before him—Tender of rent—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 38—Costs.

In decreeing a suit for arrears of rent a Court is entitled under section 68 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act to disallow interest to the landlord-plaintiff, if it finds that a proper tender had been made by the tenant defendant of the rents due before proceedings were instituted for their realisation. [p. 615, col. 2.]

Under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819 the Collector has power, when an application is made under the Regulation for the purpose of realising the rent in arrears, to determine the actual rent due and has a quasi-judicial capacity, and, therefore, has jurisdiction to direct in what manner the costs of the proceedings before him ought to be borne. [p. 616, col. 1.]

Ordinarily a litigant who succeeds on his claim, although he may be deprived of his costs for some reason, cannot be ordered to pay the costs of the other side. But in a case where the tenant defendant having tendered the rent due made an offer of performance under section 38 of the Contract Act before a suit was instituted for its recovery, the Court which decrees the suit has jurisdiction to direct that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant his costs in the suit. [p. 616, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Berhampore, dated the 19th August 1914, confirming that of the Munsif, Berhampore, dated the 30th March 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Karunamoy Bose, for the Appellants.—Section 68 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to this case. The Collector who awarded costs to the respondent acted wholly without jurisdiction in so doing. There is nowhere in Regulation VIII of 1819 any provision for the awarding of such costs or for the realisation.

[Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar, for the Respondent.—The application of the landlords under Regulation VIII of 1819 was dismissed, and the Collector, who heard the application, had certainly jurisdiction to award costs to the patnidar under section 14 of the Regulation. This has been the practice for the last 50 years.]

Section 68 (2) refers to a case where a suit is instituted for recovery of arrears of rent without reasonable or probable cause, i.e., where there is no just claim on the part of the landlord. In this case admittedly rent was due to the landlords and the tender alleged to have been made was not a proper tender made at a proper time. The patnidar might have deposited his rent in Court, if he had the real intention of paying it before it fell into arrears. As soon as rent falls into arrears the landlord has every right to bring a suit for the recovery of the arrears. Section 38 of the Contract Act shows what are the essentials for a proper tender. According to the contract of lease, the patnidar was bound to pay the rents according to the instalments, and unless tender was made before the instalments fell due, such tender was not a good tender. Moreover, no damages were claimed by the tenant defendants in their written statement, and, therefore, the lower Courts were wrong in awarding damages to the defendants.

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar (with him Babu Upendra Narain Bagchi), for the Respondents.—Before proceedings were taken before the Collector under Regulation VIII of 1819, my client offered the whole amount due. But the landlords did not accept the amount. The patnidars were unnecessarily harassed by the proceedings, and the Collector had every power to award to them costs by way of compensation. The zemindar cannot claim the power of initiating proceedings before the Collector under Regulation VIII, without having the risk of paying costs to the patnidars when such proceedings are found to have been instituted without reasonable cause. A Collector determining a proceeding taken by the zemindar for realisation of patni rent under the Regulation acts like a Civil Court; so he has jurisdiction to award costs. Refers to section 8, paragraph 2 of Regulation VIII of 1819, Regulation VII of 1832, Act X of 1859 and Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee (1). The lower Appellate Court has found that a proper tender was made before the institution of the proceedings before the Collector. That finding is conclusive in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the judgment of the learned District Judge of Berhampore, dated the 19th August 1914, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiffs brought the suit to recover the rent in arrears, they being the zemindars and the defendant being the patnidar under them. The plaintiffs put in before the Collector an application under Regulation VIII of 1819, for the purpose of realising the rent in arrears. They claimed a sum in excess of what was admitted by the defendant. The result was that the Collector having adjudicated under section 14 of the Regulation on this matter found the rent to be as stated by the defendant and awarded a sum of Rs. 32 to the defendant as her costs in the proceedings before him. The plaintiffs did not accept this and brought the present suit for recovering the rent in arrears. The suit failed in both the lower Courts and the grounds on which it failed are these:—First of all the Courts found that a proper tender had been made by the defendant of the rent due before the proceedings were instituted and that, therefore, no interest ought to be awarded to the plaintiffs under section 68 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The second finding was that the defendant was entitled to set off the sum of Rs. 32 awarded to her as costs by the Collector and the third finding was that the defendant was entitled to get damages under the provisions of section 68 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. At the hearing of the appeal before us, another point was made, namely, that there was a clear admission in the written statement that a sum of Rs. 75-8-6 was due to the plaintiffs and that the Courts ought not to have gone behind that admission. But this last point is not raised in the grounds of appeal before us and apparently it was not raised in the grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court. It is too late now to consider this point, that was not made until the case was actually argued before us.

Now, as to the first point, namely, the disallowance of interest, the learned Judge was clearly entitled to disallow interest under section 68 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he having found that the defendant had made an offer of performance within the meaning of section 38 of the Indian Contract Act. Once he has made that finding, then the defendant is not responsible for the non-performance; that means that she is not liable to pay interest on the amount due.

The second point was that the Collector had no jurisdiction under the provisions of

RAHMATULLA SHEIKH v. ISABUDDIN SARKAR.

Regulation VIII of 1819 to award to the defendant any costs of the proceedings before him. Mr. Majumdar, who has conducted the appeal on behalf of the defendant-respondent, has given us an interesting historical statement as to the position of the Collector under that Act and as to how he came to supersede the Civil Court as originally provided in the Regulation. I think the case rested on a broader basis than that. The Collector had power to determine the actual rent and had a quasi-judicial capacity and, therefore, had jurisdiction to direct in what manner the costs of the proceedings before him ought to be borne. I think the learned Judge was right in coming to the conclusion that the costs before the Collector awarded in favour of the defendant should be set off as against the amount sued for.

The next point was as regards the claim under section 68 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Judge has found that the suit was instituted without reasonable and probable cause and in that view, sub-section (2) of section 68 clearly gave the Court jurisdiction to award damages under that section.

Finally the learned Judge directed the plaintiffs to pay the costs of the suit. Ordinarily, of course, a litigant who succeeds on his claim, although he may be deprived of his costs, cannot be ordered to pay them. But in a case that comes under section 38 of the Indian Contract Act, the defendant is not responsible for non-performance and if he is not responsible for non-performance, if he is not awarded the costs of the suit, it may be said that he is made responsible for the non-performance of the contract. I think, therefore, that the Judge had jurisdiction to direct that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant her costs in the suit although not twice over, as was apparently ordered by the Munsif. In the lower Appellate Court, apparently the order for costs was not made twice over and the order, though made in that form in the Court of first instance, may perhaps be varied by simply altering the decree of the Munsif from one dismissing the suit with costs to a simple dismissal of the suit without any order as to costs, the defendant having already been given credit for the amount awarded to her by the Court for the costs of the suit. Subject to this slight alteration in the decree of the Court of first instance, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

NEWBOLD, J.—I agree.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment of under-raiyat on expiry of term of kabuliyat—Stipulation for second settlement—Under-raiyat not expressing willingness to carry out stipulation, consequence of—Pleadings—Time, whether of essence of contract.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff, a raiyat, to eject the defendant, an under-raiyat, on the expiry of the term of his kabuliyat which contained a condition to the effect that on the expiry of the term of the lease the tenant shall take a second settlement and unless he does so he shall have no interest in the land, the defendant pleaded that the kabuliyat was improperly obtained from him by the plaintiff and he was, therefore, not bound by the terms thereof, but he did not say that he was willing to take a fresh settlement nor did he express such willingness until after the close of the evidence and apparently when the case was being argued:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for ejectment when it was found that the terms of the kabuliyat were binding upon the defendant and that the defendant was not entitled to plead an equitable defence against the plaintiff's right to possess the land, as he never pleaded that he was ever ready and willing to take a second settlement and did not prove that he was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract. [p. 617, col. 2.]

In a case of this nature, time is not of the essence of the contract unless it is made so. [p. 617, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rangpur, dated the 6th May 1915, reversing that of the Officiating Munsif, Gaibanda, dated the 13th June 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Appellant.—There is a condition in the kabuliyat which runs to the effect that, 'on the expiry of the term of the lease, I shall take a second settlement'. The defendant is entitled to a second settlement under the terms of the lease. When a tenant says: 'I shall take as fresh settlement,' in a kabuliyat in this country it creates a bilateral contract. Time is not of the essence of the contract in the present case. No time has been stated in the lease. Refers to Moss v. Barton (1). This is the ordinary rule. Unless the defendant makes a default, he cannot be evicted. There is no evidence whatsoever that the defendant has made any default in regard to the second settlement. Further, the defendant expressed his willingness to take a fresh settlement. And as time is not of the essence of the contract here, the defendant has a right to remain in possession on taking a fresh settlement.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh, for the Respondent.—The tenant did not seek for specific performance of the contract. His lease ends under section 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He cannot resist an action in ejectment by the landlord. Clause (b) of section 49 covers the case of a written lease without a term of years. Komaruddi v. Sreenath Chowdhury (2).

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta replied.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant from a decision of the learned District Judge of Rangpur, dated the 6th May 1915, reversing the decision of the Officiating Munsif of Gaibanda. The suit was brought by the plaintiff, a raiyat, to eject the defendant, an under-raiyat, whose term had expired. Against the plaintiff's claim, the defendant pleaded that the kabuliyat which he had executed in favour of the landlord, the plaintiff, had been obtained from him improperly and so he was not bound by the terms thereof. That point has been found against the defendant. The kabuliyat contained a condition to the following effect: "On the expiry of the term of the lease, I shall take a second settlement. Unless I do so, I shall have no interest in the land." The defendant has not taken a fresh settlement and, according to his contract, he is to have no interest in the land. He never said that he was willing to take a fresh settlement and he never expressed his willingness until after the close of the evidence and apparently until the case was being argued. The defendant's case was that he was not bound by the terms of the document at all; and the case whether he had always been ready and willing to perform his part of the contract by taking a fresh settlement was never tried. If that case had been in issue instead of the case as to whether the defendant was or was not bound by the terms of the agreement, the plaintiff might have produced evidence to show that the defendant far from being ready and willing to perform the contract was in default and had been in repeated defaults. It is quite true, as Mr. Gupta, who appears for the defendant-appellant, says, that in a case of this nature, the time is not the essence of the contract unless it is made so. But notwithstanding that, except the statement made before the learned Judge, there is nothing to show that the defendant was ever ready and willing to perform his part of the contract; and, unless he was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract, the plaintiff was entitled to eject him. It is only when he proves that he was ready and willing that he would be able to plead an equitable defence against the plaintiff's right to possess the land. In this case, if the defendant meant to rely upon this point, he ought to have set it up in his written statement and had a distinct issue raised on it instead of pleading a false case as it turns out to be that the kabuliyat had been taken from him by improper means. Although the reasons given by the learned Judge in his judgment express somewhat too broadly the duties of the defendant under the terms of the agreement. I am satisfied that this defendant never did set up in the suit, until he was far too late, that he was willing to be bound by the obligation in the kabuliyat and that he had always been ready and willing to perform his part of the contract. That case cannot be properly decided without having the point raised in proper time and without having an issue properly framed on the point and evidence taken on both sides as to whether the defendant's statement is or is not true. I think, on the whole, that the result arrived at by the learned District Judge decreeing the plaintiff's suit is correct, Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), s. 29—Delivery of possession by attornment of tenants and by pointing out land sold—Pre-emption, suit for—Limitation.

In a suit for pre-emption it appeared that the sale sought to be pre-empted was an oral one and had taken place some six months prior to 26th July 1907, and that possession was, in June 1907, delivered to the vendors by getting the tenants to attorn to the vendees and by pointing out on the spot each and every field which had been sold. The suit having been instituted on the 1st October 1909:

Held, that the vendees came into physical possession of the land sold in June 1907 within the meaning of section 29 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act and that the suit having been instituted more than one year after that date was, therefore, time-barred. [p. 620, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 5th May 1914, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 10th February 1911, decreeing the claim in part.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are two appeals by rival pre-emptors against the decisions of the lower Appellate Court that their suits are barred by time. The sale sought to be pre-empted was an oral one of agricultural land and took place, according to the statement of Jawala Shah, in the mutation proceedings, some six months prior to 26th July 1907, which is the date of the patwari's report. The mutation was sanctioned on the 30th August 1909. Bishan Singh and others, plaintiffs-appellants in Appeal No. 1707 brought their suit on the 1st October 1909. Ishar Das and another, plaintiffs-appellants in Appeal No. 2235, brought their suit on the 19th of April 1910. The first Court held that the land sold did not admit of physical possession and that the starting point for limitation under section 29 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1905 was the date of the mutation. It, therefore, held that both the suits were in time, and gave the pre-emptors decrees for the land in proportion to the respective amounts of land revenue paid by them. In appeal the Divisional Judge held that it was proved that the vendees took possession of part of the land sold in May and June 1907 and consequently that the limitation ran from those months, and both the suits having been brought more than a year after June 1907 were barred by time.

Mr. Shafi, who appeared for the appellants in Appeal No. 1707, urged that the lower Appellate Court ought to have stated definitely on what pleas, and in what manner, the vendees had obtained possession. He went on to argue that any possession which the vendees had obtained was only constructive, and not physical possession within the meaning of section 29 of the Pre-emption Act and that, therefore, limitation ran from the date on which mutation was attested. In his judgment the Divisional Judge refers to Khasra Nos. 2920, 3025 and 2189, in regard to which he says it was argued before him that the vendees had taken possession in June 1907, but he has not clearly stated that these are the fields of which he finds that the vendees did actually take possession, though we think this was probably his intention. It was also argued before him that the vendees ejected certain tenants and replaced them by others in Rabi of 1904 corresponding with May 1907, and thereby took physical possession of those fields. He has not, however, come to any definite finding that the vendees obtained physical possession of those fields within the meaning of section 29 of the Act.

In view of his somewhat indefinite finding we have examined the evidence as to the taking of possession by the vendees. The numbers of which Mr. Sheo Narain argues the vendees took physical possession are Nos. 2920, 3025 and 2189. In regard to these the following is the evidence on the record. At page 37 of the paper-book in answer to question 5 of the interrogatories Narain Das, Patwari, stated as follows: "In the girdawari papers for Rabi Sambat 1964, the land is entered to be in possession of Sardar Hari Singh, etc. In the roznamcha the following remarks appear under date the 19th June 1907:—

'At the request of Jawala Sahai, resident of Chakwal, I pointed out to him on the spot the fields which are entered in the papers as belonging to the brother of Hari Singh, etc.'" This witness was also examined in Court (see page 63 of the paper-book), where at line 27 he states: "the mutation entry is made on 26th July 1907. As per my diary for that date I went to point out the fields on 19th June 1907." Kirpa Ram witness, who is agent of Sardar Hari Singh vendor, stated (page 59, line 22, paper-book): "possession was delivered between 14th and 30th of Bisakh (May 1907), the exact date not known. It was delivered on the spot by directing the tenants that the vendees shall take the produce for Rabi 1964. The patwari was called. He pointed out the fields. A small portion was uncultivated. It was pointed out on the spot." At page 60, line 16, he says:—"The fields were shown one by one on the spot." It should be noted that Jawala Shah, to whom the fields were pointed out, is the father of the minor vendees. The three numbers mentioned above were admittedly uncultivated in June 1907. It appears then from this and other evidence that possession was delivered by getting the tenants to attorn to the vendees and by pointing out on the spot each and every field which had been sold. It is further in evidence that Khasra Nos. 2920 was demarcated at the instance of Jawala Shah at the girdawari, i.e., October 1908. We need not, however, refer to this in detail because in our opinion the vendees obtained physical possession of part of the property sold in June 1907.

Mr. Shafi has referred to Batul Begam v. Mansur Ali Khan (1), in which it was held that a share in an undivided zemindari mahal is not susceptible of "physical possession" in the sense of Article 10 of the Second Schedule to Act XV of 1877, and also that constructive possession, e. g., by receipt of rent from tenants, is not "physical possession" within the meaning of the said Article. In this judgment the view of Sir Robert Stuart, C. J., expressed in Jageshar Singh v. Jawahir Singh (2), that physical possession did not include constructive possession was quoted with approval. Mr. Shafi also referred us to Batul Begam v. Mansur Ali Khan (3), in which their Lordships held that an undivided share in certain villages did not admit of physical possession and that that expression meant a personal and immediate possession. Now in accordance with these rulings we must hold that the vendees' possession through their tenants was not physical possession within the meaning of section 29 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. We see no reason, however, for holding that their possession of the uncultivated Nos. 291C, 3025 and 2189 was not physical possession. It was not constructive possession through an agent or tenant, but was the vendees' own personal possession. In this connection we would refer to Bahadur Chand v. Naina Mal (4), in which it was held that to obtain possession of waste land it is not necessary that the purchaser should step on to the land or get into corporal contact with it. All that is necessary is the physical possibility of the buyer dealing with the land exclusively as his own. See also Markby's Elements of Law, 6th edition, page 183, Article 356, where the following passage occurs:—

"It is not necessary in order to obtain possession that the purchaser should step on to the land at all. If it is near at hand, and the seller points it out to the buyer, and shows that the possession is vacant, and signifies his desire to hand it over to the buyer, whilst the buyer signifies his desire to receive it, enough has been done to transfer the possession. The physical possibility of the buyer dealing with the thing exclusively as his own, which is all that is necessary, exists whether he thinks proper to use it by stepping on to the land or not."

Having regard to these authorities we are clearly of opinion that the vendees in June 1907 obtained personal and immediate possession of these three numbers of uncultivated land. This possession was certainly not constructive, and we see no reason for not holding that it was physical possession within the meaning of section 29 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. Both the present suits are, therefore, clearly barred by time and we dismiss both the appeals with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint contains two principal prayers, firstly, that certain sales in favour of the defendants Nos. 2 to 18 made by the Official Receiver, Gopala Aiyar, be declared to be not valid in law, and secondly, that fresh Receiver be appointed and the properties made over to him. On the first prayer, the plaintiffs have paid Rs. 10 that is for the declaratory relief valuing the suit for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 38,000; and the 2nd prayer they valued at Rs. 100, and have paid thereon an ad valorem fee of Rs. 7-8-0. The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that they ought to have paid ad valorem fee on Rs. 38,000. He relies upon certain rulings of this Court in support of that view. We do not think that those rulings really lay down any such proposition. The case in Malikka Meladathil v. Kunji Achammal (1) which follows the case in Chingacham Vitol Sankaran Nair v. Chingacham Vitol Gopala Menon (2) and also the case in Samiya Marvali v. Minammal (3) were all cases in which the plaintiff was a party to the deed which he wanted to have declared invalid on the ground of fraud or on similar allegations. But in this case the plaintiffs were no parties to the sales and they seek to have a declaration to the effect that the sales were brought about by the fraud of the Official Receiver and consequently not valid and binding upon them. As pointed out in a somewhat similar case in Unni v. Kunchi Amma (4), the claim for the cancellation of the deeds of sales was not a necessary part of the reliefs which the plaintiffs were seeking and, therefore, it was not right to say that the suit was in substance a suit to obtain the cancellation of the deed. Granting that it was so, the plaintiffs were entitled to value the relief as they liked and pay the fee on such valuation. Even if the second prayer may be taken to amount to consequential relief, that would not, in our opinion, make any difference; because under section 7, clause 4, sub clause (c), the plaintiffs are reliable to pay Court-fee on their own valuation. It is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that as a matter of fact the valuation for the purposes of Court-fee must be taken to be Rs. 38,000 which was the valuation in the plaint for the purposes of jurisdiction. But he overlooks the fact that the consequential relief on which alone the fee was to be paid at the ad valorem rate has been valued at Rs. 100 which the plaintiffs were entitled to do and they have paid Court fee on that. We do not think, therefore, that the order of the Sub-Judge is right. It will be set aside and the case will be remitted to him for disposal according to law. Costs will abide the result.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 4th December 1914.

Messrs. Benode Behari and Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it is not necessary for us to decide the question as to whether this suit was cognisable in the district of Agra or not. That is a point on which there appears to be a considerable difference of opinion, so recently as 1914 and 1915 in this Court, and one day no doubt it will be necessary to set the question finally at rest, but, in our opinion, this appeal must be allowed upon another ground. The suit is brought to set aside a decree which it is alleged that the defendant fraudulently obtained ex parte against the plaintiff in the Court of Howrah in Bengal and which he has endeavoured to enforce by execution against the plaintiff in the district where the plaintiff resides and has property. The suit has had a somewhat varied career. It was originally heard in May 1912 upon a preliminary point when the Munsif decided that he had jurisdiction to determine the suit. That fact is not unimportant because it is perfectly clear that the point was present to the mind of those who were advising the defendant in the Court of First Instance from the very exception of the suit itself, and not only that but it was present to their mind as a preliminary objection to the whole suit. It was determined by the Munsif in favour of the plaintiff and some months afterwards, namely, in January 1913, the plaintiff obtained a decree upon the merits in the same Court from another Munsif. From that decree an appeal was brought to the District Judge and determined by Mr. Lyle on the 17th of June 1913. By the decree passed on that occasion for a reason which it is not necessary to mention, the District Judge remanded the case for retrial in the Munsif's Court. It will be necessary in a moment to refer again to that judgment, but for the present it is only necessary to observe that that order of remand was open to an appeal and no appeal was brought from it. The suit, therefore, returned once more to be dealt with by the Munsif and it was determined for the second time upon the merits on the 31st of March 1914. In December 1914 a further appeal was brought which unfortunately came before a different District Judge in the same Court at Agra and he held, basing himself upon the authority reported as Dau Diyal v. Munna Lal (1) that the original Court, the Munsif's Court, had no jurisdiction to try the suit at all, and, he, therefore, returned the plaint once more directing it to be presented to the proper

HANSRAJ V. BIJAI RAM SINGH.

Court. Against that order the present appeal is brought. Now the one question about which there has been substantial argument, is whether or not the first order of the first District Judge, namely, the 17th of June 1913, dealt with the question of jurisdiction. It is difficult to see how a Judge, where in the proceedings in the Court below there has been a serious controversy as to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit at all, could remand the suit to be retried by that Court without holding that that Court had jurisdiction to try it. But in this particular case pursuing the course which they had originally taken in the Munsif's Court, the defendant's advisers when they appealed for the first time, put in the forefront of their attack a ground of appeal that the suit was not cognizable at all by the Munsif's Court at Fatehgarh. Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai has argued with his usual ability, that that point has not been decided by the District Judge and in a sense that is true. He does not expressly refer to it nor give any reasons for refusing to give any effect to the ground of appeal raised, but it seems to us that one or two consequences must follow where an appeal comes before an Appellate Court and is heard upon the merits. If this point, which went to the root of the suit, was not argued, it must have been abandoned and, therefore, it is equivalent to a decision against the appellant. On the other hand if the point was argued, even though the Judge himself does not give any reasons for dismissing it in his judgment, the mere fact that he held that the suit was properly valued and cognizable by the Munsif's Court, involved a holding by him that the Munsif had jurisdiction to try it. In the face of a ground raised in that way in the notice of appeal, it would be an idle thing for any Judge to send back the suit and put the parties to the expense of a second trial upon the merits unless he was satisfied that the Court below to which he was sending the case, had no jurisdiction to try it. In our view the judgment of the 17th of June 1913 was a decision against the appellant, the present respondent, that the Munsif's Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. It seems to us that that is fatal to the present respondent's position upon two grounds. In a case reported as Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (2), the Privy Council decided that apart altogether from what is now section of the Civil Procedure Code, or what is known as res judicata, a decision whether appealable or not, if not appealed from in a suit given on an interlocutory matter, is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit. To quote from the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock "If an appeal did not lie the judgment was final. If the appeal did lie and none was preferred, the judgment was equally final and binding upon the parties and those claiming under them." Applying the principle of that case it is quite clear that the judgment of Mr. Lyle is final and binding on the present respondents, that there was jurisdiction in the Munsif's Court to try the suit. It seems to us further that there is another ground, namely, sub-section (2) of section 105 which stands in the way of the respondents in this Court. That sub-section runs as follows: "Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness." Now two things are quite clear that if there was no jurisdiction for the Munsif to try the suit at all, the present respondent was the person aggrieved by the order of remand. Further by now asserting that there was no jurisdiction, he is clearly attempting to dispute its correctness. It is quite true that on one ground at any rate, which was decided in his favour, the case was sent back for re-trial and to that extent he is not disputing and is not likely ever to dispute the correctness of the order of remand. But that is only a partial statement of the position. By asserting that the Court below was without jurisdiction altogether, he is clearly challenging or disputing the correctness of the decision of a Court which ordered that Court to try it. It seems to us that the case comes within the mischief of sub-section (2) of section 105, and on that account he is prevented now from questioning the correctness of the decision of Mr. Lyle. The result is that this appeal must be allowed and the order of the District Judge directing the plaint to be returned to the other Court, must be reversed and restored to the file to be heard on the merits in the ordinary course.

APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 64 OF 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and

Seth DOOLY CHAND—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

versus

Maharaja SIR RAMESWAR SINGH

BAHADUR—DECREE-HOLDER—

RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 49, 76 (f)—Mortgage—Agreement to keep mortgaged premises insured, failure to perform—Insurance effected by Receiver in mortgage suit—Money received under insurance policy, applicability of.

A mortgage-deed provided that during the continuance of the security the mortgagor should insure and keep insured the mortgaged premises, and that if he failed to do so, it would be lawful for the mortgagee to make payments necessary for the purpose and that such payments would be a charge upon the mortgaged premises. The mortgage-deed also provided that all sums of money received under and by virtue of any such insurance should be applied by the mortgagee, if so required by the mortgagor, in or towards substantially re-building, re-instating or re-pairing the said premises. Neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee insured the property, but the Receiver, appointed in the suit on the mortgage, under the Court's direction kept the property insured against any loss or damage by fire, for the benefit of all the parties to the suit. Before the property was brought to sale in execution of the mortgage decree it was destroyed by fire, whereupon the Receiver obtained under the policy of insurance a large sum of money:

Held, (1) that the money received by the Receiver was not governed by the terms of the mortgage-deed, inasmuch as the insurance was kept on foot by the Court through the Receiver as a matter of protection for the benefit of all persons who were parties to the mortgage suit, and not by the mortgagor or the mortgagee in accordance with their contract in the mortgage-deed; [p. 625, col. 1.]

(2) that the Court had ample discretion in directing in what manner the money so received, should be laid out, and that the mortgagor could not claim that it should be laid out in restoring the premises that had been destroyed or damaged by fire. [p. 625, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, 24-Pergannas, dated the 24th February 1917.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Chuckerberty (with him Babu Shib Chunder Palit and Noni Lal De), for the Appellant.—Under the covenant in the mortgage-bond the mortgagor is entitled to insist on the re-building of the house burnt down by accidental fire with the money realized from the Insurance Company. The mortgagee can not successfully resist this right of the mortgagor because the contract in the bond clearly says that in case the mortgaged premises be burnt down by accidental fire the house is to be re-built with the money that would be realized from the Insurance Company, if the mortgagor so requires. I submit that but for that covenant in the mortgage-bond the mortgagee could have claimed that money. When there is a clear provision in the bond for the way in which the money is to be used the mortgagee is not entitled to claim that money. See section 49, Transfer of Property Act.

Mr. B. C. Mitter (with him Babu Ambica Pada Chowdhury), for the Respondent.—After the final decree for mortgage was passed the covenant in the mortgage-bond passed from the domain of contract to that of the judgment passed in that suit. The contention of my learned friend that the mortgagee decree-holder is bound by the covenant in the mortgage bond, that he is bound to apply any money received from the Insurance Company in re-constructing the mortgaged premises has no substance, because after the final decree for mortgage was passed the contract now sought to be enforced was at an end, and the rights of the parties are to be governed by the terms of the final decree. Moreover, the mortgaged property is now in the hands of the Receiver, who is an officer of the Court, and the mortgagor cannot insist on the re-building of the house by the Court. I rely on Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (1), Garden v. Ingram (2).

DOOLY CHAND v. RAMESWAR SINGH.

Mr. B. Chuckerberty in reply.—There is a contract for the re-building of the house with the money due from the Insurance Company, and that contract is not merged in the decree. The contract remains good and enforceable even after the passing of the decree, and I am entitled to take advantage of the clause in the contract. I would also refer to section 76, clause (f), of the Transfer of Property Act.

[FLETCHER, J.—That section cannot apply because the mortgagee has not been put in possession of the property.]

But the Receiver is in possession of the property on behalf of and for the benefit of the mortgagee. Under the circumstances when the mortgagee has been sufficiently secured your Lordships should exercise your own discretion in my favour.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of the second Court at Alipore, dated the 24th February 1917. The appeal arises under the following circumstances. By an indenture of mortgage made in the month of July 1911 between the judgment-debtor of the one part and the decree-holder of the other part, the judgment-debtor mortgaged to the decree-holder a certain Jute Press together with the machineries and fixtures to secure a sum of 2½ lakhs of rupees with interest. In the said indenture was contained a covenant by the mortgagor that he would at all times during the continuance of the security insure and keep insured to the full value thereof and for not less than Rs. 3,30,000 the mortgaged premises from loss or damage by fire in the name of the mortgagor in some office to be approved of by the mortgagee and that he would assign, endorse and deliver to the mortgagee the policy for such insurance and the receipt for every such payment within seven days after payment and that, in default, it would be lawful for the mortgagee to make those payments and such payments when made by the mortgagee would be a charge upon the mortgaged premises. The mortgage-deed also contained an agreement on the following terms: "It is hereby agreed and declared that all sums of money received under and by virtue of any such insurance as aforesaid shall be applied by the mortgagee, if so required by the mortgagor in or towards substantially and to the satisfaction of the mortgagee re-building re-instating or re-pairing the said premises so to be insured as aforesaid." Eventually, the mortgagee brought a suit upon the mortgage. On the 14th January 1914, a Receiver was appointed by the Court in the mortgage suit. A preliminary decree was then passed on the 6th April 1914 and the decree absolute was made on the 23rd November 1914. On the 18th January 1915, an order was made by the Court that the property should be brought to sale for the satisfaction of the amount found due on the mortgage security. Then, on the 19th December 1916, there occurred a fire and the Receiver received from the Insurance Company in which the premises were insured from loss or damage by fire the sum of Rs. 86,000 and odd. The mortgagor then applied to the Court that the money so received by the Receiver should be laid out in restoring the premises that had been destroyed or damaged by fire. The learned Judge refused that application. Against that order, the judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court.

Two questions have been raised in this appeal. First of all, that the manner in which the money received by the Receiver from the Insurance Company was to be applied being provided for by the mortgage deed and the parties having regulated their rights by contract, the contract must be given effect to by the Court and secondly, that if that be not so, the Judge did not exercise a wise discretion in declining to order the money received by the Receiver to be laid out in restoring the premises that had been damaged by fire. The first point is "Is that money in the hands of the Receiver governed by the terms of the mortgage deed." In my opinion, it is not; and I state shortly why. First of all, the mortgage-deed applies, as it states in its terms, to a policy which is kept on foot by the mortgagor, although the mortgagee had the option of making the payments if he thought fit. In this case, the premiums that were paid on the policy were not paid by the mortgagor and the mortgagee had never thought fit to make these payments. It is only with reference to the money received under and by virtue of "any such insurance as aforesaid" that the mortgagor has the right under the terms of the deed, to direct as to whether the money shall be laid out in restoring the premises destroyed by fire. As I have already pointed out "any such insurance as aforesaid" means an insurance effected in accordance with the terms of the mortgage-deed. The parties did not provide for what would happen in a case where the property having come in the custody of the Court, the officer of the Court under the direction of the Judge had kept the property insured against any loss or damage by fire for the benefit of all the parties to the suit. In my opinion, this case is not governed by the terms of the mortgage-deed. The insurance was kept on foot by the Judge as a matter of protection for all persons who were parties to the suit. It may be that there are other parties besides the mortgagor and the mortgagee. A subsequent mortgagee may be called a party for whose benefit also the Court took the precaution of insuring the premises. If that is so, then the money having been in the custody of the Court and it having arisen by the payments made by an officer of the Court, the Court had ample discretion in directing in what manner the money so received should be laid out. The question, therefore, is "Has the Court exercised its discretion rightly and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit." The judgment-debtor's case is that the premises should be re-built. As far as I can see, there was no evidence before the learned Judge showing that the premises could be restored to their former state for the sum received from the Insurance Company. In the absence of that evidence it would be impossible for the learned Judge to come to the conclusion that these premises could be restored as they existed before the fire. The costs of building materials and the other matters connected with the re-building may have and probably have substantially gone up within the last few years. Also the Judge had to consider whether it was convenient for the Court to superintend and undertake the re-erection of a large building as a Jute Press. What the nature of the building was I do not know. But having regard to the amount for which it was mortgaged apparently it was a building of considerable size and the amount of the damage done by the fire must have been considerable because the money received by the Receiver amounted to the sum of Rs. 86,000 and odd. In that view, I think the learned Judge having come to the conclusion that it would not be convenient to have these buildings restored, no grounds have been shown to us on which we can say that the learned Judge improperly exercised his discretion. The learned Judge clearly, in my opinion, had a discretion to decide in what manner the money received by the Receiver ought to be applied, and he came to the conclusion that the most convenient and the best course for the application of the money would be to allow the mortgagee to receive it in part satisfaction of his mortgage money rather than to direct the Receiver to undertake the re-construction of the building. In the result, I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge of the Court below. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs, five gold mohurs.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dyal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lal Mohan Ganguli, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. His suit was for confirmation of possession or in the alternative to recover possession of the suit land.

KALI DASS MULLICK v. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO.

The facts of the case are that there was one Nathu Mahton who had two sons, namely, Lallu Mahton and Jagat Bihari Mahton. Lally had a son named Munshi Mahton. Lally died, and Jagat Bihari also died leaving his widow Musammât Dako Koer.

The principal defendant in the case is Munshi. Musammât Dako is also one of the defendants.

The claim of the plaintiff is based on a deed of sale executed by Musammât Dako. It appears that Nathu Mahton was the head of the joint family. Lallu and Jagat Behari were joint. So after Lallu and Jagat Behari's deaths the estate according to the law fell into the hands of Munshi Mahton. This Munshi Mahton, however, is a minor. Musammât Dako his aunt executed a document for sale of the minor's property. The defendant No. 1 defended the suit through his guardian one Farhat Husain a Pleader appointed by the Court as his guardian ad litem. He contested the suit on the ground that Musammât Dako had no business to sell the property inasmuch as the sale proceeds never benefited the minor. It appears from the contents of the deed of sale that the property was sold to pay off a certain debt incurred for the performance of gaya sradh of Jagat Behari.

The Munsif dismissed the suit. On this there was an appeal by the plaintiff to the lower Appellate Court and the appeal thus preferred was dismissed by that Court, upon which, the present appeal has been preferred to this Court.

The first question for determination is whether Musammât Dako was the legal guardian of the minor and whether the sale proceeds by the sale of the property were in any way used for the benefit of the minor. Under the Hindu Law as discussed by Mayne in section 211 of his book the father is the guardian and next to him the mother and in default of her, a paternal kinsman who has preference over the maternal kinsman. Musammât Dako is not the mother of the minor. She is only an aunt having married the uncle of the infant. She is, therefore, not a natural guardian of the minor. That being so, the sale effected by her of the property which really belongs to the minor could not be an effective sale.

Then comes the question as to whether the sale proceeds were used for the benefit of the minor. The plaintiff's case is that the money was really obtained for payment of a previous debt incurred for the performance of the gaya sradh of Jagat Behari. The question is whether the performance of this gaya sradh was at all beneficial to the minor. I do not see how the said sradh could at all be considered beneficial to the minor either in this life or in the life to come. This being my view of the question involved I am of opinion that the judgments of the two Courts below are correct and cannot be assailed. For these reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree. The father's brother's wife cannot possibly be the natural guardian. For in all disputes as to whether the family is joint or not her interests are directly antagonistic to those of the minor. I also agree that the only ceremonies that need be performed out of the property of a deceased uncle are the monthly, six-monthly and annual obsequies as laid down by Thomas Strange in Volume I, Chapter VIII

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Railway Company, liability of, to compensate consignor—Risk note exonerating Company from liability except for loss of complete package, whether contrary to public policy—"Package," meaning of.

The form of risk-note under which a Railway Company is exonerated from liability to compensate a consignor, except for the loss of a complete package, is not contrary to public policy. [p. 627, col. 1.]

The word "package" in a risk-note means both that which is packed, and that in which it is packed, i. e., its covering or receptacle. [p. 627, col. 1.]

KAILASAM PILLAI v. NATARAJA TAMBIRAN.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, (with him Babu Jogendra Komar Dey), for the Petitioner.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Ambika Pada Chowdhury, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The Judge finds that there was theft of some ghee by the servants of the Railway Company, but that the case is covered by the risk-note as there was no loss of any complete package.

It does prima facie seem to be hard that the Railway Company can avoid responsibility in such a case by producing the empty tins. But this has been so held already by this Court, and the word “package” seems to mean both that which is packed and that in which it is packed, its covering or receptacle.

Then it is said that if that be so the risk-note in this respect is contrary to public policy. The previous cases, however, decided this point to the contrary and nonetheless so because the risk-note which was discussed in those cases is not now in force, for, the risk-note now in use is not so wide as the risk-note before the 9th March 1907. If the former risk-note was held not to be against public policy, a fortiori, the present risk-note is not. Moreover, in the case of the William Dring v. Shiv Prosad Bhakat (1) in which the risk-note was exactly in the same form as that now before us, the learned Judges say this: “It was suggested by the learned Pleader that the contract embodied in the risk-note was contrary to public policy. This question has also been considered in more than one case and decided in favour of the Railway Company. It may be pointed out that the risk-note in its present form is not so wide as it previously was.” The contention as regards notice also fails. We think that the Rule fails.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged.

We make no order as to costs.

I, Art. 120.

The head of a mutt does not stand in relation to the mutt properties in the position of a trustee in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and no suit lies to remove him from office under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 638, col. 2.]

Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das, 33 Ind. Cas. 583; 43 C. 707; 20 C. W. N. 802; 14 A. L. J. 621; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 406; 31 M. L. J. 1; 18 Bom. L. R. 490; 3 L. W. 556; 24 C. L. J. 116; 20 M. L. T. 267; 43 I. A. 73 (P. C.), considered.

The appointment by the head of a religious institution of his successor-in-office in accordance with the usage of the institution is invalid if made as the result of a compromise, whereby the appointor either averts a danger or secures an advantage to himself. [p. 637, col. 2.]

The Chinnapatam is an office inferior in sanctity to that of the Pandarasannadhi or head of a Mutt and the position of the Chinnapatam is analogous to that of an ordinary reversioner with a mere spes successionis dependent on his surviving the Pandarasannadhi who appoints him. [p. 632, col. 1; p. 637, col. 2.]

The cause of action for a suit to remove a person from the office of Pandarasannadhi arises from the date of the vesting of the said office in him on the application of Article 120 of the Limitation Act, and not from the date when he was appointed to the Chinnapatam office. [p. 637, col. 2.]

During the progress of litigation between T. and N. in which the latter questioned the appointment of T. as Pandarasannadhi under an alleged forged Will, T. entered into a compromise with N. whereby, in consideration of N. abandoning the contest and refraining from putting T. to proof of the Will, T. appointed N. to succeed him to the office of Pandarasannadhi on his death, and immediately appointed him Chinnapatam, giving him large properties of the mutt.

Held, that the appointment was invalid. [p. 631, col. 2.]

Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tambiran, 10 M. 375; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1015, distinguished.

Per Wallis, C. J.—The principles relating to family settlements and compromises of doubtful claims are inapplicable to agreements to fill up a religious office of importance in the eyes of Hindu worshippers, which raise very different considerations. [p. 632, col. 1.]

Per Napier, J.—The trustee of a religious and charitable trust has, in respect of litigation not affecting the office, the same right of compromise as an ordinary trustee has, and a compromise even of conflicting claims to an office is not necessarily unlawful or opposed to public policy, but must be scrutinized by the Court before which it is pleaded for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is in violation of the trust of the institution or affects adversely the interests of the religious office. [p. 636, col. 2.]

A mere irregularity in the appointment may be cured by efflux of time. If the qualifications of a person appointed fall little short of those required by usage and the appointment is otherwise unobjectionable and is made in the interests of the institution, the Court will not interfere with the appointment. But the case is different where the appointment is not made in the interests of the institution. [p. 638, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suits Nos. 17 and 18 of 1912.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyar, (with him Messrs. T. C. Sreenivasa Aiyangar and C. A. Seshagiri Sastri), for the Appellant in No. 317.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyar, for the Appellant in No. 318.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar Advocate-General (with him Mr. S. Ramasami Aiyar), for the Respondents in both.

These appeals coming on for hearing on the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th December 1916 respectively, and the cases having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—These are appeals in two suits originally numbered Original Suits No. 1 and 2 of 1905 in the District Court of Madura brought with the consent of the Advocate-General under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure by different plaintiffs. In Original Suit No. 1, the subject of Appeal No. 317, it was sought to have it declared that there was no lawful trustee of the Tiruvannamalai Mutt and of the dependent Devasthanams or temples, while in the second, the subject of Appeal No. 318, the declaration was only sought in respect of the Devasthanams or temples. The reason for filing the two suits was that it was considered doubtful whether the holder of the religious office of Pandarasannadhi of the Mutt was a trustee within the meaning of section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case set up in the plaint was that after the death in May 1893 of Arumugam a former Pandarasannadhi one Tandavaraya took wrongful possession of the Mutt under a Will which the Sub-Registrar and the District Registrar subsequently refused to register on the ground of forgery, and that shortly after the first defendant was appointed as his successor "out of fraudulent and sinister motive" and that the appointment was void. The first issue settled in both suits was, "whether the 1st defendant (the de facto incumbent of the office) is a mere trustee of the Mutt and has not got an estate for life in the Adhinam properties? On the 14th March 1906 the District Judge dismissed both suits holding, on the authority of Vidyapurna Thirtha Swami v. Vidyavidhi Thirtha Swami (1), that the Pandarasannadhi was not a mere trustee and that no suit lay for his removal under section 539, either as regards the Mutt or the trusteeship of the Devasthanams which in his opinion went with it. When the case came before Munro and Abdur Rahim, JJ., on appeal, they held that in any case there was no reason why the properties belonging to the Devasthanams which the 1st defendant admittedly held in trust should not be protected if it were proved that the defendant had been guilty of waste and mismanagement as alleged or why if a proper case was made out the Court should not make the necessary provision for a proper administration of the trust. They accordingly allowed Appeal No. 90 of 1906 in Original Suit No. 2 of 1905, and adjourned the other Appeal No. 91 of 1906 in Original Suit No. 1 of 1905 pending the answer to a reference which they made to the Full Bench nearly in the terms of the first issue, "does the head of a Mutt hold the properties constituting its endowment as a life-tenant or as a trustee?" The Full Bench answered that he was not a trustee except in so far as it might be shown that he held any particular properties on trust. At the same time they refused to regard him as a life-tenant. When the case went back to Munro and Abdur Rahim, JJ., they stated that the reply was that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the head of a Mutt is not a trustee. They accordingly reversed the decree of the District Court in this suit also, and remanded it for disposal according to law.

The two cases after remand were transferred to the file of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad and numbered in that Court 17 and 18 of 1912 and they were tried together with a third Suit No. 19 of 1912 brought by one Ponnambalam for a declaration that he had been duly elected to the vacant office of head of the Mutt by the Thambirans or disciples. This suit was dismissed and the dismissal has become final as no appeal has been filed.

As regards the Original Suit No. 1 of 1905 the Subordinate Judge found that there was no evidence to the contrary to show that the Pandarasannadhi was a trustee, and he accordingly held that the suit was liable to dismissal on this ground. No attempt has been made to question his finding on the evidence, but it is contended that the decision of the Full Bench is opposed to the recent decision of the Privy Council in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (2). This is strongly contested on the other side, but we do not propose to go into this question, as we consider that the point has already been decided in this suit by a Bench of this Court in the former appeal, and that the proper way of questioning it is by appeal from that decision.

The third issue in both suits was: "The plaintiffs suing the 1st defendant as a trespasser, is the suit maintainable under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure?" We agree, therefore, with the Subordinate Judge that as regards Original Suit No. 1 of 1905 (No. 17 of 1912) this must be answered in the negative and the suit must be dismissed in so far as it relates to the office of Pandarasannadhi and its endowment.

As regards the second suit Original Suit No. 2 of 1905, now 18 of 1912, the defendant's Pleader did not press this issue at the trial and it was accordingly found for the plaintiffs, and the suit was held to be maintainable under section 539 as relating only to the Devasthanam properties. It still involves the question whether the 1st defendant is the lawful Pandarasannadhi as, if he is not, he has no right to the trusteeship of the Devasthanams, and those interested in these charities have a right to sue to have proper provision made for the trust. The Subordinate Judge has accordingly gone into the question of the validity of the 1st defendant's appointment and has found that it is not open to objection and we have now to deal with that finding on appeal.

It is unnecessary to summarise the numerous descriptions of this office which are to be found in the decisions of this Court. The evidence shows that, as in the case of other similar Mutts, the Pandarasannadhi for the time being nominates one of the disciples who have received initiation as sanyasis or ascetics to succeed him on his death and confers upon him abishegam, a sort of ordination, which, as appears from the evidence in this and other cases, is regarded as having the effect of deification and also empowers him to initiate disciples as sanyasis. During the lifetime of the Pandarasannadhi his successor in this Mutt is said to fill the office of Chinnapattam. When the nomination is made at the point of death, it is not unfrequently made by Will as well as by conferring abishegam when possible, the Will being intended to evidence the exercise of the power of appointment.

In the plaint as already stated the plaintiffs attacked the 1st defendant's appointment on the ground that Tandavaraya under whom he now claims was not himself the lawful Pandarasannadhi and also on account of the circumstances under which the 1st defendant's appointment was made.

KAILASAM PILLAI v. NATARAJA TAMBIRAN.

This last question though distinctly raised in the pleadings was not, to say the least, very clearly taken in the issues in these two suits, but it was the subject of the fourth issue in the third suit which was tried with them:—Whether the appointment of the 1st defendant to the Chinnapattam by the late Pandarasannadhi “was made mala fide to serve his own purpose, and therefore invalid?” It is, I think, clear that the parties in these two suits also went to trial on this issue, and that we are bound to deal with it. At the hearing in the lower Court it was admitted that Tandavaraya was the lawful head of the Mutt and the case must be dealt with on that basis. It is still, however, necessary to refer to the circumstances under which he was appointed in so far as they effect the nomination of the 1st defendant as his successor. As already stated Arumugam the former head died suddenly in May 1893, six months after he had been acquitted on a charge of murder. In the proceedings taken for the registration of his alleged Will evidence was given that he regarded Tandavaraya one of the Tambirans or disciples of the Mutt as responsible for his prosecution. On his death this Tandavaraya entered on the office under an alleged appointment by the deceased both by Will and abishegam shortly before his death. It appears that some suspicion of foul play was entertained and that an investigation was held by the Sub-Magistrate, as one of the reasons given by the District Registrar in Exhibit D for refusing to register the Will was that no mention was made of it by Tandavaraya during this inquiry. The result of the inquiry would appear to have been that there was no ground for taking action against any one. The 1st defendant was away at the time, and when he returned to the District he did not return to the Mutt but went to live under the protection of the Zemindar of Sivaganga who also refused to recognise Tandavaraya and joined with him in opposing the registration of the Will put forward by Tandavaraya. On the 11th June 1893 the 1st defendant presented a petition Exhibit M to the District Court and another Exhibit U to the District Registrar, and two days later he published notices in the District Gazette and the Madura Mail and circulated a notice to the public Exhibits H, H1 and

H2 in which he claimed that he had been appointed to the Chinnapattam by the late Pandarasannadhi and was entitled to succeed and that the Will put forward by Tandavaraya was a forgery. In the petition to the District Judge he also accused Tandavaraya of murdering the deceased. A perusal of the District Registrar’s judgment Exhibit D delivered after an elaborate investigation in which both sides were represented by prominent practitioners, shows the very serious difficulties which Tandavaraya would have had to face if he had been called upon to substantiate his claims to the succession in a Court of Law by proving the execution of the Will. It was in these circumstances that certain persons intervened to bring about a compromise between the 30th April 1894 the date of the judgment and the 2nd July 1894 when Exhibit L was executed. The evidence shows that the compromise was mainly brought about by three persons whose respectability has not been questioned. The 1st defendant was first induced to leave the entourage of the Sivaganga Zemindar and go to Madura and after the terms had been settled he returned to the Mutt where Tandavaraya and he executed Exhibit L. The document recites that Tandavaraya had duly succeeded and was in possession, that the 1st defendant had been asserting that he himself had been appointed, and that for the past year they had both been litigating about this and incurring much expense and putting the institution to much inconvenience, and that in the interests of the institution they had both settled the matter amicably on the terms that Tandavaraya was to be the Pandarasannadhi with all the rights of the office and that the 1st defendant was to be the Chinnapattam or junior head and heir to Tandavaraya, and that during Tandavaraya’s lifetime the 1st defendant was to enjoy certain specified properties belonging to the Mutt without interference, and that during his lifetime Tandavaraya was not to appoint any one as heir to the Chinnapattam (sic). Assuming what was conceded by the appellants in the lower Court for the purposes of the case that Tandavaraya had been duly appointed, but assuming nothing more, we have to deal with two questions: was this a good exercise by the holder of a public religious office of the power vested in him by the usage of the institution to appoint a successor during his lifetime? and secondly, is it now not open to question as having been one of the conditions of a bona fide settlement of doubtful claims effected in the best interests of the institution? It will be convenient to deal with the latter question first, as it is contended that if the answer is in the affirmative it is conclusive. In matters like this, it is important to look at the substance rather than the form, and the first question is whether this was really a compromise of doubtful claims, or an exercise by Tandavaraya of his power of appointment in the 1st defendant's favour with a view of escaping the very serious difficulties with which he would be confronted if called upon to prove his own appointment in a Court of Law at the instance of the 1st defendant. That the 1st defendant's counter-claim by virtue of a prior appointment was of a most unsubstantial character appears from his cross examination on which the Subordinate Judge has commented and may be gathered from his written statement Exhibit E1 in a subsequent suit in which he executed his conduct in contesting the Will of the late Pandarasannadhi as due to bad advice, ill-feeling, and imperfect knowledge of the facts, and tacitly admitted that his own claim to the office under a prior appointment was without foundation. This claim of itself would never have caused Tandavaraya any uneasiness or afforded a ground for compromise, and on the most favourable view its abandonment formed a very small part of the consideration for the compromise. The substance of that compromise was that the 1st defendant was to abstain from putting Tandavaraya to the proof of his own appointment as Pandarasannadhi in consideration of being appointed his successor with immediate enjoyment of part of the Mutt properties. In consideration of a private advantage the first defendant was to resist from challenging as he had been doing till then Tandavaraya's claim to have been duly appointed to a public office of a religious character. The 1st defendant having practically no claim at all to this office and Tandavaraya having a claim which it is clear he would have had great difficulty in proving, they agreed to compromise their differences by dividing the enjoyment of the office on the terms the Tandavaraya was to hold it for life and the 1st defendant after him. It was in fact not a bona fide settlement of doubtful claims at all, but an arrangement of a very different character by which Tandavaraya agreed to exercise a power of appointment incident to the office which he claimed for the purpose of obtaining an advantage for himself. In Girijanund Datta Jha v. Sailajanund Datta Jha (3) which is a case of the compromise of rival claims to succeed to a religious office the sole consideration on either side was the abandonment of a bona fide claim on the other side and it is necessary to consider it further. Much time has been spent on both sides in taking us through a great number of English and Irish cases to show what will and what will not be upheld as the valid exercise of a power, but it is unnecessary to go into them. I find as a fact for the reasons already given that the appointment of the 1st defendant was made by Tandavaraya not a bona fide settlement of rival claims, but in furtherance of his own interests; and that on that ground it was a bad appointment as held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ramalingam Pillai v. Vythilingam Pillai (4). In these circumstances I think it unnecessary to discuss the question how far such compromises can be supported. It is said and truly that this arrangement did not prevent other people from questioning Tandavaraya's right to the office and that the Zemindar of Sivaganga filed Original Suit No. 53 of 1895 in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Madura East contesting the validity of the appointment and claiming the right to appoint as on a vacancy, Exhibit E. The fact that Tandavaraya did not obtain complete security under this arrangement does not make it any the less objectionable. As a matter of fact the zemindar did not prosecute the suit possibly because his right to do so was questioned, Exhibit XXXII. There were not the same objections to a suit by the present 1st defendant as one of the Tambirans of the Mutt, and it was no doubt realized that it was of the first importance to buy off his opposition. Once this was done, opposition soon died down and Tandavaraya enjoyed the office for the rest of his days.

If this be the true nature of the transaction, it was of a highly objectionable character and the Court cannot countenance it even at this distance of time on the ground that it was considered to be for the benefit of the institution in the sense that it put an end to disputes between the rival Thambirans. It has also been contended that the compromise should be supported as a family settlement; as to this I cannot but think that agreements as to filling up a religious office of importance in the eyes of Hindu worshipers raise very different consideration and that the decisions as to family settlements are inapplicable. The question of limitation was not argued in the lower Court, but has been raised before us, and it has been contended that the suit is barred under Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act. The position of the Chinnapattam is analogous to that of an ordinary reversioner with a mere spes successionis dependent on his surviving the Pandarasannadhi who appointed him. Until he succeeds to the office there can be no duty to question his right to succeed and any attempt to do so by a declaratory suit would probably fail. We accordingly modify the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge by declaring that the 1st defendant is not the lawful trustee of the Devasthanams and the endowments and removing him from their management, and by directing the Temporary Subordinate Judge to appoint fresh trustee of the Devasthanams, and by directing that the trustee so appointed be placed in possession. Costs of the plaintiffs in Appeal No. 317 of 1913 will come out of the Devasthanams estate throughout. There will be no order as to costs in Appeal No. 318 of 1913.

NAPIER, J.—These are appeals in respect to two suits tried in the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad. They were brought by two sets of plaintiffs and with the sanction of the Advocate-General. In Appeal No. 317 of 1913 the plaintiffs ask for a declaration that one Nataraja Thambiran the present holder of the office of Pandarasannadhi of the Thiruvannamalai Adhinam is not lawfully entitled to that office and also not entitled to be the trustee of the Anjukovil Devasthanam and the properties appertaining thereto. They, therefore, pray for his removal from these positions and the appointment of a new trustee for the administration of the trust. In Appeal No. 318 of 1913 the plaintiffs confine the relief which they asked for to a declaration and removal from the position of trustee of the Devasthanam and its properties. The suits were tried together in the Subordinate Judge's Court and a third suit, which is unfortunately not before us, was tried with them and evidence taken in all the three suits—a procedure that has given rise to certain difficulties which will be dealt with later on. The position taken up by the defendant Nataraja Thambiran is stated in paragraph 19 of his written statement and is that one Tandavaraya Desikar who was the lawful Pandarasannadhi of the Mutt nominated him as his successor to the Adhinam with appropriate initiation and ceremonies on the 9th July 1894, that the late Pandarasannadhi died on the 16th March 1902 and that he himself succeeded to the leadership and trusteeship of the Devasthanam. He raises other defences also which can be dealt with later on. The plaintiffs do not deny the nomination and initiation of the defendant as Chinnapattam and successor by the late Pandarasannadhi, but plead that it was bad in law for the following reason, namely, that the appointment was not made with sole view to the benefit which would accrue to the Mutt and to the disciples but with the object of getting rid of an opponent who was at the time both setting up a claim to be the lawful Pandarasannadhi and challenging the truth of the appointment and initiation of Tandavaraya himself. A further contention is raised by the plaintiffs that apart from the intention with which the appointment was made, it is illegal in that no valid appointment can be made by compromise of conflicting claims. The Advocate-General who appears for the defendant has contended that as long as the person appointed belonged to the class from whom the Pandarasannadhi is chosen, it is not for the Court to look into the circumstances of his selection. For this extreme proposition, there is no authority and it is clearly negatived by the decision of the Privy Council in Ramalingam Pillai v. Vythillingam Pillai (4). I am satisfied that it is our duty to examine the surrounding circumstances, not for the purpose of ascertaining the motive influencing the appointment, but to see whether the appointment was made with the object and intention of conferring a benefit on the Mutt and the disciples. The admitted facts are as follows:—one Chinna Arumuga Desikar was in the beginning of 1893 Pandarasannadhi of the Mutt. He died on the 23rd May of that year, and Tandavaraya Desikar at once claimed the succession, alleging that he had been initiated by the deceased on the day before his death and that the appointment had been confirmed by a Will made on the same date by the deceased. His claim, in turn, was at once challenged by Nataraja Thambiran on two grounds, (1) that he had himself been appointed, and (2) that the story of the initiation was false and the Will a forgery. Tandavaraya presented the Will for registration on the 23rd May 1893. The registration was opposed by Nataraja charging the forgery and making a further allegation that Tandavaraya had murdered the late Pandarasannadhi. An exhaustive enquiry was held by the Sub-Registrar who found the Will to be a forgery and his decision was confirmed by the District Registrar on the 30th April 1894. On the 9th July 1894 Tandavaraya nominated Nataraja to the post of Chinna-pattam, a position which carried with it the right to succeed to the Pandarasannadhisip, and performed the necessary initiation ceremonies. It is argued by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar that the true inference to be drawn from these facts is that Tandavaraya felt himself in a position of grave danger in that the defendant might at any moment apply to the District Registrar for sanction to prosecute him for forgery and that the arrangement was one by which he bought off opposition to his claim, an opposition which had already acquired a very strong position. The Advocate-General has contended that this could not have been the intention because as well as Nataraja, he had a strong opponent in the Zemindar of Sivaganga who was, of course, not affected by these arrangements and he could not hope to stifle action by the zemindar and in fact did not do so, as the zemindar brought a suit against him in the following year challenging his claim to be lawfully appointed. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar relies on the terms of the agreement (Exhibit F) under which Nataraja was appointed Chinna-pattam with unusual and special rights and privileges. Now Exhibit F is signed by both parties and it recites that Tandavaraya was duly appointed Pandarasannadhi by Arumuga Desikar, the late Pandarasannadhi, and has taken possession of the office and its dignities. It further recites that Nataraja had gone away to Madura and other places on account of ill-feeling but that he had returned in obedience to the order of the Pandarasannadhi and had been appointed Chinna-pattam and received abishegam and now holds that office. It then provides that Tandavaraya is to remain in full possession and enjoyment of the office, and that Nataraja shall, as long as he holds the position of Chinna-pattam, be entitled to the possession of the Matam at Kumbakonam and the Mattam at Mylapore attached to the Thiruvannamalai Adhinam and also to receive all the income of the villages mentioned in the schedule without any interference by the said Tandavaraya and that he shall manage the said Mattams and the charities connected therewith. Tandavaraya is to conduct all the Mattams attached to the said Adhinam other than those transferred to Nataraja without any kind of interference by the said Nataraja. And lastly Tandavaraya covenants not to appoint any one else to the office of Chinna-pattam as he has agreed that Nataraja shall succeed him to the Pandarasannadhisip. Now it must be conceded that this is an unusual arrangement. It is true that Tandavaraya remains Pandarasannadhi, but it is clear on the language of this document that there was an actual division of the temporal rights and possession. The same language is used in the allocation of the properties to each and Tandavaraya reserves no more rights in the alienated properties than Nataraja has in the properties retained, so that it is not merely a case of grant of wide powers of management over certain selected Mutts and properties attached to them. As a matter of fact, Nataraja retired at once to Mylapore and lived there managing the properties, and the Judge has found that he actually allowed some of the Mutt properties to be sold for debts incurred by him. Another somewhat suspicious circumstance is the haste with which this appointment was made. It is, of course, open to the Pandarasannadhi to appoint his successor at any time, but when the appointment is made little more than a year after the Pandarasannadhi succeeds to the office, that circumstance is one to be taken into consideration when the appointment is challenged to have been made with an improper object.

A considerable amount of oral evidence was let in on behalf of the plaintiffs to support their case and several witnesses speak to their own belief and to the rumours current that Tandavaraya was at the time in danger of prosecution. A good deal of it is, in my opinion, inadmissible. But plaintiffs' 6th witness speaks to something definite. He says that Tandavaraya asked him to compromise with Nataraja and stop the prosecution, that he went to Madura for this purpose, met Nataraja and asked him not to prosecute as it was a big matter and the prosecution would be a disgrace to both sides. He says that Nataraja agreed to drop the matter if he was appointed Chinnapattam and an agreement was made under which he would be irremovable and have sufficient properties to maintain his position. As against this evidence there is the fact elicited from him in cross-examination that he did not himself effect the compromise and he admits that he never told any one about this matter. Plaintiffs' 18th witness too claims to have taken part in the preliminary negotiations, but as he was witness to the Will which was attacked as forgery, he is not perhaps a very reliable witness. Defendant's 6th witness makes an admission which is important considering that he was supporting the defendant. He states that Nataraja was disputing the Will as a forgery and that after the refusal to register it he was intending to adopt further proceedings, but that one Ramasam Aiyar brought Nataraja from Madura and settled the disputes between him and Tandavaraya. Nataraja gives evidence himself as defendant's 13th witness. He was in a somewhat difficult position because he could not admit that his claim was false and at the same time he had to try and to minimise the circumstances attending the arrangement. What he does is to throw the whole blame for the position on the Zemindar of Sivaganga and to deny any knowledge of an attempt to obtain sanction against Tandavaraya. He does, however, make one unguarded admission, which is as follows:—"My objections to the registration of the Will were all founded on facts." By the term "facts", he cannot, of course, mean anything else than that the Will was a forgery. That, coupled with his persistence in the witness box in adhering to the story of his own initiation and appointment, gives no room for doubt that if he had not been satisfied with the arrangement made, he would have persisted in his claim to the Pandarasannadhipship in his opposition to the Will as a forgery and even possibly in his charge of murder against Tandavaraya. I think it right to say here that there never was the slightest ground for suspicion of murder, but the attack on the Will was very serious indeed. We are bound to presume that the Registrars applied their minds to the case, and they had come to a conclusion which placed Tandavaraya in a very difficult position. The Will had been found against him in two exhaustive enquiries, in addition to which Nataraja was alleging an appointment in support of which he would doubtless be able to produce some evidence though I agree with the Subordinate Judge in his view that Nataraja's story of appointment is false. Nataraja in his written statement filed in the suit brought by the Zemindar of Sivaganga referred to above has endeavoured to evade responsibility. In that suit (Original Suit No. 53 of 1895 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura East), the zemindar of Sivaganga claimed the right of appointment and asked for the removal both of Tandavaraya and Nataraja. Exhibit E1 is the written statement of Nataraja. He there relies on his appointment as Chinnapattam and states that he yielded to the instigation of the plaintiff (the zemindar) and that owing to his own imperfect knowledge of facts he made certain allegations impeaching the Will, but that when he understood the real facts and the bad motives of his advisers, namely, the plaintiff and his officers, he re-joined the Mutt which he had left under evil advice and in the position of a disciple was duly appointed Chinnapattam. It is to be noted that he says not one word about his own appointment by Arumuga Desikar and admits that he was only a disciple at the time of his appointment by Tandavaraya. These facts and a number of circumstances of less importance have been examined before us by the learned Vakils and the inference sought to be drawn therefrom has been urged at great length and with great force by both sides. In the result I am satisfied that Tandavaraya would not have appointed Nataraja his opponent as his successor, were it not for his desire to secure himself from further opposition. In my opinion he did not appoint him in the true interests of the Mutt. He consented to an arrangement of an unusual character under which he parted with a considerable portion of his temporal rights with an eye solely to his own security, and under pressure of great danger to himself.

It remains to apply the law to this finding on facts. First as to the question of the compromise: admittedly it was one and admittedly the defendant's right to the Pandarasannadhiship owes its birth to that compromise. But is that fact alone sufficient to make the appointment bad? Mr. Krishaswami Aiyar relies strongly on a decision in Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (5). In that case, as appears from the judgment of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, the Court was dealing with a suit in which the claim in the dispute was to one-half share of the puja miras of a certain temple. The puja miras involved certain religious duties and the holder was entitled to some emolument. A compromise was come to, which was found by the learned Judge to amount to an alienation of a portion of a religious office by one of the parties in favour of the other for a pecuniary benefit, and the learned Judge refused to allow the compromise on the ground that it was not a lawful agreement on which a decree could be passed. The proposition he lays down is as follows:—"There can be no lawful compromise made of a dispute in respect of a religious office, the proper performance of the duties of which concerns not merely the parties to the compromise but principally affects the religious trust itself and the Hindu public for whose benefit the religious trust exists." The chief authority relied on for this proposition was the well known case arising out of the dispute between the Rajah of Ramnad and certain Shanars, Rajah M. Bhaskara Sethupathi v. Narayanasamy Gurukul (6). I do not think that this latter case supports the wide proposition laid down by the learned Judge. The view taken by the Judge in that case was that the so-called compromise was a betrayal of rights successfully established in one Court by the person who vindicated them. In another case, Ravi Varma Rajah v. Ramasubramania Pattar (7), the same learned Judge in dealing with a compromise with regard to property the subject of a religious trust and not with regard to the office itself uses language somewhat analogous but I do not think that that case helps us much. Reliance is placed on a case in Mohammad Ibrahim Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan (8), but the point decided there was much narrower, viz, that a dispute as to the right of succession to a mutawalliship could not be settled by arbitration so as to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. The Advocate-General contends that the right to compromise matters of dispute arising in religious and charitable trusts does exist and he relies on a decision of the Privy Council in Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (9), but what was settled there was, however, merely an arrangement made by disputing parties for the due execution of the functions belonging to the office in turns or in some settled order and sequence. The case in Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tambiran (10) is more in point, for there a dispute as to right to appoint between the heads of two different Mutts was compromised by an arrangement under which the persons holding office had their title recognised but the next Chinnapattam was to be selected from the rival Mutt. Another case, Nilakandan v. Fadmanabha (11), is instructive because it went to the Privy Council. In that case disputes arose between certain parties as to the management of a temple in South Malabar which were temporarily set at rest by a compromise in 1845 and again in 1874, but the question was re-agitated 20 years later and it was urged that the compromise was not binding. It is to be noted that although it was attacked on the ground that it created a new right and thereby varied the original trusts of the institution, it was not argued before the Board that the compromise was unlawful as relating to a religious trust [vide Nilakandhen Nambulirapad v. Fadmanabha Revi Varma (12)]. Girijanund Datta Jha v. Sailajanund Datta Jha (3) is a decision directly in point, for in that case a suit was brought on an ekrar executed by the priest of an idol for arrears of maintenance and the defence was raised that the agreement was without lawful consideration as it amounted to a bargaining for the public office of high priest of a public shrine. The Court found that the ekrar was entered into in consequence of attempts made both by the plaintiffs and the defendant to obtain the post of high priest on the death of the last holder of the office and that the dispute concerning this succession was settled by that compromise. The cases on the point were elaborately considered by the Court and the conclusion come to was that there was nothing contrary to public policy in the fact of the settlement of the dispute as to succession by a compromise. And lastly we have two recent decisions of this Court to both of which the learned Chief Justice was a party, in which this question was discussed. They are Arunachellam Chettiar v. Velappa Thambiran (13) and Thiruvambala Desikar v. Chinna Pandaram (14). The result of both these cases may be summed in the language of the Chief Justice in Arunachellam Chettiar v. Velappa Thambiran (13): "The better view appears to be that compromises of suits entered into by trustees of charitable endowments, are not necessarily void." And this doctrine would seem to have been applied both in that suit in which no question of title between disputing claimants was involved, as well as in the latter case in Thiruvambala Desikar v. Chinna Pandaram (14), where the right of a matadhipathi to remove the junior was in question and a compromise decree had been passed recognising the position of the junior. On a consideration of all the authorities, I have come to the conclusion that a trustee of a religious and charitable trust has, in respect of a litigation not affecting the office, the same right of compromise as an ordinary trustee has, and that a compromise even of conflicting claims to an office is not necessarily unlawful or opposed to public policy but must be scrutinized by the Court before which it is pleaded for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is in violation of the trust of the institution, or affects adversely the interests of the religious public. That disposes of the first objection taken by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar.

The next objection is one which arises on the view of the law which I have just stated. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar has urged the broad proposition that where any benefit is reserved by or accrues to a party entitled to make the appointment, the appointment is bad whether it be by compromise or by agreement. He has relied strongly on the analogy of the exercise of the power of appointment by a donee of a power and has quoted a large number of English cases. The Advocate-General, on the contrary, has invited our attention to a number of cases in which a reservation of rights was not held to vitiate the appointment. In my opinion a great deal turns on the question whether the circumstances relied on to impeach the appointment, constitute a motive for the appointment or whether the appointment was made with the intention of securing a benefit. But I do not think it necessary to examine the cases as in my opinion, although the principles applied in these cases may be of some assistance, they have not sufficient bearing to require detailed consideration. The Advocate-General has relied on the principles by which an adoption agreement made by a Hindu widow under which she acquires a distinct benefit is not illegal and asks us to apply that rule. I think the analogy still more remote and I will not deal with the cases. I would adopt the language of the Chief Justice in Arunachellam Chettiar v. Velappa Thambiran (13) in respect of this very question of compromise by a Pandarasannadhi. In that case the position of a Pandarasannadhi as regards alienations had been compared to that of a Hindu widow and the learned Chief Justice in delivering the judgment of the Court said as follows:—"We agree with the observation of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Avergal (15), that it is dangerous to press these analogies too far." In the case of an incumbent of a religious office whose rights and duties are mainly governed by usage, and whose duties extend to a religious public that knows nothing of the arrangements under which he succeeds to the office, I would prefer to confine myself to the very simple test laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramalingam Pillai v. Vythilingam Pillai (4). This decision was on an appeal from our own Court and the question to be determined was whether the appellant was the lawful Dharmakarthha or trustee of the Rammeswaram temple. On the 30th January 1894 the High Court removed one Ramanatha Pandaram from his office and on the same day he appointed the appellant as his successor purporting to make the appointment on a consideration of the fact that the appellant was a man of learning and of good character. The appointment was held to be bad, because Ramanatha Pandaram had already been removed and had, therefore, no power to appoint. But their Lordships further observed as follows:—"Another objection to the appointment of the appellant is that both Courts have found that it was not made bona fide. * * * The Judges of the High Court, referring to the proved facts, say:—'With these facts before us, we cannot say that the Subordinate Judge was not warranted in finding that the appellant's appointment was made by the former Pandaram in furtherance of his own interests and that it was not a bona fide exercise of his power, if any.' This finding of both Courts invalidates the whole appointment. It applies to the headship of the Mutt as well as the office of the Dharmakarthha." In my opinion we have but to apply this language. The object in that case was certainly more grossly apparent than in this case, because the Pandaram had arranged for a personal allowance to himself after his dismissal, but the principle laid down by the Board seems to me to be of general application. On the conclusion that I have arrived at on the facts, viz., that the appointment was not made with the intention of benefiting the institution but really to protect his own position which was in serious danger, I am of opinion that it is one which could not be upheld if attacked in the proper manner and at the proper time.

It remains now to consider certain objections raised by the Advocate-General to our exercise of the power of removing the defendant. The first objection is one of limitation. He contends that the Pandarasannadhiship to which the defendant succeeded in March 1902 was only the taking up of an office which necessarily vested in possession and that the right to succeed to it became vested in 1894, more than six years before the suit. In my opinion this contention cannot succeed. It is admitted that according to the usage of the Mutt, Chinnapattam can be removed for misconduct and so his right of succession is not absolute. Further the position of Chinnapattam is one of greatly inferior sanctity and importance and it might well be that the persons interested would consent to his holding that office, although they were not willing to allow him to become Pandarasannadhi. I am, therefore, of opinion on the application of Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act that the right to sue to remove him from the office of Pandarasannadhi vested in persons entitled to sue on the occasion of his taking that office, although the right to sue to remove him from the office of Chinnapattam vested at the time of the appointment to that office. In this view I do not think it necessary to consider whether the right arises only on the sanction by the Advocate-General.

The next objection raised on behalf of the defendant is that by efflux of time the irregularity of the appointment is cured, and a number of English cases were brought to our notice. In my opinion, this is not a case of irregularity of appointment. It might be that if the qualification of a person appointed fell little short of those required by the usage and the appointment was otherwise unobjectionable and was made in the interests of the institution, the Court would not interfere. But here we have an appointment not made in the interests of the institution and the case is entirely different from those in which the appointment of a minister of religion not belonging to the particular sect of the founder, was upheld after it had existed for a considerable time.

I will now deal with two objections raised by the Advocate-General on procedure which, he claims, stand in the way of our giving effect to the view we take of the agreement and appointment. The first is that there was no issue raised in either of these suits as to the validity of the appointment. That is in fact so. But the allegation of invalidity was distinctly made in both plaints (vide, paragraph 13) and pleaded to in paragraph 9 and further the validity of the subsequent cancellation of the appointment was alleged in the plaint and denied in the written statement in paragraphs 13 and 20 respectively and an issue was framed on this. (Issue No. 16). When these suits came on for trial they were heard with another suit Original Suit No. 19 of 1912 which had been filed some years later. This suit was by a person who claimed the office by virtue of appointment by the Tam-birans. The pleadings in that suit are not before us but the issues are and one of them (No. 4) is "whether the appointment of the defendant made by the late Thandavara was made mala fide and to serve his own purpose and, therefore, invalid." The whole of the evidence relating to the three suits was recorded by consent of parties in Original Suit No. 17, that is, Appeal No. 317 (vide judgment of lower Court page 52), and the Judge finds on the question of the validity of the appointment on issues Nos. 1 and 2 in the suits before us and on issues Nos. 3 to 5 in the other suit. I am satisfied that the matter was treated as in issue in the present suits and that the non-existence of a specific issue at the trial was not considered of any importance there being the issue in the other suit. At the worst it would only be necessary for us to frame the issue formally in these suits and that can, if necessary, be deemed to be done.

The next objection is more serious. It is contended that the Court has no power to remove the defendant in the present suits which are brought under section 92 with the consent of the Advocate-General. The learned Chief Justice has dealt with the history of these suits and I entirely agree with him in holding that it is not open to us to re-consider a decision already given in Appeal No. 317 of 1913. That decision is part of the judgment in this appeal and can only be questioned on appeal to the Privy Council. To the extent, therefore, of the relief claimed in Appeal No. 317 of 1913 to remove the defendant from the headship of the Mutt, the matter is already decided and the suit fails. I entirely agree, however, with the learned Chief Justice that as to the second relief in Appeal No. 317 of 1913 and the whole of the matter in issue in Appeal No. 318 of 1913, we are not prevented by the first decision or the above view from giving effect to our finding. It is our duty to remove a trustee whose appointment is bad and in my opinion the fact that the trusteeship vests ex-officio in the holder of an office which we cannot touch in this suit makes no difference whatsoever. The decrees will be as stated in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

Land revenue in Bengal and Bihar, date of payment of—Arrear, non-payment of, effect of—Sale of estate.

BHIRUKHI OJHA v. RAJBANSI KUER.

In Bengal and Bihar the sum of land revenue due for Chait-Baisakh kist becomes payable on the last day of Baisakh (which ordinarily falls between the 1st and 15th of May), from which date it becomes an "arrear," and if this arrear is not paid by the date fixed by the Board of Revenue as the latest date of payment the estate becomes immediately liable to sale. [p. 640, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Muzafferpur, dated the 30th January 1915.

Sir Ali Imam and Mr. Sharoshi Charan Mitra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay, and Harnandan Sahay (Government Advocate to watch for the Board of Revenue), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is Musammatt Rajbansi Kuer. She holds a 9-annas share in Touzi Nos. 4543. The entire mahal was sold by auction for arrears of Government revenue for the June instalment on the 21st of September 1911 and was purchased by the defendant Bhirukhi Ojha for Rs. 5,750. An appeal was filed to the Commissioner. This appeal was dismissed on the 2nd of April 1912. On the 27th of February 1913 the plaintiff filed the present plaint asking that the sale be set aside on ten grounds as set forth in paragraph 6 of the plaint.

(1). The sale was a fraudulent sale brought about by her co-sharer Rameshar Prasad Singh for whom Bhirukhi Ojha is a mere benamidar.

(2). The account of the arrears as entered in the ledger is wrong.

(3). No notice under sections 6 and 7 was issued.

(4). The notice under section 6 was not properly prepared.

(5). The date of sale was not properly given in the notice.

(6). The name of the mahal is Chako Chapra Gangi Chapra but in the said notice only Chako Chapra was given.

(7). There are six proprietors but the name of one only was given in the notice.

(8). The amount of arrears as entered in the notice was wrong.

(9). The notice under section 7 was not served and was not in proper form.

(10). By reason of this fraud the mahal the fair value of which is Rs. 18,000 has been sold for Rs. 5,750.

Paragraph 7 of the plaint runs as follows:—

"That your petitioner also begs to submit that when the June instalment of 1911 had fallen into arrears, the said mahal ought not to have been sold by auction before the 28th September 1911, and the Revenue Officers had no power, according to the provisions of law, to sell the said mahal before the 28th September 1911. For the above reason also the said sale is entirely against law, null and void and ineffectual."

A written statement was filed and upon the pleadings the following issues were framed:—

1. Is the suit maintainable in its present form?

2. Has the plaintiff any cause of action?

3. Whether defendant No. 2 is a furzidar for defendant No. 1?

Whether defendant No. 2 was party to the fraud? (Defendant No. 1 is Rameshar Prasad Singh. Defendant Nos. 2 is Bhirukhi Ojha).

4. Whether the sale is irregular and illegal and can it be set aside? Whether the price is inadequate?

5. What is the extent of the plaintiff's share in this mahal? Can the plaintiff get his share re-conveyed from defendant No. 2. If so, on what term?

6. Whether the amount of the arrears stated in the notice is correct? Whether the account in the tauzi ledger of the Collector is correct?

The learned Subordinate Judge found that there was no evidence to show that Bhirukhi Ojha was a furzidar for Rameshar Prasad. He found also that notices under sections 6 and 7 had been properly served and were in order: that the plaintiff had failed to prove that there was no arrear of revenue on the date of sale and that the amount shown in the notices as the arrears was correct and that no order could be made ordering the defendant No. 2 to re-convey 9 annas of the mahal to the plaintiff. But upon the ground that the sum due for the kist ending the 7th of June 1911 was not an arrear but a sum to be paid as revenue for the June kist, he held, that under sections 2 and 3 of Act XI of 1859, that sum if not paid on the 7th of June would not become an arrear of revenue until the 1st of July and that the date of payment of that arrear would be the 28th of September 1911. On this reasoning he held that there were no arrears on the 21st of September 1911, the date of the sale, and that, therefore, the sale was ab initio void. He, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree for the recovery of the mahal sold.

We have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge that there is no reliable evidence on the record to show that the defendant No. 2 is farzidar for the defendant No. 1. There is no real attempt to show any connection between them. There is a considerable body of evidence to show that Bhirukhi Ojha has since the sale, been in actual possession of the estate. We have also no hesitation in saying that the plaintiff has entirely failed to prove that the notices under section 6 and section 7 were not served. It is clear that a receipt for these notices was signed by Fauzdar Lal. The learned Subordinate Judge has shown clearly that the evidence given by Fauzdar Lal that he did not receive this notice is entirely false. There is also no reason for supposing that the use of the term Chako Chapra in the notice was not a completely adequate description. In the register D the village is known as Chako Chapra and the omission of the words Gangi Chapra could not mislead any body desirous of bidding at the sale. The only point upon which the plaintiff can succeed is the point taken by the learned Subordinate Judge.

As we understand the framing of the issues the plaintiff was not serious in the suggestion made in paragraph 7 of his plaint. If indeed there was anything in the suggestion that the arrears of revenue the latest date for payment of which has been fixed as the 7th of June, were not really arrears until the 1st of July, every revenue sale held in Bengal and Bihar during the last fifty years would be void. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to us to have fallen into this error that he has regarded the revenue kist as falling due on the 7th of June whereas the fact is that the 7th of June is the latest date of payment for previous arrears. We have been shown papers to prove that the kists in which the revenue of this particular mahal is paid are as follows:—

	Rs.	as.	p.
For Chait Baisakh ...	68	12	0
For Jeth, Asharah Shraban ...	80	6	5
For Asin, Kartik, Aghan ...	34	6	0
For Pus, Magh, Phagun ...	85	15	0

The Chait-Baisakh kist becomes payable on the last day of Baisakh which ordinarily falls between the 1st and 15th of May, and in the year 1911 did fall on the 29th of April. Therefore, the sum due for the Chait-Baisakh kist became an arrear on the 1st of May, and if this arrear was not paid by the date fixed by the Board of Revenue as the latest date of payment, the 7th of June, the estate became immediately liable to sale. But of these facts, there is upon the record no evidence and the question is whether we shall be exercising a wise discretion in allowing the appellant to bring this evidence upon the record at the appellate stage. We feel bound to say that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge was a view which the defendants to the suit could hardly anticipate. There was no indication in the framing of the issues that the case would be fought upon this basis. There was no suggestion in the grounds of appeal taken before the Commissioner that this was the origin of the plaintiff's assertion that the estate was not in arrears at the date of the sale. We feel that for the ends of justice an opportunity must be given to the defendant to bring upon the record, the necessary evidence to show that the kist for payment of which the latest date fixed is the 7th of June is the Chait Baisakh kist and that the sum due thereunder became an arrear of revenue on the last day of Baisakh. We, therefore, remit the record to the learned Subordinate Judge with instructions that he take evidence upon this point and submit the evidence to this Court before the 1st of July. Let the record be sent down at once.

Case sent back.

GOBIND DAS v. BISHAMBHAR DAS.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

May 23, 1917.

Present:—Viscount Haldane, Lord Atkinson,
Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

GOBIND DAS—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

BISHAMBHAR DAS—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Libel—Caste dispute—Panchayat, resolution of, publication of—Privilege, whether destroyed by irregularity in passing resolution—Jurisdiction of caste panchayat, whether subject to control of Civil Courts.

B., the chowdhri or chairman of a caste panchayat, circulated to the other members of the caste a resolution of the panchayat suspending social relations with G.'s family. In an action for libel brought by G. against B. it was contended that G. had no proper notice of the meeting of the panchayat and that in consequence the passing of the resolution was contrary to natural justice, and B. was not privileged in publishing it. It was found that the notice was duly given:

Held, that B.'s privilege was not affected or rebutted by any defect in the notice to G. [p. 646, col. 1.]

To defeat or rebut privilege, the law does not recognise anything short of actual or express malice in the publication of the matter which is charged to be libellous. [p. 645, col. 1.]

[The question of the power of the Civil Courts to control the jurisdiction of caste bodies purporting to excommunicate or censure caste offenders discussed but not decided.]

Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad, High Court (Tudball and Rafique, JJ.), dated March 16th, 1914, reported as 23 Ind. Cas. 301, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Benares.

FACTS of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Sir H. Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dube, for the Appellant, submitted that the occasion was not privileged because the resolution was not passed regularly but contrary to natural justice, there being a neglect of the requirement that the accused should be present or be given an opportunity of being present. Alternatively, there is evidence of malice. It is true the defendant was an agent of the panchayat, but if the principal is not privileged then the agent is not privileged.

Plaintiff had no notice of the meeting of the panchayat. At the meeting the members present knew that he was at Calcutta. It is made a charge against him that he had not signed a certain chittha; he never had the chance of signing it. It is also charged that he did not attend the panchayat.

How could he when he was at Calcutta and had no notice?

[LORD ATKINSON referred to Chamberlain v. Boyd].

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I should like an authority for the proposition that the Court has power to restrain a panchayat from excluding a man from caste. My difficulty is that what was said was true.]

I concede that a domestic tribunal may outcaste a man, and may declare its decision to the members of the caste: Odgers' Law of Libel and Slander, 5th edition, page 287 (Chapter 10, Qualified Privilege), but I submit that if the outcasting itself is invalid, the declaration is not privileged.

Caste meetings must observe the requirements of natural justice: Krishnasami Chetti v. Virasami Chetti (2). When this was not done a declaration that a man was outcasted was held to be illegal, and he was given damages for libel: Vallabha v. Madusudanan (3).

It would have been a complete answer in the latter case to say that the man was in fact outcasted; but it was decided that defendant could not rely upon that fact, because the outcasting was contrary to natural justice. That case was accepted as an authority in Keshavlal v. Bai Girja (4), where it was laid down that the right to outcaste must be properly exercised. That case recognises that if the decision to outcaste is improperly obtained, a statement of the outcasting is actionable.

The rules of natural justice in these matters are summarised in Pollock on Torts, page 125

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Is not the right of the Court to interfere as to voluntary associations limited to cases where a right of property is involved?]

Under the conditions which prevail in India, a man has such a right in the maintenance of his caste that the Court will take cognisance of the matter though no question of property is directly involved: Cuopusawmi Chetty v. Doraisawmy Chetty (5), Jagannath

GOBIND DAS v. BISHAMBHAR DAS.

Churn v. Akali Dassia (6), Advocate-General, Bombay v. David Haim Devaker (7), Appaya v. Padappa (8), Ram Kant v. Ram Lochum (9).

The Courts in India regard the caste interest as of so great value that they specially protect it; and these cases show that they will intervene on behalf of those expelled from caste on grounds contrary to natural justice.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE asked Mr. Dunne whether he justified.]

[Mr. Dunne.—Their case throughout was that the panchayat was a bogus one; that was the issue. Both Courts have held that it was not.]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It would have been much better if the English practice had been followed: innuendo, that plaintiff had been outcasted: plea of justification.]

The words of the resolution suggested that plaintiff had refused to accept a reasonable opportunity to appear and clear up his position.

[LORD ATKINSON.—You are driven to say that such a publication would be untrue unless the expulsion were legal and valid.]

I present the case on the ground that the panchayat have no right to pronounce a decision contrary to natural justice. The issue as to notice the High Court has found against me. I submit the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the notice was not sufficient, and also that there was malice on the defendant's part in procuring the passing of the resolution.

The libel is a communication to the pachhain tar telling them to have no dealings with plaintiff. It is defamatory and actionable. The defence may be privilege, but that can only be if they have acted properly; the statement was not made honestly, in the sense that the plaintiff had no opportunity of appearing.

Mr. Dube, followed: Both the Courts below have found the statements are defamatory. There is no analogy between a voluntary association, like a club, and a caste. Outcasting in India is far more than turning a man out of a club: many of the man's rights are affected by it. Hence to say a man is an outcaste is per se defamatory.

Whether there was privilege depends on two things:

(1) Had the panchayat jurisdiction?

(2) If they had, did they exercise it according to the rules of natural justice?

As far back as 1848 suits were entertained for re-instatement to caste. In that year it was decided in express terms that a Muhammadan who had been improperly expelled should be restored to caste: Sonaullah Khan's case (10).

This was followed in 1859 in the case of a Hindu Brahman, the acts charged against whom were not such as to justify expulsion. The Court went into the merits and held the man was entitled to re-instatement: Ram Kant v. Ram Lochum (9).

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Was the question of jurisdiction raised? No one seems to have thought of it.]

[MR. AMEER ALI.—Was the suit here brought on those lines?]

No: It has been the custom in India to sue for defamation.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—You have some authority for saying that the Courts in India have dealt with cases on these lines: but how can the Courts here go into questions of this kind?]

The question is whether the panches had jurisdiction. The High Court held they had. I contend they had not.

[Mr. Dunne.—This issue of jurisdiction has never been raised before.]

It was, because it was raised that the question of sea voyage was gone into. The Courts should have framed an issue whether the ground alleged was one for which a man could be outcasted.

[LORD ATKINSON.—To say the alleged cause was no adequate cause is making us a Court of Appeal.]

[Mr. Dunne.—It has never been suggested that the panchayat was not a perfectly proper tribunal to decide the point.]

GOBIND DAS V. BISHAMBHAR DAS.

The Civil Courts ought to consider whether what a member did involves loss of caste. You have to decide on evidence what the rules of the caste are: Venkatachalapati v. Subbarayadu (11).

JUDGMENT.

Mr. AMEER ALI.—This appeal arises out of an action for libel brought by the plaintiff in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares, where the parties reside and carry on business. Both belong to the Agarwala Vaishya caste of Hindus, and both appear to occupy an influential position in their community.

The Agarwalas of Benares are divided into two tarsor sections, one called the purbia or "Eastern," the other pachhain or "Western;" but in doctrinal matters and caste observances there seems to be no difference between them. The inter-communal government of each section is vested in a panchayat composed of the general body of its members, which, so far as appears on the record, has the authority to enforce the due observance of the caste rules. In this connection it should be mentioned that there are numbers of Agarwalas in the neighbouring towns of Mirzapore and Chunar with whom the Benares Agarwalas maintain close social relations.

The proceedings in this case show that many of the Agarwalas of Benares take a much stricter view of the doctrines of their religion than most of their fellow-castemen, especially in Western India; and in no respect is the difference more pronounced than on the question of a sea voyage undertaken by a Hindu. Whilst other Hindus, including Agarwalas, hold that a purification ceremony technically called prayaschitta absolves the sin incurred by a voyage across the seas, the Benares Agarwala holds firmly to the doctrine that the taint the offender contracts is beyond absolution. In recent years, however, a strong body of public opinion has been growing up which considers this extreme view to be not only illiberal and opposed to the spirit of the times, but also as unwarranted by the Shastras. The plaintiff seems to be the protagonist of this school of thought. The controversy between what may be called for the purposes of this judgment the orthodox section and the comparatively smaller body of reformers assumed an acute character with the return to India in May 1910 of one Babu Laksmi Chand, also an Agarwala belonging to the "Western" section. He appears to have been sent to England as a Government scholar, and to have had in this country a meritorious career. On his arrival, however, at home he was promptly put out of the caste by the panchayat of his section. His academical distinctions in England were appreciated by the advanced and liberal-minded people of his community, who received him with marks of esteem and respect; and after he had gone through the prayaschitta ceremony they gave a dinner in his honour, at which several of the younger members of the plaintiff's family are said to have been present. This seems to have offended the religious feelings of the orthodox; a chittha, or "declaration of faith," was drawn up, it is said, at the instance of the defendant (whose position in the pachayat will be explained later on) and circulated for signature among the members of the caste. It is alleged by the defence, but denied by the plaintiff, that this document was presented to him, and that he declined to attach his name to it. On his side, he issued to his caste-people and others a public appeal, in which he pleaded for toleration and a more liberal interpretation of the religious doctrines of the sect. In this leaflet he also gave expression to certain strictures on other members of the caste, apparently to show the inconsistency of their attitude towards moral delinquency. This was regarded by a majority of the caste-people as implying a reflection on them, and they decided on holding a meeting of the panchayat to consider the matter in relation to the plaintiff and his brother Bhagwan Das. The meeting was accordingly held on the 19th June 1910; whether it was convened in accordance with the rules of the panchayat, and whether plaintiff had notice of the meeting will be discussed shortly. The sitting of the panchayat is said to have lasted from eight in the evening until next morning; so the debate must have been prolonged, and it may fairly be presumed that persons interested in the proceedings had ample opportunity to put in an appearance. Finally, as the plaintiff was in Calcutta and could not attend, and his brother Bhagwan Das did not or would not do so, the panchayat passed a resolution, the publication of which forms the libel charged against the defendant in this action.

The resolution is in these terms:—

"It was settled by the 'panches' that since B. Gobind Das and B. Bhagwan Das publicly circulated among the 'bradris,' and the non-'bradris' a pamphlet about the 'bradri' against the practices of the 'bradri' and did not attend the 'panchayat' on being called to do so, these facts show that these gentlemen circulated the pamphlet simply to disgrace the 'bradri,' and their not signing the 'chuttha' shows that their views are against the 'panchayat'; therefore, it is ordered that until B. Gobind Das and B. Bhagwan Das clear themselves, the family of B. Madho Das be 'baratao-bund.'"

In the plaint the order recorded by the defendant is given more briefly. Whether the whole resolution or only the substance as given in the plaint was communicated, the kernel of the publication was the decision to suspend social relations with the plaintiff. The communication was made by the defendant Bishmabhar Das in his capacity of choudhri or chairman of the purbia panchayat to the 'Western' section, who were, it is not disputed, interested in the result of the proceedings, and to other members of the caste in Benares, Mirzapore and Chunar. The plaintiff on his return from Calcutta sent a registered letter to the defendant asking for particulars regarding the resolution and the facts on which it purported to be based. This letter was submitted to a smaller gathering of the community called a baithak, which apparently deals with minor matters affecting the caste; and it was decided to give no reply.

On the 24th August 1910 the plaintiff brought the present suit. The main allegations on which the action is based are that the meeting of the panchayat at which the resolution was adopted was not held in "good faith;" that it was composed of defendant's friends, "who were under his influence," and in effect it was a sham meeting; that no opportunity was given to him "to get up a defence;" and that in sending the resolution to the choudhri of the pachhain section and the caste-people generally the defendant was actuated by malice and ill-will. The plaintiff further alleged that by this act of the defendant, which virtually declares him to be an "outcaste," he has been disgraced and humiliated in the eyes of the members of the caste as well as the public at large and prejudicially affected in his religious and communal rights and that he has also suffered mentally; and he claimed Rs. 11,000 as damages for the injury caused to him.

The defendant joined issue on all the material allegations; he alleged that the meeting was regularly held, that the proceedings were bona fide, that due notice in accordance with the rules of the panchayat was given to the plaintiff and the other members of his family; he further pleaded privilege, alleging that in sending a copy of the resolution to the pachhain panchayat and others he acted in discharge of his duty; and he denied that his action was the outcome of malice or ill-will.

The Subordinate Judge held that a meeting of the panchayat was in fact held on the 19th June 1910 and that the defendant was "as much liable for the resolution passed at that meeting as any other member" of the panchayat. He held further that the conduct of the defendant (in publishing the resolution) was not privileged, inasmuch as "no notice of the meeting was given to the plaintiff, nor was he told with what offence he was charged. The defendant, therefore, has done an act which constitutes malicious defamation of the plaintiff." In another part of his judgment he says as follows:—

"It was the duty of the choudhri to publish the resolution complained of, and there is no malice in such publication. The legal malice consisted in not giving opportunity to the plaintiff to defend himself, and in passing that order behind his back.

GOBIND DAS v. BISHAMBHAR DAS.

The publication of the order cannot be called malicious."

Their Lordships have referred to these findings of the Trial Judge, as they form the sheet-anchor of the plaintiff's case on this appeal.

Proceeding on these grounds, and after an elaborate exposition of the Hindu doctrines relating to the lawfulness of sea voyages, he made a decree in favour of the plaintiff, awarding him a small sum as damages, as he considered he had merely a sentimental cause of action.

The defendant appealed to the High Court of Allahabad, which reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the action, holding that the communication made by the defendant was privileged, and that there was no evidence of express malice.

On the present appeal, which is by the plaintiff to His Majesty in Council, the arguments have travelled over a rather wide area. In their Lordships' opinion, however, upon the facts proved or admitted in the case, the only points for determination are those on which the High Court proceeded, namely, whether the occasion on which the communication was made by the defendant to the chowdhri of the pachhain section and members of the caste interested in the matter was privileged; and if it was, whether he has forfeited it by reason of the fact that in making the communication he was actuated by what is called in law express malice. The onus of establishing this fact that his conduct was the outcome of some improper motive or private spite rests on the plaintiff.

The principles relating to both these questions are well settled and require no examination. Their Lordships need only refer to Toogood v. Spyring (12), in which Baron Parke enunciated the rule as to privilege which has been accepted in subsequent cases as furnishing the guiding principle on the subject; and to the case of the London Association for the Protection of Trade v. Greenlands Limited (13) and the recent case of Adams v. Ward in the House of Lords, not yet reported.

The allegation of the plaintiff that the meeting at which the resolution was passed was not a bona fide meeting of the panchayat has been clearly disproved; the High Court has expressly found that the panchayat was regularly convened, and that the proceedings were in conformity with its rules, and there is nothing in the Subordinate Judge's judgment to suggest or support a contrary view. The defendant, it is proved, is one of the two chowdhris of the panchayat. Their Lordships gather that he is the principal chowdhri; anyhow, it is his duty to give effect to the decisions of the panchayat, and to communicate the result of its proceedings to parties interested in the same. Along with the general body of the caste, the pachhain section was interested in the decision of the purbia panchayat as it might seriously affect their own attitude with regard to the controversy. The resolution suspends provisionally social relations of the caste-people with the plaintiff and his family. The defendant denies that this amounts to "outcasting" the plaintiff; but assuming that it conveys the innuendo he charges, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the defendant acted in discharge of the duty imposed on him in making the communication to the chowdhri of the other section, and to the caste-people generally, and that the occasion was privileged.

The plaintiff's case, both in his plaint and on the evidence, was that the action of the defendant was the outcome of private spite. Again, the High Court has found that the defendant acted in good faith in the execution of his duty, and that it was not shown that he was "actuated by ill-will or ulterior or improper motive," nor does the Subordinate Judge hold the contrary. The Trial Judge inferred what he calls "legal malice" from the failure of the defendant to give a sufficient personal notice to the plaintiff. Their Lordships do not understand what the learned Judge means by legal malice. To defeat or rebut privilege, the law does not recognise anything short of actual or express malice in the publication of the matter which is charged to be libellous. They find no ground for supposing there was any duty imposed on the defendant beyond properly and duly giving effect to the rules of the panchayat; the inference of "legal" malice from his not doing something more seems to their Lordships quite unwarranted.

But it has been contended that the absence of proper notice to enable the plaintiff to attend the meeting and exculpate himself, being contrary to the principles of natural justice, vitiates the whole proceeding and affects the bona fides of the defendant's action. This contention seems to confuse two distinct considerations. Whatever may be the effect of the absence of such a notice with regard to the adjudication of the matter, unless it can be shown that the defendant was bound to examine into the regularity and correctness of the panchayat's decision before issuing a copy of the resolution to parties interested in the question, it would be absurd to say that the privilege is affected or rebutted by want of notice.

It is clear, however, that a notice in accordance with the rules and practice of the panchayat was given in fact to the plaintiff's family, and at the family residence standing in the panchayat register. He no doubt was absent in Calcutta, but the question that was to be debated affected all the members of the family, and any one of them could have attended, if not to answer the charge, at least to ask for an adjournment.

The finding of the Subordinate Judge on this point is distinct. He says:—

"The defendant gave notice to the plaintiff in the usual manner, namely, by sending the barber to the kothu house in the city. It is not denied that the barber gave notice of the meeting to the plaintiff's gumashta Debi Parsad. For all ordinary panchayat purposes such notice would have been enough. No notice ever was given by the plaintiff to the defendant that the four brothers are separated, and that in the panchayat register, instead of one name, four names should be entered, and that in future all notices should be sent to the different residential houses of the plaintiff and his brothers, and not to their joint house in the city."

Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal fails; they will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that it should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed,

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 4, 15—Arbitration and award—Arbitrator giving evidence before his colleagues, effect of—Majority award, validity of—Party deliberately absenting himself—Misconduct of arbitrators.

The mere fact that one of three arbitrators gave evidence before the others, does not constitute misconduct on the part of the arbitrators so as to vitiate their award. [p. 647, col. 1.]

A majority award by the arbitrators is not bad, merely because the reference to arbitration did not provide that the opinion of the majority should prevail, where the application to Court for reference contained a provision to that effect. [p. 647, col. 2.]

Where one of the parties to an arbitration deliberately absents himself from the hearing, the award concluded on the hearing of the arbitration in his absence is not bad. [p. 647, col. 2.]

Civil Rule against the order of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Krishnagar, dated the 17th August 1916.

JUDGMENT.

BEACHCROFT, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the objection to the award of the arbitrators should not be upheld and the order of the Munsif confirming it set aside; or why such other order should not be passed as to this Court may seem fit and proper. The petitioner is the defendant in a suit which was pending before the Munsif of Krishnagar. An application was made to the Munsif to appoint three gentlemen as arbitrators. One of these gentlemen Jogendra Nath Bhattacharjee was a witness for the plaintiff. Another of them Lakhi Kanta Dey was a witness for the defendant. Both of them had appeared in Court. The third arbitrator nominated was Gokul Chandra Bando-padhyā. During the course of the arbitration Jogendra Nath Bhattacharjee gave his evidence before the other arbitrators. The arbitration was not finished on that day and it was postponed till the next day, when the petitioner put in an application before the arbitrators objecting to their going on with the arbitration and saying that he would not put any evidence before them. Two of the arbitrators, namely, Jogendra Nath Bhattacharjee and Gokul Chandra Bandopadhyaya made an award in favour of the plaintiff. The third arbitrator Lakhi Kant Dey made an award in favour of the defendant. An application was made to the Munsif to set aside the award of the majority of the arbitrators but the application was rejected.

The first point taken before us is that there was misconduct on the part of the arbitrators in that Jogendra Nath Bhattacharjee gave evidence and the argument is put as high as this, that the mere fact of giving evidence constitutes misconduct. We are not told what the nature of that evidence was. For ought we know it may have been of a purely formal character. It is argued that the arbitrator is on the same footing as a Judge, who cannot give evidence in a case before himself. As regards the capacity of a Judge to give evidence in a case before himself there have been many decisions by the Courts, and the view has been taken that a Judge is a competent witness where his evidence has to be submitted to the independent judgment of other persons who are sitting with himself to try the case; such as a Jury or Assessors. But it seems to me that the considerations, which apply to the case of a Judge, are beside the point in the present case. It is conceded that the arbitrator would have been guilty of still greater misconduct if he had concealed facts which were within his knowledge, and obviously it would be so, because in that case his award might be based on knowledge of his own in which his fellow-arbitrators did not share. But in the present case, the parties knowingly appointed two gentlemen as arbitrators who were witnesses in the case; and if they with that knowledge appointed the arbitrators, it appears to me to be idle for the defendant now to suggest that the arbitrator should not have acted as such because he had knowledge of the facts of the case, or should not have placed his knowledge at the disposal of his fellow-arbitrators. The petition shows that he was examined at the instance of the party.

The second ground taken is that the reference to arbitration did not provide that the opinion of the majority should prevail and, therefore, the award is bad. The reference, it is true, does not in so many words provide for this, but the application for reference to arbitration contained a provision that the opinion of the majority should prevail. It is argued that in spite of that the award is bad in the absence of such provision in the reference itself. It seems to me that there is no substance in this ground. The authority of the Court to make a reference to arbitration depends upon the application of the parties. If the Court had made an order that there must be unanimity in the award, it is conceded that the reference would have been bad because it went beyond the intention of the parties. It is conceded that the only order which the Court could make in accordance with the intention of the parties on the point was that the award should follow the opinion of the majority. It seems to me that we ought not to give effect to the argument that because the Court did not in fact make the only order which it could have made, the award must be set aside although it is made in accordance with the agreement of the parties.

The third point taken is that the award is bad because it was concluded in the absence of the defendant. I have already stated that an application was made to the arbitrators on the second day of the hearing stating that the defendant withdrew from the arbitration and would not call any witness. No authority has been shown to us to support the suggestion that a party to an arbitration can at will retire from the arbitration. Reference was made to some observations of Mr. Justice Mahmood in the case of Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (1). Those observations have no application to the present case. Here the defendant deliberately absented himself from the hearing. To my mind on the attitude taken by the defendant the arbitrators were perfectly justified in continuing the hearing and giving their award. For these reasons I consider that this Rule should be discharged

—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

BETHORAM SAIKIA AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 116—Estoppel—Mortgage—Redemption—Mortgagee in possession, whether estopped from denying right of purchaser of mortgaged property to redeem

Property belonging to a lunatic was usufructually mortgaged by his brother, who was his guardian, to the defendant. On the death of the lunatic the property was sold by the brother to the plaintiff, who thereupon brought a suit for redemption of the mortgage against the defendant:

Held, that section 116 of the Evidence Act did not estop the defendant, who was placed in possession of the land as a mortgagee, from requiring the plaintiff to make out his title to redeem the mortgaged property by virtue of his purchase. [p. 649, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Assam Valley District, dated the 31st May 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, Jorhat, dated the 27th November 1913.

FACTS of the case are briefly as follows:—

One Brojonath as guardian of Kaliprosad, who it is alleged was a lunatic, executed an usufructuary mortgage of Kaliprosad's property against the defendant-appellant. Kaliprosad died leaving sons and daughters, and after his death, Brajonath sold the mortgaged property together with the equity of redemption to the present plaintiff, and the plaintiff as purchaser of the equity of redemption instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to redeem the mortgage. The case for the defence was that there was no valid legal mortgage, that Brojonath was no heir to Kaliprosad, and hence he could not confer any title on his vendor (the plaintiff), that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem the mortgage, that the mortgage being a void transaction the defendant-appellant had acquired by virtue of his possession for more than 12 years a title by adverse possession. The Munsif gave a decree for redemption, and on appeal, the lower Appellate Court affirmed the decision of the first Court by a judgment which was very short and abrupt and which did not decide all the points necessary for the decision of the appeal. Hence this second appeal by the defendant.

The judgment of the lower Appellate Court was as follows:—

"This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for redemption. The plaintiff's case was that the land in suit belonged to one Kaliprosad who was a lunatic; that the latter's guardian Brojonath mortgaged the land to defendant No. 1 for a sum of Rs. 400 by a registered deed of mortgage (Exhibit 4); that defendant No. 1 is still in possession as mortgagee, and that after Kaliprasad's death the land passed to his brother the aforesaid Brojonath, who sold the equity of redemption to the plaintiff.

The defendant filed an evasive written statement in which he took up a number of technical objections. The lower Court held that these were without any substance and gave a decree.

The point for determination is whether the suit has been rightly decreed. In my opinion the answer to this is in the affirmative. The main point involved is whether the appellant having accepted the mortgage is entitled to raise the plea that Brojonath had no right to mortgage the land. In my opinion he cannot do so.

Section 116 of the Evidence Act lays down that no person, who comes upon any immovable property by the license of the person in possession thereof, shall be permitted to deny that such person had a title to such possession at the time when such license was given.

Here the mortgagee came upon the land by license of the mortgagor and he cannot now be heard to deny the title of the mortgagor.

The same principle is enacted in section 117 of the Evidence Act. I hold, therefore, that the suit has been rightly decreed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs."

DENIBESWAR SARMA BARA THAKUR v. BETHORAM SAIKIA.

Babu Hiralal Sanyal (with him Babu Narendra Kumar Basu), for the Appellant.—The learned Judge holds that the decree of the primary Court should be affirmed but he does not clearly state his reasons for so holding. He has neither entered into the details of the case, nor has he given any reason for his decision on the issues he has considered. He ought to have decided all the issues necessary for the decision of the appeal and assigned some reasons for his decision, and under Order XLI, rule 31, of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 he is bound to do so. The learned Judge says that under section 116 of the Evidence Act the defendant is estopped from questioning the title of his mortgagor. But the learned Judge has overlooked the fact that the defendant is not questioning the title of his mortgagor. He is disputing the title of the plaintiff who has derived his title from Brojonath, who, the defendant says, had no right or authority to confer any title on the plaintiff, inasmuch as Brojonath was not the heir or legal representative of Kaliprosad. But the learned Judge has not at all touched the question of the validity of title of the plaintiff, although he should have done so.

Then again the appellant also contended in the lower Courts that he was entitled to add to his mortgage money the sum of money he had spent in the shape of payment of Government revenue and other public demands. But the learned Judge is silent on that point also. On the whole the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is very unsatisfactory and it has been given in contravention of the provisions of Order XLI, rule 31, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Satindra Nath Mukerjee (with him Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherji), for the Respondents.—The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is a judgment of affirmance and the learned Judge has considered that the decision of the primary Court should be upheld for reasons stated in the judgment of the Munsif. So the defendant has not in any way been prejudiced by the fact that the learned Judge has not assigned any reason for his decision. He considers that the reasons set forth in the judgment of the Munsif are sufficient, and having accepted them he dispensed with the repetition of these reasons in his judgment. It is only in a judgment of reversal that it is necessary for the Judge to state the reasons for his decision, but in affirming the judgment of the lower Court the Appellate Court may adopt the reasons set forth in its judgment as sufficient, and need not always repeat them. I submit that the objections taken by the defendant are frivolous, and the lower Appellate Court is quite right in holding that the defendant is estopped from taking such objections.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we are of opinion that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is not in accordance with law. In stating the point for determination the learned District Judge remarked that it was whether the suit had been rightly decreed and gave his opinion that the answer to this was in the affirmative. He then deals with the question of estoppel under section 116 of the Evidence Act, which does not arise in the way in which he has dealt with it. The issues raised in the first Court were quite explicit and showed what the real points at issue between the parties were. Section 116 of the Evidence Act would have no application to the point whether the plaintiff has made out his title to redeem this land by virtue of his purchase from Brojonath. The other points have not been touched by the learned District Judge, first, whether the mortgage was valid and, if not, what would be the rights of the parties; secondly, whether Kaliprosad was a lunatic and Brojonath could act as his guardian, and thirdly, whether Brojonath was the brother and the heir of Kaliprosad or not. There admittedly were other points raised by the appellant into which the Court of First Instance also did not go.

We think that the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the appeal re-heard, the whole matter being open to the Judge who hears the appeal. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.

VASUDEVA AIYAR—RESPONDENT.

Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863), ss. 7, 8, 9, 10, 14—Religious Endowments—Appointment of member of Committee—Appointment by Civil Court, whether administrative or judicial act—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—High Court, revisional powers of, extent of—"Case," meaning of.

Section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, does not appear to empower a Civil Court to direct the remaining members of a Committee appointed under that Act, when they have failed to hold an election for the choice of a new member, to hold such an election. It can direct them to fill up the vacancy, but such filling up is then their own act. [p. 654, cols. 1 & 2.]

A proceeding of the Civil Court under this section is a judicial and not merely an administrative or ministerial act. In such matters the Civil Court exercises its powers as a Court of Law, not merely as a persona designata whose determinations are not to be treated as judgments of a legal Tribunal. [p. 653, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure enables the High Court, in a case in which no appeal lies, to call for the record and to pass such an order in the case as the Court may think fit. The section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it, it is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which jurisdiction is not involved. [p. 652, col. 2; p. 653, col. 1.]

The word "case" is not defined in the Code. It cannot be confined to litigation in which there is a plaintiff who seeks to obtain a particular relief against a defendant before the Court, and includes an ex parte application praying that persons in the position of trustees or officials should perform their trust or discharge their judicial duties. It includes, therefore, proceedings under section 10 of Act XX of 1863. [p. 653, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the High Court of Madras, reversing that of the District Judge, Tanjore.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and J. H. C. Sproule, for the Appellant.—The whole scheme of Act XX of 1863 is that the persons interested in a religious endowment should have, in the first place at all events, the right to elect when there is a vacancy in the Managing Committee. Section 10 is imperative; the new member "shall be elected." I submit the District Judge has power to make the Committee hold an election to do what they ought to have done.

Secondly, I submit that the District Judge's order was not a judicial proceeding and hence was not triable in revision by the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code: Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (1).

This is not a "case" which has been "decided" within the meaning of section 115. "Case" means "suit" or proceeding in a suit: Subbier v. Abloy Naidu (2).

Mr. Sproule, followed:—The first order of the District Judge was merely a direction to "fill up" the vacancy. There is no reason why the Committee should not hold an election first and co-opt in accordance with it; it is they who "fill up" the vacancy.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal from a judgment and order of the High Court of Madras, dated the 23rd September 1913, setting aside an order of the District Judge of Tanjore, dated the 19th July 1913, by which the appellant was appointed a life member of the Devasthanam (Temple) Committee of Negapatam. This order of the District Judge purports to have been made, in the events which had happened, in exercise of the powers conferred upon him by section 10 of Act XX of 1863, The Bengal and Madras Native Religious Endowments Act.

That section runs as follows:—

"Whenever any vacancy shall occur among the members of a Committee appointed as above, a new member shall be elected to fill the vacancy by the persons interested as above provided. The remaining members of the Committee shall, as soon as possible, give public notice of such vacancy, and shall fix a day, which shall not be later than three months from the date of such vacancy, for an election of a new member by the persons interested as above provided, under rules for elections which shall be framed by the Local Government, and whoever shall be then elected, under the said rules, shall be a member of the Committee to fill such vacancy. If any vacancy as aforesaid shall not be filled up by such election as aforesaid within three months after it has occurred, the Civil Court, on the application of any person whatever, may appoint a person to fill the vacancy, or may order that the vacancy be forthwith filled up by the remaining members of the Committee, with which order it shall then be the duty of such remaining members to comply, and if this order be not complied with, the Civil Court may appoint a member to fill the said vacancy."

By the second section the words "Civil Court" and "Court" are defined to mean "the Principal Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction in the district in which the mosque, temple, or religious establishment is situate, relating to which, or to the endowment whereof, any suit shall be instituted or application made under the provisions of this Act." It would appear that, if the endowments of the temple be situate in districts other than that in which the temple or religious establishment is itself situated, different Courts may in relation to it and its affairs be Civil Courts within the meaning of this definition. Moreover, it is to the Civil Court and not to an individual Judge who may preside in, or constitute the Civil Court that jurisdiction is given.

A vacancy occurred in the above-mentioned Committee by the death, on the 3rd May 1912, of the Hon'ble Dewan Bahadur R. Raghunatha Rao, C. S. I. The Committee did not hold any election of a member to fill this vacancy. On the contrary, they on the 20th June 1912 directed their managing member to request the then District Judge of Tanjore, Mr. A. F. G. Moscardi, to nominate, in exercise of the powers conferred upon him by the above-mentioned section, a person to serve upon the Committee. That request was duly made by the managing member by letter addressed to the District Judge on the 16th July following.

The District Judge, having considered this letter, made an order on the 1st October 1912, requesting the managing member to report "if there was any reason why the Court should not order that the vacancy should be filled up by election, as provided in section 10 of the Act." It is clear from this letter that the District Judge considered he had under the Statute jurisdiction to order the Committee to hold an election of a member in order to fill the vacancy; and though an order which he subsequently made upon the 6th January 1913, is very guarded in its terms it has been assumed that he meant to exercise this jurisdiction.

On the 21st October 1912, the managing member replied to the District Judge's communication of the 1st October 1912, forwarding a copy of a resolution passed by the Committee in the previous June to the effect that they would not hold an election, and renewing the request to the Judge to nominate a member. On the 2nd January 1913, the present respondent, in the character of a person interested, filed a petition in the District Court praying the Court to fill up the vacancy in the Committee by nomination, on the ground that the list of voters was stale, and that delay would occur in preparing a new list. The same District Judge, Mr. Moscardi, made on this petition the order already referred to of the 6th January 1913. On the face of the order it is set forth that it was argued—"that the intention of the Legislature in section 10 of the Act was clearly that such vacancies should be filled by the Committee by election, and only in the last resort by the Court."

It is also pointed out that—"the Committee had a voters' list drawn up so recently as 1909; that there was no reason why an election should not be held in this case... ..and no.....reason was urged why the provisions of section 10 of the Act should not govern this case."

The last paragraph of the order runs thus:—

"It is clear to me that it is the duty of the Committee to fill up the vacancy by election, and that there is no obstacle preventing them from doing so. I, therefore, order that the vacancy be forthwith filled up by the remaining members of the Committee. Time, three months."

BALAKRISHNA UDAYAR V. VASUDEVA AIYAR.

It will be observed that it is not stated explicitly in this order by what process the Committee are to fill up the vacancy, whether by election or by nomination or co-option. The members of the Committee, however, owing possibly to the matters already referred to set forth on the face of the order, came to the conclusion that by it they were directed to hold an election which, on the 24th March 1913, they accordingly did. The appellant was the only candidate; 1,745 votes were recorded for him. The Committee thereupon declared him duly elected and reported the result to the District Court.

About this time a new Judge, Mr. C. G. Spencer, was appointed to the District of Tanjore, and during the months of April and June certain applications were made to him with which it is quite unnecessary to deal.

Four petitions were then presented to the District Court, one bearing date the 23rd June 1913 by the present appellant, praying that it might be declared that his election was valid, and that he might be permitted to perform his duties; one of the same date by the present respondent, alleging that the election was void, and praying that the Court might, by its own nomination, fill the vacancy, and two bearing the respective dates of the 17th May 1913 and 18th July 1913, by one Dakshinamoorthi Pillai, praying that the election might be declared void for several reasons, including amongst others the alleged defective nature of the voters' lists.

On the 19th July 1913 the District Judge, Mr. C. G. Spencer, dealt by one order of that date with the matters of these four petitions, and decided that the election of the present appellant was regular, and accepted him as a member of the Committee, on the ground that upon the true construction of the 10th section of the aforesaid Act of 1863, the words, "or may order that the vacancy be forthwith filled up by the remaining members of the Committee," must be taken to mean by implication "filled up by the members of the Committee by election," since that is the mode prescribed in the earlier portion of the section for filling up a vacancy by them. It will be observed that this order is based upon the assumption that the earlier order of Mr. A. F. G. Moscardi of the 6th January 1913 was in effect an order directing the Committee to fill up the vacancy by holding an election, and that it was understood and acted upon by them as such.

The present respondent upon the 6th August 1913 presented a petition to the High Court asking for a revision of this order under the 115th section of the Code of Civil Procedure, to which he made the present appellant and the Temple Committee respondents. On the application coming on for hearing, a preliminary objection was raised that a petition for revision of the adjudication of the District Court did not, on the legal construction of the Statute in such a matter as that dealt with in section 10 of the Act of 1863, lie.

The High Court held that this objection failed, and proceeded to deal with the merits of the application. In reference to them they held that, according to the true construction of the 10th section, the District Court had no jurisdiction whatever to order the remaining members of the Committee (as it was taken it had ordered them) to fill up the vacancy by means of an election, or to validate the filling up of it by these means in obedience to such an order, and ordered that the order of the District Judge, Mr. Spencer, dated the 19th July 1913, should be set aside, as made without jurisdiction, and that the case should be sent back to be dealt with by the District Court by the light of this judgment.

On the hearing of this appeal both these points have been raised and argued. In their Lordships' view the decision of the High Court was on both points right, and they fully concur in and approve of it.

As to the preliminary objection. The 115th section of the Civil Procedure Code enables the High Court, in a case in which no appeal lies, to call for the record of any case if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have acted in the exercise of a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to have exercised a jurisdiction vested in it, or to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and further enables it to pass such an order in the case as the Court may think fit.

It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. And if the appellant's contention be correct, then if the Civil Court should absolutely and whimsically decline to exercise its jurisdiction and refuse to make any orders as to the filling up of vacancies, no matter how many existed, there would not, in a case such as the present, be any remedy available under this section and no appeal would lie.

The act of the District Court complained of in the present case was an adjudication by it that the present appellant having been elected in pursuance of an order of the Court was a member of the Committee. The words of the Statute are: "And whoever shall be then elected under the said rules shall be a member of the Committee to fill such vacancy." If the election be valid and regular, the person elected becomes a member of the Committee without any consent or approval being given by the District Court. It is contended, however, that the making of this order, necessarily involving, as it does, the construction of the Statute a pure matter of law—is not a judicial, but merely an administrative or ministerial act. A key, it would appear to their Lordships, as to the true position of the Civil Court under this 10th section may be found by referring to the position it occupies under the immediately preceding and some of the succeeding sections of the Act. Section 9 provides that every member of a Committee appointed under sections 7 and 8 shall hold office for life unless removed for misconduct or unfitness, and no such member shall be removed except by order of the Civil Court. Surely in such a question as the amotion of an officer from his office for misconduct or unfitness, the Court which makes the order removing him is exercising judicial functions? Any order made in such a matter in disregard of the requirements of natural justice, such, for instance, as proceeding without giving the member sought to be removed notice, or affording him an opportunity of defending himself, would clearly be voidable or void.

Again, under section 14, any person may sue in this Civil Court the manager or superintendent of the mosque or the members of this very Committee for breach of trust or misfeasance. And the Court might decree specific performance of any acts to be done by either of these functionaries, might award damages against him, or might remove him from office. Under section 16 the Court, in a suit pending before it, might refer the matter to arbitration.

It appears to their Lordships to be clear that in all these matters the Civil Court exercises its powers as a Court of Law, not merely as a persona designata whose determinations are not to be treated as judgments of a legal Tribunal.

It was next contended that the matter of the four petitions in which the order of the 19th July 1913, (was passed sic.) did not constitute a "case" within the meaning of the 115th section of the Code of Civil Procedure. No definition is to be found in the Code of the word "case." It cannot, in their Lordships' view, be confined to a litigation in which there is a plaintiff who seeks to obtain particular relief in damages or otherwise against a defendant who is before the Court. It must, they think, include an ex parte application, such as that made in this case, praying that persons in the position of trustees or officials should perform their trust or discharge their official duties. Their Lordships concur, therefore, with the High Court in thinking that the matter adjudicated upon was a case within the meaning of the 115th section of the Code.

The case of Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (1) decided by this Board is wholly different from the present. There the District Judge had, under this section 10, by his order appointed the appellant to fill a vacancy in the Temple Committee. An appeal was taken from this order, on the ground of the appellant's unfitness for the post by reason of his religious belief. The question of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to make the order was not raised. It was not pretended that a right of appeal—which, if given at all, must be given by Statute—was given by Act XX of 1863; but it was contended that it was given by the 540th section of Act X of 1877, which gives a general right of appeal from decrees of Courts exercising original jurisdiction. The definition of the word "decree" given in this Act is modified by Act XII of 1879, and, as modified, runs as follows:—

"'Decree' means a formal expression of an adjudication upon any right, claim, or defence set up in a Civil Court where such adjudication decides the suit or the appeal."

Well, it is obvious that an order made by the Civil Court on an application which may be made by "any person whatever," appointing a particular man to fill a vacancy on a Committee, is not a "decree" within the meaning of this definition. The Board, on that occasion, carefully abstained from expressing any opinion upon the question whether proceedings, somewhat in the nature of quo warranto, could be taken to remove a person improperly appointed.

On the point of substance on the merits it was next contended that when a vacancy amongst the members of a Committee occurs the Statute imposes upon the remaining members a statutory duty to hold, within three months from the date of the vacancy, an election in the manner provided by the rules for the choice of a new member to fill this vacancy, and that if these members fail to discharge this statutory duty the jurisdiction of the Court is in the first instance confined to either itself appointing a person to fill the vacancy, or to making an order, somewhat in the nature of a mandamus, to compel them to perform their statutory duty. Well, in the first place it is admitted that the section does not expressly provide anything of the kind, and in the next place some of its provisions make it impossible to imply anything of the kind.

In the case of an election, public notice must be given as soon as possible after the occurrence of the vacancy, and the election must be held within three months after that date; but the order of the Court requiring the remaining members of the Committee to forthwith fill up the vacancy may not be made till long after this period of three months has elapsed. It would in such a case be impossible to fulfil the statutory condition as to the time for holding the election. Again, the order is to be to the effect that these members shall forthwith fill up the vacancy, which seems to exclude all the delays contemplated where an election is held; and again where an election is held the remaining members of the Committee merely act as the returning officer. They do not in any sense fill up the vacancy. The electors elect a person to be the new member, and upon his election by them he, according to the Statute, "shall be a member of the Committee to fill the vacancy." If in such a case the vacancy can properly be said to be filled up by anybody, it is by the electors rather than by the remaining members of the Committee that this is done, whereas the order to be made in case of their default contemplates, and indeed directs, that these members themselves are to fill up the vacancy. The filling of it up is to be their act. It is to be done by them forthwith, without the aid or intervention of any electors or other persons, and it would appear to their Lordships it must be an act kindred in character to that which the Court itself may do, namely, appoint a person to fill the vacancy. It was also urged that if this construction of the section be adopted it would enable the remaining members of the Committee, by their own default, practically to disfranchise the electors, and at the discretion of the Court possibly procure the patronage for themselves. That no doubt is so, and before a legislative body empowered to amend the Statute, it might furnish a powerful argument for its amendment; but the function of this Board is to declare the law, not to alter it, and the argument cannot, therefore, here avail. In addition it is to be remembered that where the Civil Court appoints, the electors are by and through the same default of the same members of the Committee equally disfranchised, yet that is expressly authorised by the Statute. The Court must be trusted not to confer upon these members by its order the power to appoint where the nature and circumstances of their default show that they are unworthy of being trusted with the privilege of appointing a member. Their Lordships are for these reasons of opinion that the decision appealed from was right, that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

A payment of rent by a tenant to his landlord after the latter's interest has been transferred is valid as against the transferee, unless the transferee has before the payment given notice of the transfer to the tenant, even though such payment is not made in good faith within the meaning of section 50 of the Transfer of Property Act.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould in a suit for arrears for rent. The plaintiff-appellant is the usufructuary mortgagee from the second defendant, and is, under the terms of the mortgage contract dated the 5th July 1910, entitled to possession. The first defendant is the actual cultivator who holds under the second defendant under a lease dated the 2nd

May 1904. The plaintiff brought this suit to recover from the first defendant arrears of rent which had accrued due after the date of the mortgage. The first defendant pleaded that he had paid the rent to his landlord, the mortgagor second defendant. The Court of First Instance decreed the suit. The District Judge has reversed that decision and dismissed the suit; his decree has been affirmed on second appeal to this Court. It is plain that in view of the provisions of section 72 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed. Under sub-clause (1) of that section a tenant shall not, when his landlord's interest is transferred, be liable to the transferee for rent which became due after the transfer and was paid to the landlord whose interest was so transferred, unless the transferee has before the payment given notice of the transfer to the tenant. It has been found that the plaintiff did not give the requisite notice to the tenant in the case before us; there is thus a complete answer to the claim and we need not consider whether the first defendant paid the arrears of rent to the second defendant in good faith within the meaning of section 50 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 7—'Apportionment of rent', meaning of—Suit for apportioned rent on fraction of demised premises—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Transfer of lessor's interest, effect of—Right to rent after transfer, when amount payable on fixed dates—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 36, 2 (d)—High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Appeal, second.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A suit for arrears of rent due under a lease after an apportionment has been made, in consequence of the interest of the lessor having been transferred in portions of the demised premises, either by simultaneous agreement between the parties or by one party with the consent of the other, is not a suit for apportionment coming under clause 7 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Even if the apportionment was made only by the plaintiff and he alleges it to be an equitable apportionment binding on the defendant, a suit which prays for the recovery of a definite sum cannot be called a suit for an apportionment of rent. [p. 658, col. 2.]

The nature of the plaintiff's suit has to be found from the relief claimed by him and the fact that the Court may have to give findings as to the proper apportionment of rent does not alter its character. [p. 659, col. 1.]

Where the apportioned rent claimed is below Rs. 500 there is no right of second appeal. [p. 659, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J., (dissenting).—Article 7 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act takes it out of the power of a Small Cause Court to adjudicate upon a question of what is a fair and equitable rent to be paid by a tenant to his landlord, having regard to the yield, fertility and extent of a holding and similar considerations, which is rather within the province of a Revenue Court for estates or a Court of original jurisdiction in other cases. [p. 657, col. 2.]

A decision on what would be a fair and proper proportion out of a whole rent to a fraction of demised premises in consequence of the lessor ceasing to have an interest in the remainder is beyond the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. [p. 657, col. 2.]

All rents are, upon the transfer of the interest of the lessor, to be deemed to accrue due from day to day. [p. 657, col. 2; p. 658, col. 1.]

Where, before the date on which the rent becomes payable, the lessor ceases to have an interest in the land leased, he has no claim for rent subsequent to that date as there is no privity of interest between himself and the tenant. [p. 658, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 142 of 1914 (Appeal Suit No. 342 of 1914 on the file of the District Court of North Arcot), preferred against that of the District Munsif, Sholinghur, in Original Suit No. 140 of 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga for Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Respondent, took an objection that the suit was of a Small Cause nature and no second appeal lay.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lease amount is for three years of the two villages. One of the villages did not belong to the lessor. Suit is to recover the rateable amount due on the other village. The suit is for an apportionment of rent and is, therefore, not cognizable by a Small Cause Court under clause 7 of Act IX of 1887.

[SPENCER, J.—How does it alter the fact that it is rent?]

This is in effect a suit for an apportionment. Clause 7, Schedule II, clearly provides for it. Gopee Nath Ghose v. Kedar Nath Chuckerbutty (1). Lease was from 1901 to 1911. In 1907 lands passed out of the lessor's possession. He claims rent for the other village decreed to him.

[SPENCER, J.—Apportionment means permanent apportionment and not merely fixing the amount]

In respect of his claim of a particular year when the High Court found that he is entitled to a portion of the year, he cannot claim an apportionment under section 36 of the Transfer of Property Act. And section 2 of the Transfer of Property Act excludes its applicability to transfers by Court sales.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga.—In Gopee Nath Ghose v. Kedar Nath Chuckerbutty (1) the suit itself was for apportionment.

[SPENCER, J.—How can he get his recovery without an apportionment?]

The nature of the suit must be determined from the plaint. Section 36 of the Transfer of Property Act has no reference to one between landlord and rent.

Mr. T. Muthukrishna Aiyar.—Here the apportionment is between two villages. Last two instalments fell due on 15th February 1903 and 5th October 1905.

Sale takes effect from that date. Satyendra Nath Thakur v. Nilkantha Singha (2), Mathewson v. Shyam Sunder Singa (3).

Section 2, clause (d), does not apply.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga.—In section 36, Transfer of Property Act, there is a clear apportionment of rent day by day and, therefore, it is apportioned from day to day.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The term apportionment is generally used in connection with the fixing of rent for all time to come. Here you claim a particular sum of money

(3) 33 C. 786.

VEMA RANGIAH CHETTY v. VAJRAVELU MUDALIAR.

due for a particular period. The suit is, therefore, not one for an apportionment and, therefore, not excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.]

Mr. K. Y. Adiga.—The nature of relief is to be found from the terms of the plaint. Vira Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (4), Chilukuri Sitaramayya v. Venkata Rangayya Appa Rao (5) are clearly in my favour.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar.—Clause 7 is intended to decide questions as between landlord and tenant and has no application to cases arising under a lease like this. The rent is here due upon a lease and if the landlord ceases to have an interest in a particular year, he is entitled to claim a proportionate share in the rent.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—This suit was brought to recover the lease amount of fruit trees in certain forests. A preliminary objection has been raised that no second appeal lies, as the suit is of a small cause nature. The appellant's Vakil answers this objection by a reference to Article 7 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which exempts suits for the assessment, enhancement, abatement, or apportionment of the rent of immoveable property. From the definition of "rent" in section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act and from the definition of "immoveable property" in the General Clauses Act, and from the use of the word "apportionment" in section 36 of the former Act, I have little hesitation in thinking that the Article in question covers a suit of this nature. Where, as here, there has been a transfer of a part of the lessor's interest through a decree of Court, the application of section 36 is excluded by section 2 (d) of the same Act [vide Mathewson v. Shyam Sunder Sinha (3)]. But in order to determine what legal significance should be given to the word "apportionment," we may look to the section and see in what sense the word is used where it occurs in other enactments.

Where a definite extent of land is leased for a certain term upon a rent for a fixed sum and the lessor brings a suit upon his contract, I do not think that the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court would be taken away by Article 7, merely because the liabilities of more parties than one would have to be adjusted by an arithmetical calculation before the Court could arrive at a decision in the suit. But from the whole tenor of Article 7, I think it was intended to take it out of the power of a Small Cause Court to adjudicate upon a question of what is a fair and equitable rent to be paid by a tenant to his landlord, having regard to the yield, fertility and extent of a holding and similar considerations, as that is rather within the province of a Revenue Court for Estates or a Court of Original Jurisdiction in other cases [vide Gopee Nath Ghose v. Kedar Nath Chuckerbutty (1)]. Now in the present case, the original lease covered the forest produce of two villages, Maharajapuram and Nissangadurgam. By a decree in another suit the plaintiff lost his title to Nissangadurgam, and, therefore, in this suit the District Munsif had to decide under the first issue what would be a fair and proper proportion out of the whole rent to be allotted for the produce of the Maharajapuram forests, when the relative value of the produce of the trees in each village had not been ascertained. He decided that the plaintiff's demand for one-third of the whole rent was not excessive under the circumstances.

In doing so he went further than a Small Cause Court having pecuniary jurisdiction over the suit could have gone. I would, therefore, disallow the respondent's objection.

I proceed then to the merits of this appeal.

On the admissions and findings of fact it appears that the lease was for ten years from 1901, that the year began on February 27th and ran till February 26th of the next calendar year, that rent was payable in three instalments each year, viz., on May 15th, November 15th and February 15th, and that the plaintiff's title to the village of Maharajapuram was determined by the confirmation in December 1907 of the sale in Court auction in execution of a decree.

I consider that the Subordinate Judge was right in his view that all rents are upon the transfer of the interest of the lessor, to be deemed to accrue due from day to day. Vide Lakshminaranappa v. Melothraman Nair (6) and Randipurazil Kunhisow v. Alukandiyil Parkum Mulloli Chathu (7).

No doubt in a suit between the lessor and the assignee of his interest, the lessor would be entitled to have the rent apportioned between them according to the duration of their respective titles, irrespective of the dates when the rent became payable by the tenant. But the lessee was under his contract not liable to pay the instalments before the dates appointed for the payment thereof. Therefore the plaintiff was by his contract entitled to collect the instalments which fell due on May 15th and November 15th, 1907. But as his ownership ceased in December, there was no privity of estate between him and the lessee thereafter. Accordingly he was not entitled to recover from the lessee the amount which fell due on February 15th, 1908, and the lessee, who produced a receipt (Exhibit I) for the rent of Fasli 1317 paid to the purchaser at the Court sale, could claim that he had a good discharge for the third instalment of the year 1907-1908.

I need not discuss the other contentions of the appellant as they must fail on the findings of fact of the lower Courts.

In the result I hold, that instead of the plaintiff getting a decree for 10/12ths of the rent for 1907-1908, which amounts to 10/12ths of Rs. 116-10-6 or Rs. 97-3-0, and interest thereon, he should for that year be given a decree for the first two instalments, that is, twice Rs. 38-14-2 or Rs. 77-2-4 and interest at the rate allowed in the lower Court.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I regret that on the question of the nature of the suit as one of a Small Cause nature, I find myself unable to agree with the judgment just now pronounced by my learned brother.

I shall quote portions of the plaint to establish what I consider to be the nature of the suit.

"5. It was decided in Original Suit No. 131 of 1901 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Sholinghur that the plaintiff has no right to Nisangadurgam village and forest included in the aforesaid properties. By virtue of the said decision, the plaintiff claims only a rateable amount, viz., one-third of the lease amount, i.e., Rs. 116-10-8 for Damodara Maharajapuram village enjoyed by the defendant's father."

"7. Ramaswami Chetty, the defendant's father, settled the lease amounts up to 1904" (at the above rate of Rs. 116-10-8 per year) "in respect of Damodara Maharajapuram village enjoyed by him." "Therefore the plaintiff prays that the Court may be pleased to pass a decree for the amount of Rs. 319-4-3" made up of the instalments of rent due in 1906 1907 and 1908 with interest.

Now it seems to me clear from the plaint that the plaintiff's contention was that the proper apportionment of rent of the Damodara Maharajapuram village was Rs. 116-10-8 per year, that the defendant's father accepted that as the proper apportionment and that he paid rent for Damodara Maharajapuram village and forest at the rate of Rs. 116-10-8 from 1901 (the date of the rent deed Exhibit A) till 1904. I am, therefore, unable to hold that this is a suit for apportionment coming under clause 7 of the second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It is really a suit for arrears of rent due after the apportionment had been made either by simultaneous agreement between both parties or by one party with the consent of the other. Even if it was an apportionment which was made only by the plaintiff but which the plaintiff alleges to be an equitable apportionment binding on the defendant, still the suit is only a suit for recovery of the arrears of such apportioned rent and not for apportionment. Apportionment may be (a) as regards rents of different periods of time or (b) as regards rents due by portions or fractions of the demises. But whatever be the share of the original rent which would be due by the defendant on an equitable apportionment, a suit which prays for the relief of the recovery of a definite sum as the share of arrears of such rent due to the plaintiff cannot be called a suit for an apportionment of the rent. JATINDAR NATH BOSE v. MAHAMMAD MALLIK.

Vira Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (4), a suit for the recovery of rent at an enhanced rate from a tenant holding over (the enhanced rate having been fixed by the plaintiff himself as damages for use and occupation) was held not to be a suit for assessment or enhancement of rent falling under clause 7. The nature of the plaintiff's suit has to be found from the relief prayed for by him, and the only relief prayed for in the present suit is the recovery of a sum of money claimed to be due as rent to the plaintiff. Even if the Court has to give findings as to the proper apportionment of rent to be paid for the plaintiff land, still it is a suit for the recovery of such a rent. As pointed out in Chilukuri Sitaramayya v. Venkata Rangayya Appa Rao (5), a suit for enhancement of rent seems to mean a suit for a "declaration by the Court as to what the proper rent is, payable by the tenant in all years to come." In that case, it was held that a suit for enhanced kat-tubadi was not a suit for enhanced rent under clause 7 of the 2nd Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and that hence no second appeal lay when the claim was below Rs. 500. I think the above decision is a direct authority on the present question. The Court's duty to pronounce incidental findings on questions which a Small Cause Court cannot finally determine has never been held to change the character of the suit, if the substantial relief prayed for makes the suit one of a Small Cause nature. In the result, I would hold that no second appeal lay and I would accordingly dismiss the second appeal. Even if we allow the second appeal to be amended as a revision petition under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, such revision petition would also have to be dismissed with costs, no question of jurisdiction or acting illegally or with material irregularity being involved. I shall not express any final opinion on the difficult question whether plaintiff is legally entitled to ten-twelfths or only two-thirds share of the rent claimed.

BY THE COURT.—Under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Estoppel—Landlord and tenant—Decision in rent suit that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant—Suit for khas possession by landlord—Res judicata.

In a suit for rent in which the only issue was whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted between the parties, it was found that the plaintiff had failed to prove such relationship. Thereupon the plaintiff brought a suit to recover possession of the land from the defendant on the allegation that the defendant having in the previous rent suit denied the relationship of landlord and tenant, the plaintiff was entitled to recover khas possession:

Held, that the Court was precluded by the estoppel created by the decision in the rent suit, from finding that the plaintiff was the landlord, so that the plaintiff's suit for khas possession must fail. [p. 660, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Nadia, dated the 12th July 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, Ranaghat, dated the 4th June 1914.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title and khas possession of a plot of land or in the alternative to assess fair and equitable rent. The plaintiffs allege that the land formed part of the jama belonging to Roslat and Moslat, two brothers. Plaintiffs are the sons of Roslat while Moslat's heirs were made pro forma defendants in the suit. The jama was sold in auction and purchased by one Dwarika Bose who again sold it by a kobala to Roslat and his brother in Bhadra 1275. That the disputed $1\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land was taken settlement by Baranashi Bose, the predecessor of the defendants from plaintiff's predecessor Roslat at a jama of Re 1-8-0 per annum. That subsequently the plaintiffs brought a rent suit against the defendants for their half share of the rent of this land, in which the latter denied the relationship of landlord and tenant. So the rent suit was dismissed, hence the plaintiffs cause of action arose. The defence is that the land is khas land of the defendants who are the landlords, that no settlement was taken by the predecessor of Baranashi from Roslat and no rent was realized by him or the plaintiffs and that the suit is barred by limitation.

The Court below found that the plaintiffs have got title to the land, which was let out to defendants' predecessor by plaintiffs' predecessor, so it decreed the suit but disallowed the prayer for khas possession. It ordered that the plaintiffs are entitled to receive 12 annas rent from the defendants in their 8-annas share.

The defendants, therefore, preferred this appeal.

The points for determination are:—

1. Have the plaintiffs title to the land in suit?
2. Is the suit barred by limitation?

* * * * *

So I find agreeing with the learned Munsif that the plaintiffs' title to the land is clear.

Conceding for argument's sake that there was non-payment of rent by the defendants to the plaintiffs, when once their predecessor admitted the tenancy by Chit Exhibit 2, it will not be extinguished. There is the well known principle of law that once a tenant always a tenant and this will stare in the face of such a contention. So I find that the suit is not barred by limitation by adverse possession.

There was an objection taken by the appellant's Pleader, and perhaps for the first time in this Court, that the decision in the rent suit is res judicata in the present suit. I am of opinion that it will not be so and the reason is very clear for the issues involved in that suit and the present suit are distinct.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal be dismissed with costs."

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra, for the Appellants.—On the findings of the lower Courts the present suit is barred by limitation.

Then the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant is barred by res judicata. Relying on the same title the defendants denied in the previous suit for rent brought by the plaintiffs the relationship of landlord and tenant, and the question was thoroughly gone into in the previous rent suit between the parties and was decided in that suit.

The identical question decided in this suit was directly in issue in the previous rent suit, and the decision on this point was final and cannot be re-opened again. The case of Ekabar Sheikh v. Hara Bewa (1) is directly in point. Murlidhar Supal v. Narsingh Das (2) also supports my contention.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decision of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Nadia, dated the 12th July 1915, affirming a decision of the Munsif of Ranaghat. The plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession from the defendants of $1\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land, alleging that they and the pro forma defendants were the landlords and that as in a previous rent suit the defendants had denied the fact that the plaintiffs were the landlords, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover possession. In this case the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiffs were the landlords. Against that Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra says that in the former suit in which the plaintiffs sued for rent the defendants raised one and only one issue, namely, whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiffs and the defendants. It was found in that case that the plaintiffs had failed to prove such relationship. It is said, therefore, that it was not competent to the learned Subordinate Judge to find in this case that the plaintiffs were the landlords, because he was precluded from doing so by the estoppel created by the decision in the former rent suit. That statement seems to be well founded. The present case is on all fours with the decision of this Court in the case of Ekabar Sh-ikh v. Hara Bewa (1). We follow that decision which is binding on us, and reverse the decision of the lower Courts and direct that the plaintiffs' suit be dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

of.*

The question of limitation can by law be raised at any stage of the proceedings and it is always a Court's duty, whether it is raised or not, to see whether the claim is barred. [p. 661, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Shahabad, Arrah.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and Amir Hossain, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Raghunath Singh and Rajendra Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted against the appellants who carry on a gola business, for money deposited on foot of Sarkhats and which now amounts to a total sum of Rs. 1399-15.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not maintainable, the defendants having been adjudicated insolvents under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (Act III of 1909).

The plaintiff then preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who found that the insolvency order had been annulled and that the suit was maintainable. He accordingly made a decree for Rs. 1,227-13 against the defendants, and declined to go into the question of limitation. It was contended before him by the defendants that the suit came under Article 59 of the 1st Schedule of the Limitation Act, and that the period of limitation was three years from the date of the loan and that a part of the loan at least, namely that part which was prior to the 4th of August 1911, was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff on the other hand argued that the case came under Article 60 and that the money had been deposited with the defendants as bankers.

The learned District Judge declined to go into the question of limitation, because he said that it had not been raised in the Court below and no cross appeal had been preferred before him. In this he was clearly in error. The point was raised in the written statement. Moreover the question of limitation can by law be raised at any stage of the proceedings and it is always the Court's duty, whether it is raised or not, to see whether the claim is barred. We accordingly when the second appeal first came before us remanded the case to the District Judge to consider the question of limitation, and he has now returned a finding in a judgment dated 7th February 1917, in which he expresses the clear opinion that the account between the plaintiff and the defendants was an account between a customer and his banker and that the deposit was not in the nature of a loan which would come under Article 59. This is a finding of fact which would seem to conclude the case.

But the learned Vakil for the appellants before us submits that the learned District Judge has not directed his mind to the evidence in the case but has merely come to his finding upon the document itself. We cannot assume that the learned District Judge has been entirely unmindful of the evidence in the case. There is nothing to show that he arrived at his finding merely upon the perusal of the Sarkhat. The parties were represented before him by Pleaders and it must be presumed that they placed all the relevant evidence before the learned District Judge.

In these circumstances we do not think we ought to go behind the finding of the learned District Judge and make a fresh remand in order that the evidence in the case may be re-considered. It is found as a fact that receipts and payments were given and made between the plaintiff and the defendants in the capacity of customer and banker till the 19th April 1911, and as the suit was filed on the 17th April 1914 no part of the claim is barred.

The plaintiff is entitled to a decree for interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the suit till the date of the decree and 6 per cent. thereafter till the date of realization.

ABDUL MAJID MIAN v. BAKHSHA ALI.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed and the cross-objection is decreed. The appellants will pay the respondent the costs of the cross-appeal.

The purchaser of a land at a sale in execution of a decree cannot, by bringing a suit for its possession within twelve years from the date of sale, save his claim from the bar of limitation, where the land purchased has been in the possession, not of the judgment-debtor, but of the defendants, from before the date of the sale and for a period of more than twelve years under an independent title.

Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The plaintiff purchased the land in suit in the year 1901 and obtained symbolical possession in 1907. The present suit was instituted on the 18th May 1912. The defendants Nos. 14 and 15 who are the appellants in this Court pleaded that they had obtained a settlement of the land from the landlord in the year 1898 and had been in possession of the land ever since in their own right.

AKHOURI PREM NARAIN v. FAHIMUNNISSA.

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was never in possession and dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge was of opinion that the suit was not barred by limitation because it was instituted within twelve years of the date of the confirmation of sale.

But if, as the defendants allege, they were in possession of the land from before the date of the sale and for a period of twelve years under an independent title, the plaintiff's claim cannot be saved from limitation merely because he brought the suit within twelve years of the date of the sale. Article 138 of the Limitation Act prescribes a period of twelve years from the date of the sale for a suit by a purchaser of land at a sale in execution of a decree for possession of the purchased land when the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale. It is necessary, therefore, to find whether the judgment-debtors whose interest the plaintiff purchased at the execution sale was in possession, or whether the defendants Nos. 14 and 15 were in possession from before the date of the sale under an independent title.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that the question may be decided in the light of the observations made above and the appeal disposed of accordingly. Costs will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—This miscellaneous appeal comes before us from a decision of the District Judge of Gaya. The facts are shortly as follows:—

The plaintiff obtained as against the appellant a decree for rent, the relationship of landlord and tenant existing between the plaintiff and the defendant. The holding of the tenant judgment-debtor out of which the arrear of rent was due was put up for sale and the plaintiff purchased it at the sale and became a decree-holder auction-purchaser. The tenant admittedly within the time limited by section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act deposited in Court the amount due on foot of the decree, together with the other necessary charges, to satisfy the decree-holder's claim. The defendant applied to the learned Munsif to set aside the sale which had already been held. The Munsif declined to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had not lodged a sufficient amount by way of deposit in Court to satisfy the amount of the decree together with other charges. From the decision of the Munsif there was an appeal to the District Judge of Gaya. The learned Judge found as a question of fact that the amount deposited in Court by the judgment-debtor was ample and sufficient, and that in fact the amount deposited was in excess of the actual amount due under the decree plus other charges to the extent of Rs. 4-12-0. We think the learned Judge was entitled to examine the figures and test whether the calculation made by an officer of the Munsif's Court was correct for the purpose of ascertaining what was the proper sum to be deposited. The learned Judge did examine the figures and he found that the judgment-debtor had discharged and satisfied the obligation imposed upon him by section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The second matter which was raised both in the lower Appellate Court and here was the question as to whether an appeal lay from the order of the learned Munsif, refusing to set aside the sale under section 174 consequential upon the deposit made under that section. The learned District Judge held on the authority of the case reported as Raghubar Dayal Sukul v. Jadu Nandan Missir (1) that an appeal did lie; and accordingly he reversed the order of the learned Munsif, set aside the sale and restored the judgment-debtor to possession of the property.

We have been pressed with the argument that no appeal lies from an order dismissing an application under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is some conflict on the authorities, but the general principle deducible appears to be from the more recent current of decision in the Calcutta High Court that as between a decree-holder and judgment-debtor when the decree-holder becomes the purchaser of the property offered for sale, that then the case is one arising between the parties to the suit and, therefore, an appeal lies under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure from an order made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies in express terms the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to the special procedure provided for the recovery of rent as between landlord and tenant under the Bengal Tenancy Act, except in so far as the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code may be modified by express rule or the same are otherwise inconsistent with the provisions of the Act itself. Section 43 lays down the procedure that is required to be followed for the recovery of rent and the obtaining of a rent-decree. No doubt as I have said there is some conflict on the authorities touching the question raised for our decision, but I think the law as stated by us is consistent with the principle underlying the current of modern decisions in Calcutta.

Mr. Justice Mullick in this Court in a case reported as Razi-ud-Din Hossain v. Bendeshri Prasad Singh (2) laid down as follows:—

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 365; 15 C. L. J. 89; 16 C. W. N. 736.

(2) 36 Ind. Cas. 769.

KANDASAMI NAICKEN v. IRUSAPPA NAICKEN.

"If the application is one entertainable under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there is no appeal at all."

That case, however, is distinguishable in its facts from the present case inasmuch as the auction-purchaser was a stranger and not a party to the suit; and clearly we think all the authorities recognise and decide that in a case where an auction-purchaser is not a party to a suit then no appeal lies against an order under section 174, but if he is a party to the suit and is a decree-holder in fact that then section 47 comes into play and an appeal lies, it being a matter arising between the parties to the suit touching the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree. Therefore the case decided by Mr. Justice Mullick is distinguishable in its features from the present case. The present case is one as between the decree-holder purchaser and the judgment-debtor. The case reported as Raghubar Nayal Sukul v. Jadu Nandan Missir (1) expressly decided the point which we have now raised for our decision. The learned Judges in that case at page 92* say: "It was pointed out by this Court in the case reported as Joytara v. Ram Krishna (3) that the answer to the question whether an order in execution proceedings is within the scope of section 47 of the Code of 1908 must depend upon its nature and contents. If it decides a question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree and if the decision has been given between parties to the suit, or their representatives-in-interest, the order of the Court falls within the scope of section 47 and is a decree within the meaning of section 2."

The same point was considered in a case reported as Sital Rai v. Nandalal (4), and the importance of this decision is that it states what the law was with reference to orders made under section 310 (a) of the old Code of Civil Procedure, and applies the same principle in the application of the law to orders made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The head-note accurately interprets the effect of the decision as follows:—

"It cannot be affirmed as a general proposition of law either that an order under (3) 7 Ind. Cas. 769; 13 C. L. J. 257; 15 C. W. N. 512. (4) 1 Ind. Cas. 304; 11 C. L. J. 202; 13 C. W. N. 591.

section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or under section 310 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code is or is not appealable. The test is whether the question raised in the proceedings is one relating to execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree and if the question is of this description, whether it arises between the parties to the suit or their representatives. If it so arises, the order is appealable."

Thus we think that in this case as the matter arose between the parties to the suit, an appeal did lie by reason of the application of the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure to a proceeding under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The cases of Kishori Mohun Roy v. Sarodamani Dasi (5) and Subh Narain Lall v. Goroke Prasad (6) are no doubt inconsistent with and contrary to the decision arrived at by us in this case, but it undoubtedly appears that both these rulings have been dissented from and overruled by the case reported in 13 Calcutta Weekly Notes 591 [Sital Rai v. Nandalal (4)], which corresponds with the case cited above in 11 Calcutta Law Journal 202.

We think that the learned Judge was quite right in entertaining the appeal and that he had jurisdiction to do so. We accordingly dismiss this action with costs.

RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 6, 7, 28, Sch. I, Arts. 44, 144—Guardian and ward—Alienation by guardian, suit for cancellation of, and possession—Article applicable to suit—Statutory bar, effect of—Extinction of right—Bar against adult brother, when affects minor under disability—Scope and applicability of s. 7—Alienation, claim of prescriptive title by—Child in womb, rights of—Hindu Law—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)

KANDASAMI NAICKEN v. IRUSAPPA NAICKEN.

O. I, r. 1—Non-joinder of minor brother in suit to set aside alienation, effect of.

An alienation by a guardian ought to be set aside by a ward by instituting a suit within the period mentioned in Article 44 of the Limitation Act and till it is so set aside, the title vests in the alienee. [p. 666, col. 2.]

Though Article 44 describes the suit to be brought by the ward as a suit merely to set aside the transfer of his property by his guardian, if the transferee has obtained and is in possession and the ward has, therefore, to add a prayer for possession, Article 44 alone still applies to the suit, though it is brought for both reliefs. [p. 666, col. 2.]

On failure of the ward to sue to set aside the alienation within 3 years of his attaining majority under Article 44 of the Limitation Act, his right to the property is wholly extinguished under section 28 of the Act and title vests exclusively in the alienee from that date. [p. 666, col. 2.]

A person whose right to set aside an alienation is barred under Article 44 cannot avoid it as defendant by denouncing it in a suit for possession brought by the alienee. [p. 666, col. 2.]

Section 7 of the Limitation Act contemplates the existence in two or more persons of a joint right and a joint cause or causes of action in support of a single suit. Where two brothers have got the same cause of action (that is, where all the material allegations giving rise to a right of suit are the same), where the whole right litigated and the nature of the entire claim litigated are the same, and where, under such circumstances, the elder brother could institute a suit for himself and his younger brother on that joint right and joint cause of action, section 7 would become applicable and would bar the younger brother's right when the elder brother's became barred. The mere fact, however, that, under Order I, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, a person suing for himself and praying for one particular remedy could have joined in that suit another cause of action vesting in his minor brother for whom he could have acted as next friend will not bring the suit within the ambit of the section. [p. 667, col. 2; p. 668, col. 1.]

Doraisami Serumadan v. Nondisami Saluvan, 21 Ind. Cas. 410; 38 M. 118; 25 M. L. J. 405; 14 M. L. T. 401, explained.

Plaintiff purchased certain lands from the mother of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in 1893. The vendor described herself in the sale-deed as the guardian of the 2nd defendant alone, who was then 8 years old. The 3rd defendant was in her womb at the time. The 2nd defendant sold the same lands to the 1st defendant in 1908 himself and as guardian of his minor brother, the 3rd defendant. The plaintiff was in possession till 1909, when he was forcibly ejected by the 1st defendant. Plaintiff brought the present suit in July 1912 for recovery of the properties from 1st defendant. The 2nd defendant attained majority in 1903 and the 3rd defendant attained majority about the end of 1911:

Held, (1) that as the 2nd defendant's right to sue to set aside the alienation by his mother became barred in 1906, the title vested in the plaintiff and 1st defendant, who acquired no title by his purchase, could not oust the plaintiff and that plaintiff was entitled to 2nd defendant's share in the property; [p. 666, col. 2; p. 668, col. 2.]

(2) that as the 3rd defendant was in his mother's womb at the date of sale to plaintiff and the mother did not act as his guardian, the 3rd defendant's rights were not transferred to plaintiff, who could not claim a title by adverse possession; [p. 667, col. 1; p. 668, col. 2.]

(3) that 3rd defendant's right to the property was not extinguished by reason of the 2nd defendant having been barred under section 7 of the Limitation Act, as the interests of the 2nd and 3rd defendants were split up by the sale to plaintiff and were not identical. [p. 668, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 269 of 1914, preferred against that of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 317 of 1913.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and P. S. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Bashyam Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The 1st defendant is the appellant. The plaintiff sued in ejectment basing his title on a sale-deed of 1893 (Exhibit A) executed to him by the mother of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff was in possession till 1909, when he was ejected forcibly by the 1st defendant who had obtained a sale-deed from the 2nd defendant in 1908 (Exhibit II). The sale-deed (Exhibit II) was executed by the 2nd defendant for himself and also for the 3rd defendant who was then a minor. The 2nd defendant attained majority in 1903, while the 3rd defendant attained majority about the end of 1911 or the beginning of 1912. The suit was brought in July 1912.

The sale-deed by the mother of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to the plaintiff was executed by her as guardian of the 2nd defendant alone, the 3rd defendant (the posthumous son of his father) not having been born then. The statement of the District Judge in paragraph 2 of his judgment that the plaintiff's sale-deed was executed by the mother of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 acting as the guardian of both is clearly an error.

Both the lower Courts have found that the sale-deed of 1893 in favour of the plaintiff was executed for no consideration and that the minor 2nd defendant as whose guardian his mother executed it got no benefit under it. The District Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge has given a decree in plaintiff's favour on the following reasoning, as I understand his judgment :—

(a) The 2nd defendant did not sue to set aside his mother's sale-deed of 1893 within three years of his attaining majority. (The said three years expired in 1906.) Both the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 ought to have sued to set aside such sale within 1906. As they did not do so, they are barred under Article 44 of the Limitation Act from questioning the sale.

(b) Even if Article 44 did not apply, Article 144 would have applied to a hypothetical suit for possession if it had been brought by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 just before the plaintiff was forcibly dispossessed in 1909. Such a suit would have been dismissed as barred, as at that time the plaintiff had been in possession for 16 years. (The District Judge gives the figure 18.) Hence the plaintiff had obtained title by adverse possession against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the date when he was dispossessed in 1909. The plaintiff basing his right on his title, so perfected by adverse possession, is entitled to sue in ejectment the 1st defendant, who claims from the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

(a) That even though a suit by a ward who has attained majority to set aside his guardian's alienation may be barred under Article 44, he can avoid it as defendant by denouncing it in the suit for possession brought by the alienee.

(b) That the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the plaintiff was in adverse possession of the land as against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 between 1893 and 1909, as his possession between 1893 and 1903 at least (when the 2nd defendant attained majority) must have been as agent of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

(c) That the sale-deed of 1893 was executed by the mother, not as guardian of both the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as mistakenly supposed by the lower Appellate Court, but as guardian of the 2nd defendant alone. The 3rd defendant was, therefore, not bound to have it set aside so far as his interest in the property is concerned. The plaintiff also could not have acquired the 3rd defendant's undivided interest by adverse possession, as the 3rd defendant had three years from his attaining majority (that is, till the end of 1914) to sue to recover possession of his interest and as the 1st defendant had recovered possession in 1909 itself of 3rd defendant's said interest before 3rd defendant's right to recover possession from plaintiff had become barred.

It is clear from Madugula Latchiah v. Pally Mukkalinga (1), that the sale-deed executed by a guardian ought to be set aside by a ward by instituting a suit within the period mentioned in Article 44 and that till it is so set aside, the title vests in the alienee. It is also established by that decision that, though Article 44 described the suit to be brought by the ward as a suit merely to set aside the transfer of his property by his guardian, if the transferee had obtained and is in possession and the ward has, therefore, to add a prayer for the relief of possession, Article 44 alone still applies to the suit though brought for both the reliefs. Section 28 of the Limitation Act says that at the determination of the period limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished. As the 2nd defendant's right to institute a suit under Article 44 for setting aside the sale of 1893 and for possession of the property from the plaintiff became barred in 1906, his right to such property became extinguished under section 28 of the Limitation Act and the plaintiff became the owner of the 2nd defendant's interest in the property in 1906. As he has brought the suit in 1912 and as his title to the 2nd defendant's interest of which he became the owner in 1906 subsisted at the date of the suit, his claim for possession of such interest has to be decreed. I must, therefore, reject the contention (a) put forward by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar.

(1) 30 M. 393; 2 M. L. T. 351; 17 M. L. J. 220.

KANDASAMI NAICKEN v. IRUSAPPA NAICKEN.

Coming to his contention (b), I am unable to accept Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar's argument that the agency power given to the plaintiff by the 2nd defendant's mother under Exhibit I was a general power-of-attorney which made him the 2nd defendant's agent as regards the management of the plaint property also, which had been alienated by the 2nd defendant's mother on the day previous to the execution of the agency deed. It seems to me clear that the plaint property was excluded from the agency and I am unable to differ from the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff's possession between 1893 and 1909 was adverse to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

Coming to the last contention (c), it is clear from the wording of Exhibit A that the sale-deed was executed by the 2nd defendant's mother as guardian of the 2nd defendant alone. Plaintiff-respondent's learned Vakil asked us to presume in the plaintiff's favour that the 2nd defendant's mother intended to execute it in the exercise of all the powers to alienate which she possessed, though she may not have known that she had the power to execute it also as guardian of the child then in her womb. I do not think that a Court is bound to stretch any point in favour of a person like the plaintiff who took advantage of the helplessness of his mother-in-law (2nd and 3rd defendants' mother) to obtain a sale-deed without consideration in fraud of his brother-in-law from her. The sale-deed, therefore, did not affect the 3rd defendant's undivided interest in the plaint properties. He was hence not bound to have it set aside under Article 44. As against his interest, the plaintiff could rely only upon adverse possession under Article 144. But as Article 144 read with sections 6 and 28 of the Limitation Act did not bar the 3rd defendant's rights or confer title on the plaintiff as regards 3rd defendant's rights before the plaintiff was dispossessed in 1909, the plaintiff cannot claim any title to the 3rd defendant's interest in the properties. (It is unnecessary to consider whether the 3rd defendant's interest has passed to the 1st defendant in this case owing to the sale-deed executed by the 2nd defendant in the 1st defendant's favour in 1908.) The contention (c) has, therefore, to be upheld.

Mr. K. Bashyam Aiyangar next contends for the plaintiff that as the 2nd defendant could have, when suing on his own behalf (in the suit governed by Article 44) to set aside the sale by his mother of his undivided interest also, joined in that suit a cause of action as the next friend of the 3rd defendant (or as managing member of the undivided family consisting of himself or of the 3rd defendant) to recover possession of the 3rd defendant's interests also in that same suit, the principle of the Full Bench decision in Doraisami Sirumadan v. Nondisami Saluran (2) applied and that, therefore, the 3rd defendant has also become barred in 1906 from claiming title to his undivided share. I think that, that decision gave as wide an effect to section 8 of Act XV of 1877 (corresponding to section 7 of the present Act) as possible and that it is wholly undesirable to extend the scope of that section further. When two brothers have got the same cause of action (that is, where all the material allegations and giving rise to a right of suit are the same), where the whole right litigated and the nature of the entire claim litigated are the same and where under such circumstances the elder brother could institute a suit for himself and his younger brother on that joint right and joint cause of action, section 7 would become applicable according to the Full Bench decision and would bar the younger brother's right when the elder brother's became barred. But in this case the 2nd defendant's cause of action and his right to bring a suit depend upon the fact of his mother's execution of Exhibit A and a suit on such right of his is governed by Article 44, whereas the 3rd defendant's right of suit has nothing to do with Exhibit A or with Article 44 and his suit would have been governed by Article 144. The mere fact that under Order I, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, the 2nd defendant suing for himself and praying for one particular remedy could have joined in that same suit another cause of action vesting in the 3rd defendant for whom he could have acted as next friend will not bring such a suit within the ambit of section 7 of the Limitation Act, which contemplates the existence in two or more persons of a joint right and a joint cause or joint causes of action in support of a single suit.

In the result the lower Appellate Court's decree will be modified and a preliminary decree for partition of the plaint properties into two equal shares will be passed. The plaintiff's right to recover from the 1st defendant mesne profits on the said half share from Fasli 1319 is also declared. Final decree will be passed (after taking the necessary steps contemplated by law) by the District Munsif as regards possession to plaintiff of the particular land which might fall to his half share in division and in respect of the sum due to him for value of mesne profits.

The plaintiff must pay the 1st defendant's costs on half the value of the plaintiff's claim throughout and bear his own costs. (The right to the other half share as between the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 is not decided in this suit).

SPENCER, J.—The plaintiff obtained a sale-deed in respect of the suit properties in 1893 from the mother of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. In this document (Exhibit A) she described herself as the wife of her deceased husband and as the mother and protecting guardian of 2nd defendant. The statement of the District Judge that she acted as guardian of 2nd and 3rd defendants in this transaction is incorrect. In the plaint it was stated that she acted in the capacity of guardian of the 2nd defendant alone, and for the purpose of this second appeal it may be taken that the 3rd defendant was in his mother's womb on the date of sale.

Accepting the finding of the Judge that the possession by the plaintiff of the plaint lands, which are not included in the lands entrusted under Exhibit 1 to his management as an agent of the family, was adverse, it is clear that unless the time be extended under section 6 of the Limitation Act, his title must have been perfected by prescription before the 1st defendant obtained a conveyance of them from the 2nd defendant in 1908.

The 2nd defendant being 8 years old in 1893, as stated in Exhibit A, must have attained his majority in 1902 or at least by 1903.

His title to his share of the ancestral property alienated became extinguished in 1906, when for three years after attaining majority, he failed to set aside the transfer made by his guardian during his minority (vide sections 6 and 28 of the Limitation Act), and, therefore, he had no interest of his own to convey to his transferee (1st defendant) in 1908, when he executed Exhibit II on behalf of himself and his minor brother.

But in 1893 there was not any alienation of the 3rd defendant's share in the property of the Hindu joint family to which he belonged at his conception.

Both the lower Courts have found that the sale in 1893, regarded as an alienation of ancestral property, was without consideration and for no justifiable necessity. Third defendant attained majority less than three years before the institution of this suit.

Hence the title of the 3rd defendant, which was not alienated in 1893 and was kept alive by his legal disability up to the date of this suit (section 6 of the Limitation Act), does not stand on the same footing with the title of the 2nd defendant which was alienated in 1893 and became extinguished by limitation in 1906.

The District Judge without making any distinction has treated the title of both these defendants as extinguished.

It is now argued in support of his judgment that time should be calculated under section 7 of the Limitation Act as running against both, on the ground that they were jointly entitled to institute a suit to recover their property and that one could give a valid discharge without the concurrence of the other.

I consider that section 7 of the Limitation Act does not apply to the circumstances of this case. Owing to their interests having become split up, 2nd and 3rd defendants were not joint in estate in respect of this particular property after the execution of Exhibit A.

The cause of action for the 2nd defendant to set aside the alienation made by his guardian is not identical with the cause of action for the 3rd defendant or his representative-in-interest to obtain a partition of his share of family property upon a subsisting title from a third party who was in wrongful possession thereof. When the 2nd defendant attained majority, he was not competent to give a lawful discharge of the 3rd defendant's claim under the circumstances found to have existed in this case.

Thus this case is distinguishable from the case of Doraisami Sirumadan v. Nondisami Saluvan (2). I agree that the appellant is entitled to succeed in respect of 3rd defendant's undivided moiety of the suit property and that he must fail as regards the 2nd defendant's moiety and that costs should be awarded as stated in my learned brother's judgment.

Appeal partly allowed.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Reversioners, consent by - Deed, recital in—Estoppel.

The plaintiffs, who were consenting parties to a deed of sale by a Hindu widow in favour of the defendants purporting to be for legal necessity and which contained inaccurate recitals not known to the defendants to be such, induced the defendants, their nephews, by their conduct to lay out money for the erection of permanent buildings upon the lands purchased by them, and on their succession as reversioners after the death of the widow, brought a suit to recover possession of the lands sold on the ground that there was no legal necessity for the sale:

Held, that there was a clear case of estoppel by conduct against the plaintiffs and the mere fact that at the time when the plaintiffs induced their nephews to lay out their money, there was a mere spes successionis was not a sufficient ground why they should not be bound by the sale. [p. 670, col. 1]

No person who is a party to the putting forward of a recital in a deed by another and induces a third person to act on it can afterwards be heard to say that that recital is not accurate. [p. 669, col. 2; p. 670, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 against the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Burdwan, dated the 30th March 1914. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover certain land on which buildings had been erected by the defendants, the plaintiffs being the reversioners on the death of a Hindu woman whose name was Kumud Kanvini Debi. The plaintiffs are the uncles of the defendants. They now come forward and say that the defendants at the time they acquired the property were of the age of about 18 and 23 years and that they have got no title to the property. The learned Judge of the Court below has found as a fact that there was no legal necessity for the sale. It may be that, on a more careful view of the evidence, that finding may be challenged. He has also found that the recitals in the kobala were not true. He has further found that the plaintiffs were consenting parties to the sale and that they also by their conduct induced the defendants to spend the whole of their fortune upon the erection of the buildings that have been erected on this portion of the land. The only question that we have got to consider in this case, the findings have not been challenged, is whether the view that the learned Judge took is correct. There is one matter that is worthy of consideration and that is this: Although the learned Judge has found that there was no legal necessity, that the recitals in the deed of conveyance were not accurate and that the plaintiffs were consenting parties to the sale, he has not found that the defendants knew that these recitals in the deed were not accurate, and, therefore, prima facie, it must be taken that the plaintiffs, being consenting parties to the sale, were parties who induced the defendants to act upon those recitals in the conveyance as being true and accurate statements. Of course, that would be a clear case of estoppel by conduct. No person who is a party to the putting forward of a recital in a deed and induces another person to act on it can afterwards be heard to say that that recital is not accurate.

The other portion of the finding is that these uncles actually supervised the construction of the buildings that were erected by the two defendants who were then young men. They watched the building from day to day and from time to time. The money of their nephews was being deliberately laid out on these permanent buildings and they having stood by and seen their nephews so wasting their money, for them now to come to Court and say that those nephews were throwing away their money is not a story that one should readily believe. The case is a novel case and a case that has not ever been set up in a Court of Justice with success, and this is not going to be the first case in which such a statement shall be received by the Court as an accurate statement. I find nothing to suggest that this is so. I think the plaintiffs are bound by their own act. The mere fact that there was at that time a mere spes successionis when they induced their nephews to lay out their money is not a sufficient ground why they should not be bound by the sale; and if such a case is allowed to stand, it would not be giving full effect to the doctrine of estoppel in cases in India. I think this inducing of the defendants to lay out their money was quite sufficient to warrant the learned Judge of the Court below to arrive at the conclusion he came to.

Then a question has been raised as to the two smaller pieces of land which, it is said, stand on an altogether different footing. From the findings of the learned Judge, one gathers that these two small pieces of land adjoin the house that has been erected on the other portion of the land. These two pieces of land are probably curtilages and hold along with the house. The defendants, according to the view of the learned Judge, parted with the money by which they purchased these pieces of land on similar representations to those on which they purchased the former piece of land on which the buildings stand. It is quite true that as regards this piece of land, the case is not so strong as with respect to the piece of land on which the house has been built, but there is nothing before us to show why we should not give full effect to the view taken by the learned Judge with regard to these two plots of land. To cut off these pieces of land from the other piece of land may cause serious damage to the house that has been erected by the defendants. I agree with the view arrived at by the learned Judge of the Court below. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs—Rs. 200.

TEUNON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

A Judge of a Presidency Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to execute the decree of a foreign Court transmitted to it under section 44, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 671, col. 2.]

But the Registrar of a Presidency Small Cause Court has no power, under section 13 or 35 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, to issue processes in execution of a foreign decree. [p. 672, col. 1.]

A decree transmitted for execution does not become the decree of the Court to which it is transmitted, although its powers of execution are similar to the powers conferred on it in respect of the execution of its own decrees. [p. 672, col. 1.]

Order XXI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, is not restricted in its application to decrees of British Courts, it applies equally to decrees of foreign Courts. [p. 671, col. 2.]

Sub-clause (1) of Order XXI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, is imperative and must be followed, unless notice prior to arrest is dispensed with under sub-clause (2), in which case the Court should definitely record its reasons for doing so. [p. 672, col. 2.]

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—So far as I am able to see, there are no merits in these cases. But I have to deal with the question of law which is one of considerable importance argued before me: My conclusion is that the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes had no jurisdiction to order execution of the decree, and also that he acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction by directing a warrant to issue without giving the petitioner previous notice of the application. The facts necessary for the disposal of these two petitions are these. A decree was obtained in the District Munsif's Court of Mysore in 1908. It was transferred for execution to the Small Cause Court of Madras in October 1915. As the decree-holder did not take steps, his first application was dismissed in November 1915. A second application was presented on the 13th December 1915 and without notice to the petitioner, the arrest of the petitioner (judgment-debtor) was ordered on the 21st December 1915: Thereupon he paid the amount of the decree into Court and asked the Registrar to re-consider his order directing his arrest and also to pay him back the money which he had deposited. The Registrar refused the application and hence these petitions in this Court. I may also say that on the refusal of the Registrar to re-consider his order, an application was made to the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court. The learned Judges who constituted the Bench held that they had no power to interfere with the order of the Registrar.

The first point argued by the learned Counsel for the petitioner is that the Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain applications for the execution of the decrees passed by a foreign Court, and still less the Registrar of that Court. As regards the first of these contentions, I am unable to accept it.

Under section 44, Civil Procedure Code, the decrees passed by the Courts of a Native Prince or State in alliance with his Majesty may be executed in British India as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India. Under Order XXI, rule 4, if a decree is passed outside the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, the execution of that decree within the city of Madras must be by the Presidency Court of Small Causes. It was argued before me that that provision applies only to the decrees of British Courts. But the language of section 44 makes it clear that no distinction is drawn in this respect between the decree of British Courts and the decrees of foreign Courts. My attention was drawn to section 8 of the Civil Procedure Code and it was contended that as section 44 of the Code is not included among the provisions made applicable to the Presidency Small Cause Court, that Court has no jurisdiction to receive applications for execution from foreign Courts. Section 8 is intended to be supplementary to the rules of procedure provided by the Small Cause Court Act and the rules framed thereunder. Section 8 does not prescribe by implication the entertainment of applications for execution in respect of the decrees of foreign Courts by the Small Cause Court. I am, therefore, of opinion that if the decree had been put in motion by a Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court there could have been no objection to its execution. I have, however, reluctantly come to the conclusion that the Registrar has no power to issue processes in execution of a foreign decree. He is not ordinarily a Court. He is invested with the powers of a Court only for certain purposes and unless either under the sections of the Small Cause Courts Act or under the rules framed under those sections, the power to execute the decree of a foreign Court can be spelled out, I must hold that the

BIBI SOGRA v. MOHAMMAD SAYEED.

Registrar of the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to execute the decrees. Section 35 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act speaks of the execution of decrees passed by the Court of Small Causes and not by the Courts of Native States in alliance with His Majesty. Under Order XII, only certain judicial powers are delegated to the Registrar and the power to execute the decrees of foreign Courts is not among them. Section 13 gives the Registrar the power to do certain ministerial acts and the power to direct the arrest of a judgment-debtor in execution cannot be regarded as a ministerial act. Consequently, the Registrar of the Small Cause Court has no power to execute the decree of a foreign Court. The learned Vakil who appeared for the counter-petitioner suggested that the moment the decree was sent from Mysore to the Presidency Small Cause Court, it must be deemed to have become the decree of the Presidency Small Cause Court and that section 35 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act applies. I am unable to agree with him. The decree that is transmitted for execution does not become the decree of the Court to which it is transmitted, although its powers of execution are similar to the powers conferred on it in respect of the execution of its own decrees. I must, therefore, hold that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to execute the decree and that the warrant which he issued for the arrest of the petitioner was ultra vires.

One other contention of the learned Vakil for the petitioner may also be mentioned and that is that the Registrar acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction by directing a warrant to issue without giving notice to the petitioner. As I mentioned before, the first application was dismissed in November 1915. The present application was presented on the 13th December 1915 and on the 21st of that month, the order to arrest the petitioner was made. No notice was given to the petitioner on this application. Order XXI, rule 22, in its proviso to sub-clause (1) says, that no notice shall be necessary in consequence of more than one year having elapsed if the application is made within one year from the date of the last order against the party against whom execution is applied for. In this case, there was no order made against the judgment-debtor by the Registrar or the Court of Small Causes within a year of the 21st December 1915. Consequently, the operative portion of sub-clause (1) applies; and it was incumbent upon the Registrar to have issued the notice to the petitioner before directing his arrest. The learned Vakil for the counter-petitioner said that the order was competent under sub-clause (2), but that sub-clause requires that the Court should be satisfied that in the interests of justice, an order should be made without notice to the other side. The Registrar has recorded no reasons for holding that it was absolutely necessary in the interest of justice, that the arrest of the petitioner should be ordered at once. My attention was drawn also to a case decided by Ayling and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ., where they hold that if there are no merits, the Court is not bound to interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. But the order made by the Registrar goes to the very root of his jurisdiction. I am not prepared to condone the manifest illegality by saying that the petitioner has no merits. I must set aside his order; the money in deposit should be paid over to the petitioner. I make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This is an appeal in a dower suit instituted by an old lady named Bibi Sogra against her husband named Mohammad Sayeed. The plaintiff's case is that she was married to the defendant in 1875 on a dower of Rs. 40,000 and two gold mohurs and the whole of that amount she alleges to be prompt. She has brought this suit only for Rs. 20,000 and alleges that her husband in 1905 having married the daughter of a hawker began to ill-treat her and practically stopped maintaining her, and that only occasionally he used to give her Rs. 5 to Rs. 10. On the 12th April 1914, she says she went to her husband and demanded money for her maintenance. On this demand he got so enraged that he divorced her by uttering three times in Hindustani "Ham tumko talak dia." This, as already observed, happened on the 12th of April 1914. On the 23rd April, i.e., 10 or 11 days after the divorce the present suit was instituted.

On behalf of the defendant it is alleged that the dower fixed at the time of the marriage was not Rs. 40,000 and two gold mohurs but only 500 dinars which is equivalent to Rs. 160 or so, and that this was a deferred dower. Then he further said that on the date of the alleged talak he was at Gya. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit gave a decree to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 6,000 and this he did on a consideration of the position in life of the parties concerned. The Subordinate Judge's decree of

Rs. 6,000 cannot stand. The Courts of Law have no power to increase or decrease a contracted amount. There is an Act in Oudh no doubt, under which such a thing is possible, but that Act is not in force in this Province. If the case was proved, the Subordinate Judge should have given a full decree. If it was not proved he should have dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff's case depends on two facts:—Firstly, what was the amount of the dower and whether it was prompt or deferred. If it was prompt, it becomes due on demand; and if it was deferred, it becomes due on the death of either of the parties or on a divorce; secondly, whether or not there was a divorce by the husband on the 12th April. Because, if there was a divorce, it was immaterial for the purpose of the present suit whether the dower was prompt or deferred, as after the cessation of the relationship of husband and wife either by death or divorce, the dower, if not already paid, becomes due.

I propose to take the question as to the nature of the dower. According to the plaintiff's case, a sum of Rs. 40,000 and two gold mohurs were fixed as a prompt dower. Her case is that the husband has always been ill-treating her and that the ill-treatment came to a climax when he married the other girl in 1905. It is surprising that although the plaintiff had been ill-treated for so many years she never made a demand for payment of the dower, because if it was prompt, she could have made the demand at any time she liked, but that she waited for being divorced in order to be able to make the demand. In her evidence during the trial she says: "I was waiting for the talak to institute the suit, as people had told me that it could not be instituted without talak." That statement clearly indicates that the dower could not have been prompt, because if it had been prompt, she need not have waited until the divorce. The evidence on that point is also meagre.

I now come to the question of talak. The talak has been attempted to be proved by the evidence of the plaintiff herself, her maid servant named Mongh-lanian and a relation named Mohiban. The plaintiff herself appears to be a very excitable woman. She brought the suit in forma pauperis and in the earlier proceedings she was examined as a witness and in that statement of hers she said that the talak was pronounced three times by the husband in the presence of Monghlanian, Wajid, Gaffur and Kaiyaum and several others. She did not name Mohiban in this connection when she was examined at the earlier stage. Mohiban was examined during the trial and she says: "I did not see any male in the angina. I cannot say whether any came outside. I know the plaintiff's brother Wajid. I cannot say whether it is true or false that Wajid was also present at the time of the talak." If Wajid was present he would no doubt on hearing the words talak would begin to remonstrate with his brother-in-law or at least take some part in the affair but it is surprising that Monghlanian does not at all remember whether Wajid was or was not present at the time. Mohiban is a relation of the defendant. She says she was present but she does not say that she heard the husband pronouncing the talak three times successively. So her evidence is of no value. I do not think, therefore, that talak had been proved.

It has been urged on behalf of the lady that it is very improbable that an old and respectable lady would bring a false suit against her husband alleging that she had been divorced by her husband. That is true, but at the same time it is also very improbable that an old man in the position of the defendant Mohammad Sayeed, who was a Sub-Registrar, would ever think of demeaning himself by a conduct which is never approved of in a decent society in this Province. What seems to me to have been the case is that the lady Bibi Sogra was incensed at the conduct of her husband in his bringing into the house a co-wife and since then disagreement commenced. The second wife has given a son and a daughter to the old man and the apprehension on the part of the first wife and her friends and advisers was that inasmuch as since the second marriage of her husband the plaintiff had been more or less discarded, it was probable that whatever estate the defendant was possessed of may be given by the defendant to the second wife and the children by her and she, therefore, went to the husband to make a demand of her dower and to bring about a talak if that was possible. Although I do not believe that the talak took place it is quite possible that she may have gone for that purpose in order that she may institute a suit for the payment of the dower. The present appeal by the plaintiff has been brought against the deduction of her claim from Rs. 20,000 to 6,000 by the Subordinate Judge. There is also a cross-objection on behalf of the defendant against the decree awarded by the Subordinate Judge to the plaintiff for Rs. 6,000 and the result of the present appeal is that the appeal is dismissed. Cross-objection allowed.

ROE, J.—I agree. I see from the book in Muhammadan Law by Mr. Ameer Ali that when a discord originates between married parties with the wife, or when she herself is anxious to obtain a divorce without any justifiable cause, she has simply to abandon her claim to the settlement in order to secure a dissolution of her marriage. In the case before us although the lady says that she had been habitually ill-treated there is no real indication of this on the record. Discord seems to have originated in the husband's love for the younger and comelier woman. It was natural, therefore, that the lady would take steps to get a divorce and would be prone to imagine that she had succeeded in getting a divorce.

I entirely agree with my learned brother that there was no such divorce. The plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed. I agree that it be now dismissed with costs here and in the lower Court.

*Appeal dismissed:
Cross-objection allowed.*

HARI CHAND v. MAGHI MAL..

Where it was found that a husband was addicted to the use of alcohol and that occasionally he beat his wife when he was the worse for liquor:

Held, that these facts fell short of establishing legal cruelty, so as to debar him from suing successfully to obtain a decree for restitution of conjugal rights.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 22nd January 1916, confirming the order of the Munsif, South Unao, dated the 23rd June 1915.

Mr. Fakhruddin Hasan, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for decision in this appeal is whether it is established on the findings of fact of the lower Court that legal cruelty has been committed by the plaintiff-respondent of such a nature as to debar him from suing successfully to obtain a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. In order to establish legal cruelty it is necessary to establish actual violence of such a character as to endanger personal health or safety, or to establish the existence of a reasonable apprehension that such violence will be committed. On the facts before me it is established that the plaintiff-respondent is addicted to the use of alcohol and that he is occasionally the worse for liquor. When he is the worse for liquor he has been known to beat his wife. But it is not established that he is habitually the worse for liquor, that he habitually beats his wife or that he has ever assaulted her with brutality. While on the one hand it is very necessary that a woman should be protected against a brutal or dangerous husband, Court should not deprive a husband of the society of his wife on the ground of occasional lapses and unless something more than occasional lapses is established, or unless it is established that there has been grave injury or any real danger, a Court cannot find that cruelty in the legal sense exists. In this particular case the evidence falls far short of establishing legal cruelty.

I dismiss this appeal. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondent.

Held, that the intention of the parties was that the document should be presented to the Court in order that a decree should be passed by the Court in accordance therewith, and that, therefore, it was a petition addressed to the Court and as such did not require registration. [p. 677, col. 1.]

A compromise is not unlawful within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, merely because it deals with matters not included in the claim. First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Ludhiana, dated the 22nd January 1915.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Appellant.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar and Lala Kanshi Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Ludhiana, refusing to record an agreement of compromise and to pass a decree thereon under the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. Hari Chand, plaintiff-appellant, brought a suit for possession of property on the ground that he was the adopted son of Jiwan Mal, deceased, and the 16th November 1914 was fixed by the Court for recording evidence; but on the 23rd of October an official of the Zira Tahsil in the Ferozepore District produced in the Court a razinama said to have been attested by the parties in the presence of the

HARI CHAND v. MAGHI MAL.

Tahsildar of Zira which he said he had been ordered by the said Tahsildar to produce. One of the parties to this document, viz., Chiman Lal defendant was not present on that day, but he appeared subsequently and said that he had signed the compromise under undue influence. He made other objections also and the Court framed the following issues :—

1. Did the defendant sign the razinama under undue influence ?

2. If not, should it be considered defective in any other way?

The Court after recording evidence held that the defendant had not established the plea of undue influence, but refused to act on the compromise on two grounds ; (1), that it had not been presented by the parties in Court in the first instance but had been presented to the Tahsildar who forwarded it to the Court; and (2) that the document required registration. As the document had not been registered the Court held that it was not a lawful agreement within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. With regard to the first ground mentioned above, it is now admitted that the mere fact that the document was sent to the Court by the Tahsildar makes no difference. The document was actually received by the lower Court which proceeded to enquire into its validity. All the parties admitted having executed the agreement, although Chiman Lal defendant pleaded undue influence and raised various other objections which were said to render the agreement unlawful. The lower Court says that it bases its view as to whether the document required registration upon the principles discussed in Murli Dhar v. Gobind Ram (1) and Khair-ul-Nisa v. Bahadur Ali (2). In the latter case the compromise affected immovable property over Rs. 100 in value, was signed by the parties, attested by witnesses and stamped with an eight-annas Court-fee stamp and addressed to the Court setting forth the names of the parties and the nature of the claim and was filed in Court. The Court thereupon examined the parties, who repeated in full detail all that was set forth in the document and concluded by expressly requesting it to dismiss the suit in accordance with the terms of the document. The Court accordingly wrote an order reciting the said terms and dismissed the suit as prayed. It was held that this document did not require registration under section 17 (b) of the Registration Act and was admissible in evidence; because (a) it was a mere application to the Court informing it of the terms of the agreement entered into by the parties out of Court and as such neither created nor declared rights so as to require registration, and (b) it was submitted to and acted upon judicially by the Court and was in itself a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration. This ruling was followed in Murli Dhar v. Gobind Ram (1). In the present case the document in question is stamped with an eight-annas Court-fee stamp and is headed tasfianama ba adalat District Judge, Ludhiana. It commences by describing the parties in detail and saying that they had various disputes between themselves and that certain property in the possession of Maghi Mal and Chiman Lal defendants, shall be given to Hari Chand plaintiff. It then goes on to deal with several matters such as the realization of the outstanding debts, etc., and concludes with the following words : Lihaza yeh tasfianama likh diya keh bamujab iske digri bahaq Hari Chand mudai barkhilaf Maghi Mal wa Chiman Lal muda alehien jaidad munlarja bala ki jiski tashrih Hari Chand mudai ko deni ki upar karigai hai bila kharcha adalat dijawe.

In our opinion this document was clearly intended to be of the nature of a petition addressed to the Court which set forth the terms of the agreement come to between the parties and was to be presented in Court in order that a decree should be passed in Hari Chand's favour against Maghi Mal and Chiman Lal in regard to certain properties specified therein. In the case reported as Khair-ul-Nisa v. Bahadur Ali (2), the terms of the document then in dispute were set forth and there was then also no distinct prayer to the Court to dismiss the suit. It is not necessary that there should be a distinct prayer to this effect. All that is necessary to state is what the intention of the parties to the deed is. In our opinion there can be no doubt that in the present case the intention was that the document should be presented in the Court and that a decree should be passed by the Court in accordance therewith. We, therefore, hold that the document was a petition addressed to the Court and as such does not require registration.

In regard to undue influence, the decision of the Subordinate Judge is somewhat summary and other objections as to the compromise having been unlawful have not been disposed of. One point urged before us by Lala Kanshi Ram, Counsel for the respondents, was that the compromise was unlawful because it dealt with matters not included in the claim. Rule 3 of Order XXIII expressly provides for such a case, for it lays down that the Court on being satisfied that there has been a lawful agreement shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit. What the Court then would have to do would be to see how far the compromise relates to the matters in suit. It can then pass a decree in regard to those matters and should not pass a decree in regard to anything else. The main question for decision is whether Chiman Lal consented to the compromise and if so is it for any other reason unlawful.

We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Court remand the case thereto for re-decision of the above question after consideration of the evidence on the record and the objections put in by Chiman Lal. We note that the parties closed their evidence in the lower Court and we see no reason why they should be allowed now to produce further evidence. At the same time we think that the Tahsildar who is said to have received the razinama and forwarded it to the Court should be examined as to what took place in his presence. We direct accordingly that his evidence should be recorded provided that either of the parties desires that this should be done. Costs of this Court will be costs in the case.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 80, 2 (2), 97—Suit against public servant—Notice, necessity of—Preliminary decree, what is—Appeal.

Plaintiffs sued defendant, the Bench Clerk of a Sub-Divisional Judge, for the recovery of a sum of money which they alleged had been lost through his carelessness in losing or concealing an application for the execution of a decree, which became time-barred through the loss.

Held, that the suit could not be instituted without giving the defendant a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 678, col. 2.]

The adjudication referred to in the definition of a decree in section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code is an adjudication granting or refusing any of the reliefs claimed in the plaint and embodied in a formal declaration. [p. 678, col. 2.]

The decision in a suit that a notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code was necessary before the institution of the suit does not amount to a preliminary decree, where the plaintiff alleges that he has given notice, and the decision is not, therefore, appealable. [p. 678, col. 2.]

Mr. C. J. S. Pillay, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Maung Gyi, was the Bench Clerk of the Sub-Divisional Judge, Yamethin. The appellants sued him for the recovery of a sum of money they alleged they had lost through his carelessness in losing or concealing an application for an execution of a decree, which became time barred through the loss. They asserted in the plaint that about the 10th February 1915 they sent the defendant, Maung Gyi, a notice under section 80, Code of Civil Procedure, but denied that any notice was necessary. The receipt of the notice was not admitted, and a preliminary issue was fixed as to whether such notice was necessary or not. The Sub-Divisional Judge decided that it was and on appeal the decision was upheld. The date of the decision of the Sub-Divisional Judge was the 19th January, and the 7th February was fixed for the hearing of evidence. On the 5th February, the appeal was filed and was decided the same day. On the 7th, the appellant failed to produce any evidence and their suit was dismissed under Order XVII, rule 3. The final order was one rejecting the plaint under Order VII, rule 11 (d). The rule did not apply to the case, as there was no statement in the plaint from which it appeared that the suit was barred by law. The District Court dismissed the appeal. In his judgment the District Judge pointed out that Order XVII, rule 3, had no application to the case as the hearing had not been adjourned at the instance of the appellants, but at the same time he said that the appellants had no valid excuse for not producing their evidence on the date fixed for hearing.

The appellants appeal to this Court on the ground that there has been a substantial error in the procedure of the Sub-Divisional Court in not granting an adjournment on payment of costs for the issue of subpoenas to their witnesses after the dismissal of the appeal on the 5th February. Two other points have been argued at the hearing: (1) whether notice was necessary to Maung Gyi under section 80, Code of Civil Procedure, and (2) whether the lower Appellate Court had power to decide the point, as the decision of the preliminary issue was not, it is contended, a decree. As regards the latter points, I am of opinion that the lower Appellate Court erred in entertaining the first appeal.

Decree is defined in section 2 (2), Code of Civil Procedure, as the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit, and the decree may be either preliminary or final. In the present case there was no formal expression of adjudication, and none was ever asked for and refused. Undoubtedly if the expression "matters in controversy" be interpreted in its widest sense, it would include every question in dispute between the parties. The result of such an interpretation would be that the parties would be bound to appeal under section 97 of the Code against every issue that was decided against them in the course of the trial, and litigation would be prolonged indefinitely. Order XV, rule 3, provides that where the parties are at issue on some question of law or fact and issues have been framed, if the Court is satisfied that no further argument or evidence than the parties can at once adduce is required upon such of the issues as may be sufficient for the decision of the suit, the Court may proceed to determine such issues, and if the finding thereon is sufficient for the decision, may pronounce judgment accordingly whether the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, or the final disposal of the case, provided that where the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, the parties or their Pleaders are present and none of them objects. Under section 33, a decree must follow on the judgment. A decree of this kind may be either a final or preliminary decree: it is based on some preliminary point or points that are held to govern the whole case. Besides this Order XXI, rules 12-18, specify cases where a preliminary decree can be passed. If these provisions are borne in mind, it will be seen that the adjudication referred to in the definition of a decree is an adjudication granting or refusing any of the reliefs claimed in the plaint, and embodied in a formal declaration. All that the decision of the Sub-Divisional Judge amounted to was to declare that the notice was necessary. The appellants said that notice had been given, and an appeal against the Sub-Divisional Judge's decision was clearly premature.

With reference to the necessity of notice, I have no doubt that the Courts below were right in affirming it. Maung Gyi is a public officer and he received the application for execution in that capacity. In the absence of the Judge, paragraph 554, Upper Burma Courts Manual, provides that applications shall be received by a clerk, whose duty it is to note on the application the date of receipt.

There is certainly no proof on the record that notice was ever sent to Maung Gyi of the suit. The question is whether the lower Courts were right in dismissing the suit without giving the appellants a further opportunity for calling evidence. The only excuse given for failing to apply for summonses for witnesses is that the plaintiffs appellants were appealing to the District Court. They did not ask the Sub-Divisional Judge to stay the case pending the result of the appeal, which was only filed two days before the case came on for hearing, and was summarily rejected. I am of opinion that the excuse was a very weak one and that the appellants ought to have had their witnesses in attendance. They had ample time for applying for the issue of summons. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 15th March 1916.

Mr. A. K. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganesh Dutta Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it has been found as a fact that the appellant without probable or reasonable cause informed a Magistrate that the respondent had committed theft in his house. In consequence of that information an enquiry was made by the Police. The respondent's house was searched and the case was reported by the Police to be untrue as against the respondents. The Courts below have awarded the respondent Rs. 20 as damages for the injury caused by the house search. Against this decision the defendant appeals,

It is urged that inasmuch as no summons or warrant was issued to the respondents they suffered no damage in that no proceedings were actually instituted against them and in support of this view the case of Golap Jan v. Bhola Nath Khetry (1) is quoted. It is to be noted that in that case reference is made to cases in which there has been malicious arrest and malicious search. It is argued for the appellant in this case that there was no malicious search. There is no evidence on the record to show that the appellant asked the Police to search the respondent's house, but it is a common rule of law that where a certain result is the inevitable consequence of a certain action, the party guilty of the action is responsible for the result. A complaint of theft to responsible authority must inevitably result in the search of the house of the person accused of the offence. A search caused by a malicious complaint is, therefore, a malicious search. The party responsible for the malicious complaint is responsible for damages resulting from the malicious search.

The appeal on the main ground, therefore, fails.

The learned Vakil for the appellant next urges that the Munsif has erred in giving the plaintiff costs on the full amount claimed that is Rs. 280 when the damages actually awarded were Rs. 20 only. In view of the fact that the defendant maintained throughout the proceedings that complaint was true, there is clearly nothing improper in the exercise of the Munsif's discretion with regard to costs. The appeal fails in this respect also.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLANTS AND RESPONDENT No. 4—

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110, O. XLV, r. 3—Privy Council, appeal to—Certificate, conditions for grant of—Easement, decree as to, rights of—Value of subject-matter—Value of claims or right affected—‘Substantial question of law,’ meaning of—‘Property’ in section 110, para. 2, meaning of.

Where the subject-matter of a suit is an alleged easement right, which is negatived by the final decree of the High Court, the real value of that right, for the purpose of an appeal to the Privy Council under the first paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, can be properly ascertained only on the basis of the detriment or injury which the party claiming the right would sustain by its being negatived. And where the actual detriment or injury caused does not amount to Rs. 10,000, it is not a fit case for the grant of a certificate under paragraph 1 of section 110, Civil Procedure Code [p. 681, col. 1.]

Paragraph 2 of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, is intended to extend the privilege given by the first paragraph only to cases where a claim regarding rights of Rs. 10,000 or upwards in value is involved indirectly, though not directly. The second paragraph means that the suit must, to satisfy its conditions, involve rights and claims to property which rights and claims are worth Rs. 10,000 and upwards, not that the rights affect properties whose value is Rs. 10,000 and upwards. [p. 681, cols. 1 & 2.]

Under paragraph 3 of section 110, the case must involve a question of law of general interest or importance, and not the application of the law to the particular facts of the case. [p. 681, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The word ‘property’ in the second paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, means rights in property inferior to full ownership where such inferior rights alone are the subject-matter in dispute. [p. 681, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J.—When some subsidiary interest, such as an easement of inconsiderable value attached to property of great value, is in dispute, the value of the property affected rather than the value of the subject-matter of the suit should determine the right of appeal. The claim must be one “to or respecting property” of Rs. 10,000 in value, not a claim merely affecting property of such value. [p. 682, col. 2.]

Petition, presented under Order XLV, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying for the grant of a certificate enabling the petitioners to appeal to His Majesty in Council, against the decree of the High Court in Second Appeal No. 1198 of 1913, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Appeal Suit No. 891 of 1911, Original Suit No. 24 of 1909, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Srivilluputtur.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—This is an application by the plaintiffs (who were respondents before us in Second Appeal No. 1198 of 1913) for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the judgment of this Court which reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga and dismissed the plaintiffs’ suit. The application for leave is based on the ground that the decree of this Court relates to a subject-matter whose value was Rs. 10,000 or upwards, in the Court of first instance and the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is also of the same value and that, therefore, the application fulfils the requirements of the first paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code. It is further alleged that the decree involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value, and hence it further or in the alternative, satisfies the requirement of the second paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code. It is finally contended that even if neither of the above requirements is fulfilled, the application satisfies the conditions of paragraph 3 of section 110 Civil Procedure Code, namely, that there is a substantial question of law involved in the suit on which it is advisable that there should be a pronouncement by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

It may be remarked that in the plaint, the subject-matter in dispute in the suit is valued at Rs. 300 for purposes of jurisdiction. The Court-fee paid on the plaint is Rs. 11 8 0 which would cover a subject-matter of a value of about Rs. 140 only. No doubt, the value for the purpose of calculation of Court-fees and the value fixed for the purpose of jurisdiction in respect of claims for declarations and injunctions do not afford in all cases the proper criteria for finding out the value of the subject-matter in dispute for purposes of ascertaining whether the requirements of the first paragraph of section 110 are satisfied. Now the subject-matter in dispute, in this case is the right of the plaintiffs to have the water of the Thalaigidanga pond and of the channel B for the irrigation of their fields. The real value of that right can be properly ascertained only on the basis of the detriment or injury which the plaintiffs would suffer if that right is negatived as it has been. The affidavit in support of the application for leave mentions in paragraphs 14, 15 and 16, that the plaintiffs have suffered (either by the decreased value of the lands or by the decrease of the annual average income) an injury whose pecuniary equivalent amounted to very much more than Rs. 10,000. But the finding of the District Munsif to whom this question was referred by this Court for his opinion which we accept) is that the actual detriment or injury caused to the plaintiffs does not amount to Rs. 10,000 and is negligible so far as pecuniary value is concerned. It seems to me, therefore, that so far as the first paragraph of section 110 is concerned, this case does not fulfil the requirements thereof.

Then Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar argued that the requirements of the second paragraph are fulfilled because though the subject-matter of the suit and the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be less than Rs. 10,000 in value, the decree of this Court involves a claim "respecting" irrigation of lands which lands are worth more than a lakh of rupees. If the word 'property' in the second paragraph of section 110 be given the widest meaning and if the word 'respecting' is also given a very wide interpretation, the above argument has no doubt much force. But in construing the word 'property' in the second paragraph, we cannot lose sight of the first paragraph of section 110 to which the second is an alternative. I think 'property' in the second paragraph of section 110 means rights in property inferior to full ownership where such inferior rights alone are the subject-matter in dispute. Hence the second paragraph means that the suit must, to satisfy its conditions, involve rights and claims to property which rights and claims are worth

Rs. 10,000 and upwards. I am fortified in this view by the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. and Mr. Justice Russel in De Silva v. De Silva (1). The case in Ajuas Kooer v. Musammatt Luteefa (2) also lends support to this view as being the only reasonable view of the law on this point. No doubt the provisions of the second paragraph of section 110 had not been enacted on the date of that decision, but I think the second paragraph only intended to extend the privilege given by the first paragraph (in so far as it enabled an appeal to be filed even though the dispute directly involved in the litigation sought to be taken up to the Privy Council was less than Rs. 10,000) only to cases where a claim regarding rights of Rs. 10,000 or upwards in value is involved indirectly, though not directly. Whether directly or indirectly involved, on the question, however, as to what is the thing which should be Rs. 10,000 or upwards in value so as to justify an appeal to the Privy Council, I think that the case in Ajuas Kooer v. Musammatt Luteefa (2) furnishes an authority which is entitled to great respect.

Coming to the third paragraph of section 110, I have considered in the case in Ayya Raghunatha v. Thirumalai Echambadi (3) the question as to what should be the nature of the substantial point of law of general interest involved which would justify a certificate being granted under Order XLV, rule 3, last clause of subsection 1 read with section 109, clause (c) and the last paragraph of section 110. In this case, the only questions of law really involved seem to come under a few heads, one of them being whether Oldfield, J., and myself were right in stating in our first judgment in this case that no plea of lost grant was put forward by the plaintiffs. The other questions as to the extent of the right of the Government to regulate the flow of water for irrigation and as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a prescriptive right by sufficiently long enjoyment are questions which (so far as they involve questions of law) have been considered in several cases both by the Privy Council and by this High Court and I do not think that any new question is involved in this case which makes it desirable to have a fresh pronouncement from their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar argued that the persistence and keen fighting spirit displayed by both his clients and their opponents in this litigation show that large substantial interests are really involved in the suit, substantial both as regards the pecuniary value of the interests and the legal questions of general importance involved. I am not, however, satisfied that the persistence and keenness may not be due more to sentimental considerations and to the not uncommon spirit of factious rivalry between land-holders of neighbouring villages. I would, therefore, refuse this application and dismiss it with costs.

SPENCER, J.—On the first point, it is clear that the subject-matter in dispute in this case is not of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards. It was found by both the lower Courts, whose decisions of fact are binding on this Court in second appeal, that no material diminution of water supply to which the plaintiffs were entitled had been caused by the defendant's acts, and that no damage had been caused thereby to the plaintiffs' lands. I think that the extent to which the property would be deteriorated in value by the decision of this Court remaining unreversed as the proper criterion by which the value of the subject-matter of this suit should be tested. [See Ajnas Koor v. Musammatt Luteefa (2).]

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar, however, argues on the second point that the case falls within the words of the second part of the section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the "decree or final order involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value." In De Silva v. Silva (1) an extreme case was suggested of a suit for a share of the value of Rs. 100 in an estate of the value of Rs. 10,000 being taken to the Privy Council. It was considered by the Court that if such an interpretation were placed upon the section, it would defeat the object of the section which is to prevent small claims from going to the Privy Council. I consider that it was not intended by the Legislature that claims of trifling value should be taken up to the Privy Council unless the property directly or indirectly involved in the result of the litigation is of Rs. 10,000 in value or upwards, and unless some substantial question relating to the right, title and interest in such property is directly or indirectly decided thereby. I do not think it can have been intended that when some subsidiary interest, such as an easement of inconsiderable value attached to property of great value, is in dispute, the value of the property affected rather than the value of the subject-matter of the suit should determine the right of appeal. The claim must be one "to or respecting property" of Rs. 10,000 in value, not a claim merely affecting property of such value.

Thirdly, I am not satisfied that any question of law of general interest or importance is involved in this case. What the Judges had to consider was rather the application of the law to the particular facts of the case that was before them. I, therefore, agree in refusing the leave to appeal.

Certificate refused.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885) s. 30, sub-sec. (b)—Suit for enhancement of rent on ground of rise in prices of staple food crops—Evidence—Landlord, whether bound to prove price of crops at inception of tenancy.

In a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground that there has been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops during the currency of the present rent, it is not incumbent upon the landlord, in order to enable him to get a decree for increased rent under the provisions of section 30, sub-section (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to prove by positive evidence what was the value of the staple food crops at the date of the inception of the tenancy in order to enable the Court to compare that value with the current list of prices kept by the Government under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 683, col. 2.]

BHUDHAR CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY v. NANDA LAL ROY.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Pergannas, dated the 5th August 1915, modifying that of the Settlement Officer, 24-Pergannas, dated the 6th April 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff sued for enhancement of rent on the ground that there has been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops during the currency of the present rent. (Refers to section 30 (b), Bengal Tenancy Act). The learned Judge has erred in law in asking the plaintiff to prove the price of staple food crops at the date of the beginning of the tenancy. Where an enhancement is claimed on the ground of a rise in prices, the Court shall compare the average prices during the decennial period immediately preceding the institution of the suit with the average prices during such other period as it may appear equitable and practicable to take for comparison. That is the rule laid down in section 32, Bengal Tenancy Act and that section has got to be read along with section 30 (b) in this case. (Refers also to section 37, Bengal Tenancy Act). It is not possible for the landlord to prove the prices of staple food stuffs in 1848. The learned Judge has wrongly omitted to read section 30 (b) with sections 32 and 37 Bengal Tenancy Act.

Huro Prosad Roy v. Womatara Debee (1) points out the difficulties of the case. The Judge has found that there has been a rise in price for the last 25 years, still he has not decreed on enhancement of rent.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a judgment of the learned District Judge of the 24 Pergannas, dated the 5th August 1915, modifying the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer of the same District. The suit was brought by the plaintiff for enhancement of rent on the ground that there had been a rise in the average local prices of staple food crops during the currency of the present rent. The tenancy, as found by the learned Judge, was created in the year 1848, and the view that the learned Judge has taken is this, that in order to enable a landlord to claim an increased rent under the provisions of section 30, sub-section (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord must prove by positive evidence what was the value of staple food crops at the date of the inception of the tenancy so that the Court could compare those prices when so proved with the current list that is kept by the Government under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act and decide whether the landlord should or should not have an increase of rent. That seems to me to be an impossible view to take. First of all, it is not workable. Secondly, all these tenancies came into existence earlier than 1848 and it is quite impossible for a landlord to undertake to prove what were the local prices of staple food crops at the inception of the tenancy. The learned Judge ought not to have confined himself to this one section. If he had referred to the Act he would have seen what the Courts do in a case that came under section 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 32 coupled with section 37 show quite clearly what the Judge has to do and the limit of the time within which rent can be enhanced. There is no difficulty in a case like this. It was never intended that the landlord should be bound to prove what the local prices in the year 1848 were and the Court should compare those prices with the local prices in the year 1915. Evidence as to the local prices in the year 1848 may not be available now. It is highly possible that such records do not exist. That is a matter not provided for in section 32 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court for the learned Judge there to re-hear the appeal having regard to the observations that have already been made. The learned Judge will deal with the costs of the parties when he re-hears the appeal.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, dated the 24th January 1916, decreeing the claim.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ram Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, giving the upper India Bank, Limited, Delhi, a decree for Rs. 200 on account of rent against Abdul Karim defendant-petitioner. Certain properties situated in Delhi and belonging to an insolvent were sold by the Official Assignee of Bombay on the 4th October 1914 and were purchased by the Bank of Upper India. The latter leased it to the defendant on the 29th November 1914, for four months at a rent to Rs. 50 per mensem. The defendant denied the claim saying that he had never been put in possession of the property leased and had got possession of one stable only. The lower Court referred to section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act wherein it is laid down that the lessor is bound at the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property, and held that the plaintiff in the present case was not bound to put the defendant in possession because the latter never asked the former to put him in possession. The lower Court further held that the defendant is liable to pay rent because he had also been given the right to eject tenants, to enhance the rent and so on, and that he had only himself to blame if he did not recover the rent due from the Official Assignee or the tenants.

Mr. Moti Sagar on behalf of the petitioner has referred to the following authorities in support of the proposition that the lessor was bound to give the lessee possession of the property leased: Gour's Transfer of Property Act, (4th Edition), paragraph 2585, wherein it is said that the obligation of the lessor to deliver possession is absolute, and which he must perform notwithstanding the fact that the lessee can take legal proceedings to recover possession himself from the party in occupation.

Hurish Chunder Koondoo v. Mohinee Mohun Mitter (1), where it was held that a landlord cannot claim rent under a kabuliyat where the lessee has never obtained possession, delivery of possession being ordinarily a condition necessary for the maintenance of an action for rent.

Munnee Dutt Sing v. William Campbell (2), in which it was held that when a lessor gives a lease, he enters into an implied contract to give his lessee peaceable possession of the land which is the subject of the lease.

Narainsawmy Naidu v. Yerramali Ram Krishnaya (3), where it was held that if the land leased is already in possession of a third person to the knowledge both of the lessor and the lessee, it is the duty of the lessor to make it possible for the lessee to take possession by removing the third person from the possession thereof, even though no express request for the purpose is made by the lessee.

Shama Prasad Ghose v. Taki Mullik (4) in which it was held that the landlord was bound to do something more than merely sign the lease, and then say he is entitled to the rent. He is bound to put the tenant into possession of the land let to him and, unless and until he does this he is not entitled to the rent.

Mr. Ram Lal on behalf of the respondent has referred to Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (5), in the head-note of which the following occurs: "When the subject-matter of a lease is the rents and profits of land, the possession which a lessor, under section 108 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, is bound to give the lessee, is sufficiently given by giving notice of the lease to the ryots or other persons in occupation and requiring them to attorn and pay rent to the lessee." In connection with this it is pointed out that the Bank wrote letters to some of the tenants telling them they should pay rent to the defendant. It is, however, laid down in the same head-note that such notices to tenants will amount to delivery of possession, only where the transferor himself has possession to give, and not where he is himself out of possession as in the present case. The authorities quoted by Mr. Moti Sagar are ample in support of the proposition that the lessor in the present case was bound to put the lessee in possession of the property leased. It is quite clear from the evidence that the Bank itself was unable to get possession of the whole of the property. The evidence of Lala Sheo Narain shows that on account of a dispute between the insolvent, whose property was sold, and his sons, the tenants, after July 1914, refused to pay rent to any one. The Bank, therefore, was never in possession of the rents and profits of the property leased and the notices which it sent to the tenants were, therefore, not a sufficient delivery of possession to the lessee. It is clear from the Bank's letter of the 19th December 1915 to the address of the Official Assignee, Bombay, that three rooms of the property were at that time occupied by the Official Assignee for the storage of certain chairs belonging to the estate of the insolvent. It is also clear from the evidence on the record both oral and documentary, that a dispute was going on as to the ownership of the property, and the sons of the insolvent were claiming a share in it and were obstructing the Bank in getting possession. In all these circumstances, and having regard to the authorities cited, I am of opinion that the lessee is not liable to pay rent for such part of the property as he was not given possession of. He admittedly got possession of one stable or part of a stable, and it is not denied that he is liable to pay rent therefor.

I allow the revision and setting aside the order of the lower Court remand the case for re-decision, and for passing a decree against the defendant for so much rent as he is equitably liable to pay for that portion of the property of which he actually got possession. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court whatever the result of the case may be.

Revision allowed.

FAKIRA SINGH v. MAJHO SINGH.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya

Mr. Khurshed Hasnain, for the Appellant.

Rai Tribhuan Nath Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—This suit is brought by the plaintiff seeking a declaration that 5-dams share of the village of Muhammadpur Oro is his proprietary right and that the defendant No. 1 has no right to bring this share of the property in suit to sale in satisfaction of a debt due by the defendant No. 2 to the defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 2 was the original proprietor of this property. He contracted a debt with the defendant No. 1, and on the 5th December 1911, the defendant No. 2 sold the property in suit to the plaintiff who is his nephew for a consideration stated to amount to Rs. 995. This deed of transfer or sale was made by the defendant No. 2 to the plaintiff a fortnight after the defendant No. 1 had instituted a suit to recover the moneys due to him by the defendant No. 2. The consideration to support the deed dated the 5th December 1911 is set out in the deed; a part of it was to be applied in satisfaction of debts due by the defendant No. 2 to certain creditors, and part was to be paid to him in cash. It appears that at least two of the creditors specified in the deed were paid, and that the plaintiff retains still in his hands of the purchase-money the sum of Rs. 325 to discharge the claim of one Gendo Singh on foot of a mortgage-bond. The learned Munsif who tried the case came to the conclusion that the deed was a fraud on the creditors of defendant No. 2; that no consideration, in fact, passed to support the deed of sale, and that the transfer of the property was an attempt by the defendant No. 2 to defeat the rights of his creditors in the realization of their debts; the property in suit being the only immoveable property which the defendant No. 2 had. The learned District Judge, however, came to a somewhat different conclusion. The learned Judge was satisfied that the deed of sale was executed and that it was duly registered. The learned Judge thought, as I gather from his finding that proof of the foregoing facts cast the onus upon defendant No. 1 of showing and proving that the deed was a deed executed by the defendant No. 2 with the intent of defeating, delaying and hindering him as a creditor of the defendant No. 2. As a matter of law the learned Judge was quite right in throwing the onus on defendant No. 1 of proving that the deed of sale was intended as a fraud. However, the learned Judge in point of law held that section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act could not possibly apply to this case, because the intention of the defendant No. 2 in effecting the sale to the plaintiff was at best on the evidence only an intention to defeat the rights of one particular creditor and that consequently section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act had no application. The Judge seems inclined to hold, though he does not do so expressly, that the intention on the part of the defendant No. 2 and his other creditors was to effect a transfer of the property in suit in order to defeat the defendant No. 1's rights in realizing his debt. With great respect to the learned Judge we think he has misconstrued and misapplied the law embodied in section 53, clause (1) of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Judge considers that before section 53 can apply the intention must be shown to defeat the entire body of creditors but that merely to intend to defeat one creditor would not be within the provisions of section 53. With great respect to the learned Judge we think that he was entirely wrong in so holding. Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act applies even though only one creditor may have been defrauded and hindered in realizing his debt. The law on the subject is well summarised in the case of In re Le Moroney (1). This case is of great authority representing the considered opinion of seven Judges of the Court of Appeal in Ireland, and in addition this decision has been approved of by the Privy Council in the recent case reported as Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (2) as containing a most clear and able exposition of the Law of England and Ireland relative to the fraudulent transfers of property with intent to defeat creditors and which is made applicable to the law of India by virtue of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 53 in effect is only a re-enactment, in a more concise form, of the provisions of the Act of 10th Charles, Chapter I in Ireland, and the Statute of Elizabeth in England. The case cited is an authority not only on the construction of the English Statute of Elizabeth but also on the Irish Statute of Charles. The learned Master of the Rolls dealing with this very point says:

"Next Mr. Carton contended, in reference to the Statute of Charles, that the transaction before us was not intended to defeat creditors in the plural, but only one creditor, and Wood v. Dixie (3) was relied upon on this point. It is important in this connection to again consider what are the words of the Statute of Charles. Its intent is stated in the recital or preamble which I have already read, and which, no doubt, speaks of creditors. It was necessary there to use the plural and not the singular number. But when we come to the operative part of the section, the words used are not in the plural only; for we have "that person or persons, his or their heirs etc." and, therefore, no argument in favour of exempting the case of a single creditor can be deduced from the language of the Act. It would be the summit of absurdity to suppose that a mischief of this kind was to be struck at if two or more persons were affected, but that a single creditor was to be without protection."

That was the view taken in Ireland and to the same effect is the decision reported as Ishan Chunder Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sirdar (4) and there the Hon'ble Judges Sir Francis Maclean and Mr. Justice Banerjee say:

"Reading this section as a whole then, what it means, so far as it is applicable to a case like the present, is this, that where a transfer of immoveable property is made with intent to defeat or delay any creditor of the transferor it is voidable at his option."

Clearly, therefore, the learned District Judge was wrong in ruling that section

53 only applies when it can be established that there was an intent to defraud or defeat the general body of creditors from realizing their debts. The section applies with equal force and effect if a debtor disposes of his property with the intention of defeating one single creditor. But if the property of the debtor is transferred for consideration and bona fide to a purchaser and such transfer has the effect of putting the debtor's property out of the reach of the creditors as an asset capable of being realized to satisfy their debts nevertheless the transfer will be effective and the creditors will not be entitled to have the transfer set aside or declared void. I think it right to cite at some length the judgment of the Irish Court of Appeal because in the case cited the entire law on this subject is carefully considered and laid down. At page 57 of the report the Master of the Rolls says:

"Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, one of the grèatest Equity Judges who has sat in England in recent time, there said that in the construction of the Statute of Elizabeth it was not a ground for invalidating a bona fide sale, that it is made in order to defeat an intended execution. That is decided by Wood v. Dixie (3). The sale of property for good consideration, made bona fide, is, therefore, sufficient to defeat the execution of a judgment-creditor. And I have only to consider whether the sale was bona fide, and on that point every case stands on its own merits."

At page 62, the Lord Chief Baron Pales sets out very fully what the law is and says:

"Again, the right of the creditors is, not that the debtor shall not part with any of his property, but that no such parting shall be without consideration. If 'says Alderson, B. in Siebert v. Spooner (5), an equivalent is given, there is only a change in the nature of the property which the party has, but not a conveying of it away.' When, therefore, there is a bona fide sale for value of part of the property of the debtor really intended to have effect and operation between the parties to it, the right of the creditors is not invaded. No doubt the property sold has ceased to be available for their demands, but in lieu of it, there has been substituted the consideration for the sale, which may be assumed to be a substantial equivalent. Such a sale, therefore, would not be a fraud within the Statute, merely because it was made with the express intent to defeat or delay the execution of a creditor. Were there nothing more in the case, the consideration would remain capable of being made available, not under the intended execution but by some one or other of the modes known to the law, and, therefore, in such a case, there would not be a fraud within the Statute. This was the ground of the decisions in the only other cases cited by the appellant on this branch of the argument, viz., Wood v. Dixie (3) and Hyle v. Salcon Omnibus Co. (6). It is to be observed, however, that the decision in Wood v. Dixie (3) goes no further than determining that an intent to defeat a particular creditor in the case of a bona fide sale for value, does not per se and as a matter of law, render the conveyance fraudulent. If, however, in such a case, the intent were not only to sell the property, but forthwith to abscond with the proceeds, so as in effect to withdraw the property from the fund available for the creditors without providing an equivalent. I should entertain no doubt that in such a case there would be an intention to defraud creditors, which, if the purchaser had notice of, would avoid the sale."

That appears to me to be a very clear and accurate exposition of the law on this subject. Thus in this particular case if the learned Judge on re-consideration is satisfied that there was a bona fide sale duly intended to be acted upon between the parties, and that the property was to pass from the defendant No. 2 without any reservation to the plaintiff and the plaintiff was to pay good and valuable consideration for the property, then even though it may have been intended to defeat the rights of the defendant No. 1 in the realization of his debt, the defendant No. 1 would not be entitled to a declaration that the deed of sale was voidable as a fraud on him as a creditor of defendant No. 2. We think that in order to arrive at a right conclusion on these points, which have not been considered, that it is necessary to remand the case to the learned Judge. It will be unnecessary for him to consider whether the deed was duly executed and duly registered; that has already been determined but we do think in the light of the evidence that the Judge should bring his mind to bear on the facts and to ascertain whether the deed was a deed for valuable consideration; and whether it was a deed bona fide between the parties. If he so holds then, in our opinion, in point of law he should grant the plaintiff the relief he seeks. If, on the other hand, the learned Judge holds that the deed is not bona fide; that it is lacking in reality; and that it was merely a colourable transaction designed and intended to defeat the rights of the defendant No. 1 as a creditor of the defendant No. 2, and that no consideration, in fact, passed that then he ought to dismiss the plaintiff's suit. We remand the case in entirety and having given our opinion as to what the law is we leave it to the learned Judge to decide the facts accordingly.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the costs will abide the result of the final determination of the suit.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 424, 367—Appellate Court, Criminal—Judgment, contents of.

The judgment of a Criminal Appellate Court must show that the Court has fully considered the evidence on both sides and the pleas raised in appeal and that its conclusions are well supported by reasons.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Hardoi, dated the 22nd March 1916, upholding that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Hardoi, dated the 26th February 1916.

Babu Hargobind Das, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Beni for revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Hardoi, rejecting his appeal from an order requiring him to give security for his good behaviour under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The first ground urged in support of this application is that the judgment of the District Magistrate who heard the appeal of the applicant is not a judgment as required by law, and does not show that he had fully considered the evidence on both sides and the pleas raised before him. The judgment of the District Magistrate passed on the 22nd of March 1916 is as follows:—"There is no reason to reject the evidence of the many persons of position who prove appellant's general reputation as a thief. I dismiss the appeal." In support of this contention reliance is placed on the cases of Sarwan v. Emperor (1) and Lal Behari v. Emperor (2). In my opinion these cases show that the District Magistrate should have written something more than what he did actually write in his judgment and that the judgment written by him does not fulfil the requirements of law and does not show that he had fully considered the evidence on both sides and the pleas raised in appeal. In this view of the case it is not necessary to discuss and enter into other pleas. In my opinion it is necessary that this case should be re-heard according to law, and for this purpose it is necessary to set aside the order of the District Magistrate. I, therefore, set aside the order passed by the District Magistrate on appeal and direct that the case be transferred to the District Magistrate of Lucknow, who will pass a judgment according to law after re-hearing the appeal on the merits.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 353—Public servant carrying out order of Court made under repealed Act—Assault—Offence—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 35—Delivery of possession to agent.

Where a Court has jurisdiction to order delivery of possession of certain property, the mere fact that it purports to do so under the authority of a repealed Act will not take away its jurisdiction, nor deprive the process-server of the protection which the law gives to a public servant acting under the orders of a Court of competent jurisdiction. [p. 690, col. 1.]

A process-server who was not wearing his official badge was, while carrying out the orders of a Court of competent jurisdiction, assaulted by the accused. He had announced that he was carrying out Government order:

Held, that the accused were guilty of an offence under section 353 of the Penal Code. [p. 690, col. 2.]

Under the provisions of Order XXI rule 35, of the Civil Procedure Code delivery of possession can be made to any person orally authorised by the decree-holder to take possession, even though he does not hold a power-of-attorney from the latter. [p. 690, col. 2.]

SUJAN SINGH v. JIA LAL.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Nagpur, dated the 23rd June 1916, confirming the conviction and sentence passed by the Tahsildar and Magistrate, 2nd Class, Nagpur, on the 2nd June 1916.

Mr. P. R. Naidu, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants have been convicted under section 353 and section 147 of the Indian Penal Code. The following facts may be taken as found by the Courts below, and I see no reason to doubt their correctness. One Krishna Rao obtained a foreclosure decree against the applicants in 1913. He made two attempts to obtain possession in execution of that decree, but these were infructuous. On the 5th February 1916, a special process-server came to the village. The decree-holder sent for four ploughmen with ploughs for taking possession of the field. A message had already been sent to one at least of the accused, informing him that delivery of possession was about to be given. After the field had been ploughed by the decree-holder's men, the accused turned up and resisted the delivery of possession. A fight followed, in which some of the decree-holder's men as well as some of the accused were injured. The process-server himself was assaulted.

It is contended that the warrant, having been issued on the printed forms of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, was defective. I cannot agree that the process-server had no authority to execute the warrant for this defect. The Court had jurisdiction to order delivery of possession, and the mere fact that it purports to do so under the authority of a repealed Act, will not take away its jurisdiction, nor deprive the process-server of the protection which the law gives to a public servant, acting under the orders of a Court of competent jurisdiction.

The argument that the process-server had no badge is so far correct, but upon the findings there is every reason to believe that the accused knew that he was a process-server. It will be noted that a message had been sent to one of them and all the accused arrived after the complainant's party had taken possession, and the process-server says that he announced that he was carrying out Government orders. This is a probable story, and has been accepted by the Courts below. I, therefore, see no force in this argument.

It is contended that the warrant so far as it directed delivery of the standing crops was illegal. But the Court that passed the order had jurisdiction to decide whether the standing crops should, or should not be delivered, and this jurisdiction is not lost, if a wrong order has been passed. In such a case, the party aggrieved can only appeal to the Court to vacate the alleged illegal order. I do not express any opinion as to whether this was an illegal order, but I have assumed it for the sake of argument only. I note that there was no attempt made to remove the standing crops by the decree-holder's party.

It is said that possession could not be delivered in the absence of the judgment-debtors. I know of no authority in support of this view. They were, as a matter of fact, sent for, and they did come, but they had no right to resist the process-server.

It is argued that possession could only be delivered to the decree-holder or his agent. I do not agree with this contention, unless the word agent includes any person orally authorized to take possession. The four ploughmen were certainly sent for that purpose by the decree-holder, though they held no power-of-attorney. Eventually the decree-holder signed a receipt acknowledging the fact of possession having been delivered to him. The last argument advanced is that the common object of the accused is not proved. But the common object is to be inferred from their conduct, and no reasonable person can doubt that the accused were acting in concert to prevent delivery of possession.

The application is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—
Refusal to allow accused to cross-examine complainant —Transfer.

SUJAN SINGH v. JIA LAL.

An application for transfer of a case was made on the ground that the accused had not been allowed to properly cross-examine the complainant and that certain orders and remarks recorded by the Magistrate clearly indicated that he had formed a strong opinion against the petitioner. It appeared that the Magistrate considered that the accused should be allowed to inspect certain bank books before cross-examining the complainant and the bank having objected to allowing the necessary inspection, the Magistrate passed an order on the 18th July 1916 directing the bank to give the accused's Counsel opportunity to inspect the necessary registers. On the 4th of August, however, in the absence of the accused's Counsel and without any reference to the previous order relating to the registers, the evidence of the complainant was closed. The complainant was then summoned as a witness by the defence but when Counsel wished to cross-examine him his request was refused:

Held, (1) that although the Magistrate's refusal may have been strictly legal, it was improper in the circumstances of the case and the Magistrate would have been well advised to have allowed at any rate a reasonable amount of cross-examination, especially when the prosecution raised no objection to such cross-examination: [p. 692, col. 1.]

(2) that inasmuch as the case had reached a very advanced stage, the charge having been framed and a certain amount of the defence evidence having been recorded, it could not be transferred but that the Magistrate should allow the accused to cross-examine the complainant after giving him an opportunity of examining the bank registers. [p. 692, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of the case Jia Lal v. Sujan Singh, pending in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, to some other competent Court.

Messrs. B. R. Puri and H. R. Bhandari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. Obbard, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for the transfer of a case under sections 420/467, Indian Penal Code, pending in the Court of Mr. Keough, Additional District Magistrate, Lahore. The reasons advanced for the transfer are detailed in the application and may be summed up as a general complaint against the conduct of the case by the Magistrate. It is said that the petitioner has not been allowed to properly cross-examine the complainant and that certain orders and remarks recorded by the Magistrate clearly indicate that he has formed a strong opinion against the petitioner. I have heard Mr. Puri in support of the application and Mr. Obbard has appeared on behalf of the complainant, the Crown being unrepresented.

The case is an old one; the trial before the Magistrate commenced on the 27th April 1916, the charge has been framed and a certain amount of the defence evidence has been recorded; and, therefore, it would only be under very exceptional circumstances that this Court would take the case out of the hands of the Magistrate. It has been urged that these exceptional circumstances exist and that this is a case in which this Court should exercise its power to transfer the case. After a careful consideration of the record of the proceedings and of what has been urged for and against the application I am forced to the conclusion that the petitioner has certainly got some grounds for complaint, though possibly more on account of the treatment by the Magistrate of the Counsel in the case than of the petitioner himself. It appears that at the initial stages of the trial Mr. Herbert was appearing for the complainant and joined with Mr. Puri, for the accused, in an application made to the District Magistrate, in which it was suggested that the case was more of a civil nature and it was prayed that permission to withdraw from the prosecution should be accorded. Mr. Keough in forwarding the file to the District Magistrate recorded a note to which my attention has been drawn. While I am not prepared to agree with the Counsel that Mr. Keough was wrong in expressing his opinion that the case was not of a civil nature, I certainly agree with him that his remarks regarding Mr. Herbert were wholly uncalled for and unnecessary. Had Mr. Herbert been given an opportunity I have no doubt he would have been able to justify his action; and Mr. Keough's surprise at Mr. Herbert's conduct was wholly irrelevant and should not have been expressed, even if felt. Again, on the 16th November 1916 when submitting the record to the District Magistrate on an application made under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, Mr. Keough recorded a report as required by the learned District Magistrate; he was no doubt perfectly within his province in contradicting the allegations made in the application, but in doing so it was incumbent on him to be accurate. In stating that paragraph D of the application was a glaring falsehood, he appears to have completely lost sight of his order dated the 18th May 1916, which shows that there was considerable foundation for the allegations made in the said paragraph D. The whole tone of the report indicates that Mr. Keough strongly resented the making of the application and went out of his way, in giving expression to this resentment, to make remarks which, in my opinion, Mr. Puri can justly take exception to—remarks which had no bearing on the question. Expressions such as are used by Mr. Keough can do no manner of good and must inevitably result in straining the relations between the Magistrate and the Counsel appearing before him.

In supporting this present application Mr. Puri stated that he found it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to appear before Mr. Keough after the way in which he had been treated. But I do not think that this in itself would be a valid reason for transferring the case. Mr. Keough has after all made comments on the Counsel on both sides and it cannot, therefore, be said that he has any particular bias against any particular one. It was then urged that the complainant had not been properly cross-examined, and it seemed to me that there is some force in this contention. Mr. Keough very rightly considered that the accused should be allowed to inspect certain bank registers before cross-examining Jia Lal; the bank seems to have objected to allowing the necessary inspection, and on the 18th July 1916 a strong and perfectly correct order was passed in which the bank was directed to give the accused's Counsel an opportunity to inspect the necessary registers. On the 4th August 1916, however, in the absence of the accused's Counsel and without any reference to the previous order relating to the registers the evidence of the complainant was closed. The complainant was then summoned as a witness by the defence and yet when Counsel wished to cross-examine him his request was refused. This refusal may have been strictly legal; but it was improper in the circumstances, and the Magistrate would have been well advised to have allowed, at any rate, a reasonable amount of cross-examination, especially when, as Mr. Obbard informs me, the prosecution raised no objection to such cross-examination. While, therefore, owing to the stage at which the case has reached I am not prepared to transfer the case, I consider it necessary in returning the records to the Magistrate to direct that the accused petitioner be allowed to cross-examine the complainant Jia Lal after the petitioner has been given an opportunity of examining the registers of the bank above alluded to.

Order accordingly.

The purpose of a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is merely to prevent a breach of the peace and if the Magistrate thinks that it is sufficient to prevent a breach of the peace to include in his proceeding only a portion of the land which is the subject of the Police report there is nothing to prevent him doing so. The rule that if a suit is brought only in respect of a portion of the land claimed a subsequent suit for the remainder might be barred is not applicable to proceedings under this section. JUDGMENT.—This is a motion asking for interference by this Court with an order passed in a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The first party is a purchaser of six-annas share of the proprietary right. His case was that the zirait land had been partitioned among the different proprietors and that certain plots out of the land in dispute had been allotted [to his share, that there had been a submergence on account of inundation by the river, that the plots had re-appeared and that he had settled them with tenants upon the batai system. The second party were the *raiya*s of the village, who claimed that the entire lands in dispute were parts of their occupancy holding. The Magistrate awarded possession to the first party—giving the first party in fact more than they claimed, that is to say, he gave them the entire land described in the order by which these proceedings were initiated.

The first ground taken before this Court is that the proceeding is without jurisdiction so far as a portion of the land is concerned which lies outside the district of Saran. The Magistrate professedly exercised jurisdiction only within the district of Saran. The order originating the proceedings described the northern boundary of the land in dispute to be the boundary of the village Chaki Sahagpur in the district of Muzaffarpur. So far, therefore, as this order which originated these proceedings is concerned there was no want of jurisdiction, for it is conceded that so far as the present land is concerned anything south of the boundary of the village of Chaki Sahagpur would be within the district of Saran and within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. I am asked, however, to infer from the evidence given by a Commissioner in the case who went to the spot that a portion of the land in dispute lay within the village of Chaki Sahagpur and, therefore, outside the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. My experience of the work of Commissioners especially in cases of village boundaries is not such as to justify me in saying that the evidence must necessarily be implicitly relied upon, and in any event the Magistrate himself has described the boundary of the disputed land as the boundary of the village of Chaki Sahagpur. His order, therefore, does not include any land situated within the village of Chaki Sahagpur; and if the petitioner has satisfied and is confident that he could satisfy any Court that any portion of the land is situated within the village of Chaki Sahagpur, this order will not imperil any possession he may have of that land.

Another ground contended is that only a portion of the land in respect of which disputes had arisen was made a subject of these proceedings. That is not a ground upon which, in my opinion, a High Court can interfere. The purpose of a proceeding under section 145 is merely to prevent a breach of the peace and if the Magistrate thinks that it is sufficient to prevent a breach of the peace to include in his proceeding only a portion of the land which is the subject of the Police report, there is nothing to prevent him doing so. The rule that if a suit is brought only in respect of a portion of the land claimed a subsequent suit for the remainder might be barred is not applicable. Another ground contended is that the Magistrate made a mistake in law in relying upon the ruling of Hemnath Dutt v. Ashgur Sindar (1), to the effect that if a portion of the holding of an occupancy *raiya*t is submerged and no rent is paid for it that portion must be taken to have been abandoned. There is no doubt a good ground for holding that that decision is no longer law so far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned, and that so far as the jurisdiction of this Court is concerned the decision is not correct in law. There is much to be said for this view and all that can be said for it was said by Mr. Justice Prinsep in the case of Obhoya Charan Bhooia v. Koilash Chunder Dey (2). But a mistake in law is not a ground upon which this Court can interfere with proceedings under section 145 unless the mistake goes to the jurisdiction. Another ground contended was that certain co-sharer proprietors were not made parties and in connection with this ground it was also contended that the first party has been awarded more than he claimed. It will be remembered that the first party claimed to be in exclusive possession of certain plots of the land in dispute. So far, therefore, as those plots

JUDGMENT.—The murder, which is the subject of this case, was perpetrated close to a well near a house, which had been built on land in the outskirts of the village Tikhanwadh for the victim of the murder given by his sister Musammāt Nandan and her husband. It seems that the family consisted of the victim Sham Singh, his brother Nand Singh (accused No. 2), resident of Mouza Malha, a village six kos from Mouza Tikhanwadh, and the sister aforesaid. The father of the family was one Dip Singh, who died four years ago leaving property. It is in evidence that Dip Singh favoured Sham Singh deceased and was on bad terms with Nand Singh and that he made a gift to Sham Singh of a large portion of his land, whereupon Nand Singh brought a suit and a sort of compromise was arrived at, under which Nand Singh was to get one-third of the produce during Dip Singh's lifetime, and thereafter, was to get half the property. That dispute was in this way composed; but about two years later an uncle Jit Singh died sonless. Nand Singh having taken possession of the whole of Jit Singh's estate Sham Singh brought a suit and got his share and also got a decree for Rs. 25 in connection with that case, which sum Sham

Singh recovered by execution in December 1915. A third dispute arose thereafter between these two brothers. Nand Singh had asked Sham Singh to put a wall between the two parts of the house and Sham Singh refused. Finally, Sham Singh was killed on the night between the 6th and 7th June 1916. The case for the prosecution is that the murder was done by Bhan Singh and Jamal Din at the instigation of Nand Singh; that Nand Singh wished to get rid of his brother Sham Singh, partly on account of resentment against him and, no doubt, partly also because, by getting rid of the sonless Sham Singh, Nand Singh would get the whole of the family property. Bhan Singh, one of the alleged murderers, is Nand Singh's wife's brother, and is apparently a man of very bad character. The case for the prosecution depends almost entirely upon the statement of this Bhan Singh, to whom a pardon was tendered and who has given a detailed story, first to Raghubir Singh, Magistrate, 1st Class, on the 16th June 1916, then to the Committing Magistrate on 10th July 1916, and lastly in the Sessions Court on 26th October 1916. Briefly stated, his story as to the actual murder and the abetment is, that Nand Singh bribed him by the promise of Rs. 500 to murder Sham Singh, and that he at first refused, but at last agreed and received in advance Rs. 299 in cash and a promise to wipe off Rs. 100 which Bhan Singh owed to him; that his courage failed him and he enlisted the help of Jamal Din, accused No. 1, who owed him Rs. 185, promising Jamal Din to cancel that debt and to pay him Rs. 65 more in cash; that, after this was arranged, the pair went to Sham Singh's house, found him in his courtyard near the well and murdered him, Jamal Din covering the victim's mouth with one hand and seizing his throat with the other and strangling him, while Bhan Singh held his legs; that in the course of the struggle the deceased managed to get hold of Jamal Din's right hand between his teeth and to make a serious bite; that Jamal Din released himself by striking Sham Singh with his fist, breaking two of his teeth, and that Bhan Singh hid Rs. 284 out of the Rs. 299 in a field under an acacia tree, but had not yet paid the remaining Rs. 65 to Jamal Din, when he was arrested by the Police.

NAND SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The assessors were unanimously of opinion that the accused were both guilty, and that Bhan Singh's story was substantially correct. The Sessions Judge convicted the pair, and sentenced both to death. They have appealed, and we have heard Mr. Asquith on behalf of Nand Singh and Mr. Nand Lal on behalf of Jamal Din.

The problem before us is whether considering the character of Bhan Singh and the nature of his statement and the circumstances of the case generally, the prosecution has produced sufficient corroboration of his story. The medical evidence is clear enough. Although in consequence of the decomposition of the body the doctor has not noticed any marks on the throat of the victim, yet there is otherwise sufficient foundation for his firm opinion that death was caused by asphyxia brought on by throttling and suffocation by closure of the mouth and nostrils. The doctor also noticed bruises on the lower lip and the fact that both central incisors of the lower jaw had been recently knocked out. We are satisfied, therefore, that the cause of the death was strangulation or suffocation. Further, we have the evidence of another doctor regarding the bite on the hand of Jamal Din and this is said to be probably a human bite. This also is corroboration of part of the prosecution story. Next we have P. W. No. 4, the deceased's sister, who says the two brothers were on good terms and who explains that Sham Singh became a faqir and that she and her husband gave him a site for a house and sank a well; also that Sham Singh used to practise medicine; and she stated in the first report that he was supposed to have some hundreds of rupees in his possession, and that perhaps the murder had been done for greed of money. Passing by evidence not connected with the actual murder or with the abetment, we have evidence (see P. Ws. Nos. 6, 22 and 24) which goes to show that the murderers did not go into the victim's house and that nothing had been disturbed in the house. Next P. W. No. 7 says that Sham Singh and Nand Singh were on very bad terms, and details quarrels between the brothers. P. W. No. 20, Baggu, also states emphatically that the brothers were on very bad terms and did not visit each other. P. W. No. 10, a zaildar, testifies to Bhana having pointed out where he had buried the Rs. 234 aforesaid, and P. W. No. 11 Bhola Singh, also a zaildar, corroborates this evidence. Then there is the evidence of P. W. No. 12 and P. W. No. 13 and Exhibit P. A, to show that Jamal Din owed Rs. 155 to Bhan Singh, and witnesses Nos. 14, 15, 16 and 17, who are what are usually called wajtakkar witnesses and whose evidence has been believed by the Sessions Judge to this extent that these men probably did meet two persons on the night of the murder, but probably did not recognise them as the two accused, not having known them before. In our opinion the view of the Sessions Judge that the identification is not satisfactory is sound; and though the learned Sessions Judge seems to think that, notwithstanding the absence of identification, their evidence is valuable as corroboration of the approver's story, it seems to us that it is not the sort of corroboration which the law requires, for it does not directly connect the two accused before us with the murder. It is just the kind of corroboration which the authorities say is not sufficient, for these persons' story, apart from their allegation of identification, if it be not believed, would be exactly the same, if the two persons they had met were other persons and not the two accused. Though two or three witnesses for the prosecution dilate upon the enmity existing between the two brothers, other witnesses go out of their way to say that there was no such enmity. There is also evidence (see P. W. No. 20 Baggu) that a few days before the murder Baggu saw Nand Singh at his own house counting out money to Bhan Singh, and some other evidence that the two men had been seen talking together. Lastly, we have some track evidence which we have carefully considered. The prosecution in argument did not lay any stress upon it, and we do not think that it is of any particular value.

It cannot be said that the corroboration contained in the evidence, of which a sketch has been given above, is very strong at the best, and in our opinion it is more than counterbalanced by an incident testified to by P. W. No. 29, Inspector of Police, who says that Bhan Singh, when he made his first confession to the Police, implicated as his accomplice not Jamal Din, whom he never mentioned at all, but two men called Mangal and Kalu. We have looked at the zinnis and we find a very long and elaborate version of the story, in which Mangal and Kalu figure as the co-adjutors. It appears that when the Police put it to Bhan Singh that Mangal was in Jail at Faridkote and that Kalu, a well-known dacoit, was absconding, Bhan Singh turned round and said that they were not in it at all, but that Jamal Din was his accomplice, and then he proceeded to mention for the first time the bite in the thumb as having been done by his victim. Jamal Din was promptly sent for, and it was found that he had a bite in his thumb. Now if it was quite certain that, until Jamal Din appeared on the scene after Bhan Singh's statement about him, no one knew that he had a bite in his thumb, there might be something to be said for Bhan Singh's story; but Jamal Din lives in the same village, and whether he is, as the prosecution say, an intimate friend of Bhan Singh or not, at least he was well known to Bhan Singh and had dealings with him, and it is not safe in these circumstances to conclude that the introduction of the story of the thumb by Jamal Din on that occasion was bona fide.

The accused produced some evidence, but it is hardly necessary to discuss it as, in our opinion, there is no sufficient corroboration of Bhan Singh's story. Even according to the Sessions Judge the only corroboration is, first, the fact that Nand Singh and Sham Singh were on unfriendly terms, secondly, that there had been communication between Bhan Singh and Nand Singh shortly before the murder, and thirdly, the so-called corroboration by P. Ws. Nos. 14 to 17 aforesaid, which, however, we consider of no value at all. This, in our opinion, is not sufficient, even if we add the circumstance that the murder does not seem to have been done for gain, for, considering the character of Bhan Singh and considering that he is the sort of man who is capable of first naming two persons such as Mangal and Kalu and then carefully turning round and implicating another man, it is impossible for us to have any sort of confidence in Bhan Singh's veracity. If he was strongly corroborated, and if that corroboration distinctly implicated the two accused in the murder and in the abetment directly, it might be possible to ignore the fact that Bhan Singh is by nature a liar, but in the presence of such scanty corroboration as we have here, we find it impossible to convict the accused.

For these reasons we accept these appeals and acquit both the appellants.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 367, 424—Appellate Court, judgment of, contents of—Finding, definite, necessity of.

A Court of Appeal dismissed a criminal appeal with the observation that the evidence for the prosecution was, on the whole, slightly stronger and that the story of the prosecution as regards probability was far more likely than the story set up by the defence:

Held, that the opinion expressed by the Court was not sufficient for a conviction in a criminal case and that unless the Court could come to some more definite opinion regarding the guilt of the accused, the latter ought to be acquitted. [p. 699, col. 2.]

Rule against the decision of the Additional District Magistrate, Dacca, dismissing an appeal from the order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Naraingunge, dated the 9th June 1916.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"The appellant has been convicted under section 456, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment. It is alleged that complainant awoke on being touched by some one, got up and seized him. He was recognised as the accused. Complainant's wife struck him with a dao. Then he got away. Appellant's case is that complainant deliberately struck him on the hand with a dao, because he had deposed against complainant before the Police in connection with a section 110 case, LAXMYA SHIDDAPPA v. EMPEROR.

"Complainant admits he is a 'dagi.' A great deal has been made of the question of the wound inflicted on appellant. The medical witness (D. W. No. 1) says he had an incised wound on the back of the left wrist, which was probably inflicted from in front. Why it should not have been inflicted from behind, I am quite unable to follow. It is perfectly easy to conceive a person's striking another on the back of the wrist from behind. It is a pity the doctor was not further cross-questioned on this point. However, the complainant's account of the wound is confused. In his first information he said the wound was inflicted on the back. In his deposition in Court, he says he does not know when his wife inflicted the cuts. His wife, a girl of 13, says she can't say when she hit him: and then, again, that she inflicted two cuts from behind the accused. All the prosecution witnesses, who came to the scene immediately after, say they saw blood marks in the hut and the investigating Sub-Inspector found marks also on the dao. It is quite conceivable that the complainant and his wife did not know, in the confusion, when they hit appellant, and the above inconsistencies are, I think, quite understandable, even the assertion that the blow was on the back and that there were two blows (as the lower Court observes, one may have missed). In support of the defence version of the wounding of appellant, we have one eye-witness and two witnesses, who came up just afterwards and were told by Kobbat that Mafjuddin had struck him.

"The evidence for the prosecution is thus, on the whole, slightly stronger, and the story, as regards probability, is far more likely.

"Under the circumstances, I see no reason to disbelieve the prosecution case. The appeal is dismissed and the finding and sentence affirmed. The appellant must be called upon to surrender and undergo the remainder of his sentence."

Babu Atulya Charn Bose, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Additional District Magistrate in giving his judgment said that the evidence for the prosecution was, on the whole, slightly stronger and that the story, as regards probability, was far more likely. This is not sufficient for a conviction in a criminal case and we think that unless he could come to some more definite opinion he ought to have acquitted the accused. We accordingly set aside his order and direct that the appeal be re-heard. The petitioner will remain on the same bail pending the re-hearing of the appeal.

Order set aside.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This is a case of some peculiarity inasmuch as the appellant has been convicted of murder on his own plea and has been sentenced to death, there being no evidence recorded in the Court of Session. The learned Judge below has explained very carefully and fully why he adopted the course of convicting the accused on his own plea, and it seems to me clear from the judgment that the learned Judge gave the matter much consideration and acted as he thought for the best in the circumstances of some novelty. Nor can it be said, at least in my opinion, that the learned Sessions Judge was definitely wrong in any point of law. Probably if his attention had been called to the practice of the Courts in such circumstances, he would have acted otherwise. That practice is defined by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. and Mr. Justice Russell in Emperor v. Chinia Bhika Koli (1), where it is laid down that "it is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case where the natural sequence would be a sentence of death". The learned Judge below points to section 271 of the Criminal Procedure Code and observes quite correctly that he was bound to record the accused's plea of guilty. The section, however, though it directs that the plea shall be recorded, does not direct that the accused shall be convicted thereon, but only that he may be so convicted, that is to say, it is left to the discretion of the presiding Judge in each particular case to determine whether in spite of the plea it is or is not desirable to enter upon the evidence. In the case before us the practical difficulty as entailed by the accused's conviction on his mere plea is obvious. For the question which we have to determine is, assuming that the appellant is guilty of the murder, whether the sentence of death should or should not be enforced. Now that is a question which could only be answered when the circumstances of the crime are known to us, and the circumstances of this crime are not known to us. It may be that there are cases of murder where the circumstances would be so clear that a Bench of this Court would have no difficulty in confirming the capital sentence on the accused's mere plea of guilty. But this is not such a case. In the Magistrate's Court there was, we understand, some evidence led with a view to the inference that the accused was of unsound mind, and that is the plea which is the basis of his present appeal to us. There is nothing on our record which could enable us to say whether that plea is substantial or groundless. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the crime itself was committed without any assignable motive, and, on the other hand, it is contended that there was some quarrel preceding the crime and that that quarrel led to the deceased's murder. It is precisely upon such points as these that we desire information in order to guide us to a decision whether the capital sentence is deserved. Was there a quarrel between the deceased and the accused prior to this offence, and, if so, what was its nature and by what interval of time did it precede the offence? These are questions upon which it is manifestly important to us to have an answer. They are, however, questions upon which on this record we have no answer. Therefore, in this particular case it seems to me that the learned Sessions Judge would have been better advised if he had taken the evidence available and I think that must now be taken in order that hereafter we may be in a position to decide rightly the important question which it is our business to decide.

I would, therefore, reverse this conviction and sentence and direct, as was done in Chinia's case (1), that the accused be tried in accordance with law notwithstanding his plea of guilty.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

U. P. Municipalities Act (I of 1900), s. 17—U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), retrospective effect of—Offence under old Act—Sanction under new Act, validity of.

A Municipal Board has power to grant sanction under the provisions of the U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916, for the prosecution of a person in respect of an offence committed under the Act of 1900 inasmuch as by section 17 of that Act a Municipal Board is a corporate body with a perpetual succession and a common seal and has power to do all things necessary for its constitution and can sue and be sued in its corporate name; and these powers have not been altered or limited by the Act of 1916. [p. 701, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Banda.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Bacha Lal has been convicted of an offence under section 165 of (1) 8 Bom. L. R. 240; 3 Cr. L. J. 337.

In re JIVRAJ DHANJI.

Local Act I of 1900 and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

The allegation against him is that he encroached upon a Municipal drain. What Bacha Lal appears to have done is that he made an erection on the side of the old drain. The breadth of the side of the drain on top of which the erection has been made is fourteen inches and the length of frontage is 76 feet 3 inches. Bacha Lal's defence was that he did no new work, he only repaired what was there before. The judgment is somewhat confused. I understand from it that Bacha Lal is not responsible for the whole of the erection that has been made on the top side of the drain. The learned District Magistrate says that "the view most favourable to him which I am on the evidence able to take is that the platform extended over the wall of the drain when he bought the property and that he only raised the front part of it some seven or eight inches over a breadth of about half a foot and a length of some 76 feet." This he did without the permission of the Municipal Board. The action would undoubtedly amount to alteration of the drain. The offence, however, appears to have been a highly technical one and I cannot help feeling that the learned District Magistrate has taken an extreme view of the case. It is certainly not a case in which the maximum penalty prescribed by law should have been enforced. In addition to this, however, it is raised on behalf of Bacha Lal that the conviction in any case is illegal as Act I of 1900 has been repealed and that the Municipal Board that came into existence in 1916 was not empowered to grant sanction for the prosecution of an offence which had been committed before that Board came into existence. The sanction for prosecution was given under the powers conferred by the Local Act II of 1916. I have carefully considered this plea and I hold that it is not entitled to weight. Section 17 of Act I of 1900 under which the Municipal Board was incorporated had by virtue of section 17 of Act I of 1900 the existence of a corporate body with a perpetual succession and a common seal. It was empowered to do all things necessary for its constitution and could sue and be sued in its corporate name. All the members of the Board in existence when Local Act I of 1900 was on the eve of expiring and Local Act II of 1916 came into existence would be one and the same Board and have the same powers, unless those powers had been expressly limited or altered by law. No such alteration or limitation has been pointed out to me. I allow the application so far that I reduce the fine of Rs. 50 to Rs. 5. Any portion of the fine paid in excess of Rs. 5 should be refunded.

Appeal allowed.

In re JIVRAJ DHANJI—ACCUSED.

City of Bombay Municipal Act (Bom. Act III of 1888), ss. 461 (o), 418—Bombay Municipal Bye-Laws, Ch. III, Bye-law 4, whether ultra vires—Measure, honest and current, but not verified, use of—Offence—Commissioner, duty of.

The fourth bye-law in Chapter III of the Bye-Laws framed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation, which prohibits the use of any measure which has not been duly verified by comparison with the standard measure, is beyond the powers vested in the Municipal Corporation under section 461 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, inasmuch as it purports to give the Municipal Corporation or the Commissioner far wider power than that conferred by section 418 of the Act. [p. 702, col. 2.]

Clause (o) of section 461 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act means no more than that the Corporation shall have power to pass bye-laws to prevent the practice of fraud by the use of measures which are false or defective with reference to the standard measures assumed to have been verified by the Commissioner as directed in section 418. But neither under section 418 nor under section 461 has the Corporation the power to say that in the private markets of the city no measure shall be brought into use unless it has already been verified by the Commissioner. Rather the provisions of the Act import that if the Commissioner has reason to suspect any particular measure which is current, his method of controlling it is to verify it as directed under section 418, and thereafter to secure that the measures of that denomination in use shall correspond with the verified measure. [p. 702, col. 2; p. 703, col. 1.]

There is nothing in section 418 or under section 461, clause (o), of the City of Bombay Municipal Act which would justify the Municipality in prohibiting the use of an honest measure in a private market, merely on the plea that if the use of that measure were prohibited, it might be easier for the Municipality to ensure that the measures actually in use should not be false or defective with reference to the verified and standard measures. [p. 703, col. 1.]

The use of an honest measure of one description cannot be said to facilitate the commission of fraud by the use of false or defective measures of a wholly different name and description. [p. 703, col. 1.]

Criminal reference made by the Acting Third Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. Setalvad, for the Municipality.

Messrs. Inverarity and Baptista, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

BACHELOR, J.—This is a reference by the learned Third Presidency Magistrate, before whom the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay had lodged a complaint against the accused to the effect that the accused was guilty of infringing the 4th bye-law in Chapter III of the Bye-Laws framed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation.

The facts are not in dispute and are very clearly set out at the beginning of the learned Magistrate's reference. There is, therefore, no need to recapitulate them. On the facts stated and admitted, the learned Magistrate was of opinion that the prosecution must fail on several points of law. But as these points seemed to the learned Magistrate to be involved in some obscurity, a reference to this Court was made.

After argument on both sides I agree with the learned Magistrate that the prosecution must fail on one of the points of law to which the Magistrate has adverted. It is, therefore, unnecessary for me to consider the other points raised in the reference.

In my opinion the prosecution must fail, because the bye-law under which this prosecution was instituted is beyond the power vested in the Municipal Corporation under section 461 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. We are concerned in the present case with a certain measure known as maplo. It is admitted that this measure is a perfectly honest measure which has been current in the City since August 1915. Now the bye-law of which the infringement has been alleged against the accused runs as follows. I quote only the words which are immediately applicable to the present case: "No tenant of a shop shall keep at such shop any measure which has not been duly verified by comparison with the standard measure." That bye-law, which affects the keepers of shops in private markets, purports to be enacted under section 461, clause (o), of the Municipal Act. This clause empowers the Corporation to make bye-laws not inconsistent with the Act with respect to the matter of preventing the use in any market of false or defective measures. Under section 418 of the Act it is provided that the Commissioner shall from time to time provide such local standards of measure as he deems requisite for the purpose of verification of measures in use in the City and shall make arrangement for the safe keeping of the said standards. It is also directed that the Commissioner shall provide from time to time proper means for verifying measures by comparison with the said standards. It is clear, as it seems to me, that under section 418, a duty is cast upon the Commissioner of recognising the measures actually current in the city, and his means of ensuring that such measures shall be faithfully followed are limited to the methods set out in that section. The bye-law, however, purports to give the Municipal Corporation or the Commissioner far wider power than that conferred by section 418. For it purports to empower these authorities to prohibit the use in a private market of any measure, honest or dishonest, provided only that it is a measure which has not been verified. Nor can the bye-law in my opinion be brought within the ambit of clause (o) of section 461. For that clause, as I construe it, means no more than that the Corporation shall have power to pass bye-laws to prevent the practice of fraud by the use of measures which are false or defective with reference to the standard measures assumed to have been verified by the Commissioner as directed in section 418. But neither under section 418 nor under section 461 has the Corporation any such power as they claim to exercise by this bye-law, the power, namely, to say that in the private markets of the city no measure shall be brought into use unless it has already been verified by the Commissioner. Rather the provisions of the Act import that if the Commissioner has reason to suspect any particular measure which is current, his method of controlling it is to verify it as directed under section 418, and thereafter to secure that the measures of that denomination in use shall correspond with the verified measure. I can find nothing in section 418 or in section 461, clause (o), which would justify the Municipality in prohibiting the use of an honest measure in a private market merely on the plea that if the use of that measure were prohibited, it might be easier for the Municipality to ensure that the measures actually in use should not be false or defective with reference to the verified and standard measures. The use of an honest measure of one description cannot be said to facilitate the commission of fraud by the use of false or defective measures of a wholly different name and description.

On this ground I agree with the learned Magistrate that the bye-law of which the infringement is alleged against this accused is invalid under the Municipal Act, in so far as it prohibits the keeping, for use in a private market, of a measure which has been in use in the city out of which no standard has been kept by the Commissioner as required by section 418. Therefore, the prosecution must on this ground fail.

Under section 433 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is open to us to direct by whom the costs of this reference should be paid. But having regard to all the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

SHAH, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Evidence brought on to the Sessions record, under section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, must be treated as substantive evidence and there is nothing illegal in basing a conviction on such evidence, but it would not be safe to do so without any other evidence to support it, and no responsible tribunal would permit the conviction of a person upon such evidence if it stood by itself. [p. 705, col. 1.]

Such evidence cannot be accepted as proper corroboration of a confession made to a Magistrate and subsequently retracted. [p. 705, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 21st October 1916, convicting the appellants under section 302, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Sham Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Herbert (Assistant Legal Remembrancer), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Shib Lal, Pirthi, Dalu, Narain Singh and Jhunni, Jats of Mauza Dhamaka, have been convicted of the murder of one Pem Singh on the night between the 2nd-3rd June 1916 and under section 302, Indian Penal Code, have been sentenced to transportation for life. They have appealed and we have heard Mr. Sham Lal on their behalf, while Mr. Herbert has addressed us on behalf of the Crown.

Pem Singh was a young man of about 22 or 23 years of age and his home was in Mauza Vaina, Aligarh District, but he had been living for some time at Mauza Vaina Atoli or Atori in the Gurgaon District with his sister. This sister died some three years ago but Pem Singh continued to live in that village cultivating land there. According to the statement of his father, Jhanda, P. W. No. 1, he had returned to Mauza Vaina some three months before his death and is said to have left his home about the 10th Jeth last, corresponding to 22nd May 1916, taking Rs. 102 with him with the intention of purchasing bullocks. Jhanda, P. W. No. 1, after his son had been absent a week or so, began to make enquiries about him but without any result, and he reported the disappearance of his son on the 19th June 1916 at Police Station Toppal, Aligarh District. On the 22nd June 1916 he made a further report at Police Station Palwal, and in his latter report he mentioned the fact that his son had had an intrigue with a daughter of one Rai Singh of Atori who might be able to give some clue as to his whereabouts. He then came to hear that a man had been caught by the villagers of Mauza Dhamaka as a thief and had been beaten to death. As the girl with whom

PIRTHI v. EMPEROR.

Pem Singh was said to have had a liaison was married in Mauza Dhamaka, Jhanda not unnaturally thought that there might be some connection between his son and the man rumoured to have been done to death in that village. He related his suspicions to the Police, who commenced making inquiries and ascertained that the girl in question, Musammât Daryai, had left her home and had been caught at Mauza Pirthala with Pem Singh; that the girl had been brought back to Mauza Dhamaka and that two or three nights later a man had been seen prowling about in that village, caught as a thief, and beaten to death, his body being subsequently cremated in order to remove all traces of him.

Following up this clue the Police made inquiries in Mauza Dhamaka and ascertained that on the night in question P. W. No. 3, Bidhu, P. W. No. 4, Nawashi, P. W. No. 5, Nathu, and P. W. No. 6, Devi Ram, had been on thikari pahra and on their being questioned they admitted having seen and caught a man prowling about at night and brought him back towards the abadi. They were met by a number of villagers, of whom the five appellants were the foremost and who, on seeing their capture, recognised him as the man who had carried off Musammât Daryai and proceeded to beat him to death, subsequently cremating his dead body. This information was elicited on the 26th June 1916, and according to the evidence Shib Lal and Jhunni, appellants, made certain statements and pointed out certain spots which resulted in the recovery of a dhoti from a well belonging to Ram Sahai (pointed out by Shib Lal) and a pair of shoes and a safa produced on the following day (27th June 1916) by Jhunni.

The accused were placed before Mr. Rust, Committing Magistrate, on the 29th June 1916, who on that date recorded the statement of Shib Lal (who expressed his desire to make one) and then that of Jhunni. In these statements Shib Lal and Jhunni admitted having killed Pem Singh and cremated his body. At the trial in the Court of Session the principal witnesses have practically in a body resiled from their statements made to the Committing Magistrate, and the learned Sessions Judge, has, under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, brought on to the Sessions record the statements made by the four thikari pahra witnesses, by P. W. No. 2, Musammât Daryai, and P. W. No. 7, Mohar Ram. The conviction of the appellants is admittedly based on the statements made by these witnesses in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, and it has been held that these statements taken in conjunction with the confessions of Shib Lal and Jhunni, although retracted, are sufficient to convict the appellants.

After an examination of the evidence in its entirety we see no reason for doubting that Pem Singh had a liaison with Musammât Daryai and that she had eloped with him but had been brought back from Mauza Pirthala. Musammât Daryai, while denying the intimacy, admits that she had left her husband's home and, quite by chance, met Pem Singh outside her village, and that she had been followed by Narain Singh and Mohar Ram (P. W. No. 7) and caught at Mauza Pirthala, from where she was brought back. She admits these facts in the Sessions Court as well as that Pem Singh was with her at Pirthala. Mohar Ram, P. W. No. 7, supports her statement with regard to her capture at Mauza Pirthala by him and Narain Singh in the company of a man. In our opinion it has been established that Musammât Daryai did elope with Pem Singh and was caught with him at Mauza Pirthala.

The next point which has, we think, been clearly proved is that on the night when it is said Pem Singh was killed, Bidhu and his companions did surprise and pursue and capture a man who was, on his being brought back to the village, done to death. Bidhu and his companions adhered to this statement in the Court of Session and we see no reason for doubting them. In the Court of Session they, however, stated that the thief was not recognised by any one and they themselves professed to be wholly ignorant of the names of the villagers who beat their capture to death. Before the Committing Magistrate they clearly stated that the five appellants on seeing their capture recognised him as the lover of Musammât Daryai and set on to him.

Mr. Sham Lal on behalf of the appellants has urged that it was illegal to base the conviction of his clients on the evidence brought on to the record under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, and we were referred to Umar v. Empress (1), Ghanwara v. Emperor (2) and Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das (3). We are unable to hold that Mr. Sham Lal's contention is correct, for in our opinion the evidence brought on to the Sessions record under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, must be treated as substantive evidence and there is nothing illegal in basing the conviction on such evidence. At the same time we do not think that it would be safe to base a conviction on such evidence without any other evidence to support it. To do so would, in our opinion, be exceedingly dangerous and we agree with the ruling in Queen-Empress v. Nirmal Das (4), thinking "that it is difficult to conceive that any responsible tribunal should permit the conviction of a person upon such evidence, if it stood by itself." [See also Queen-Empress v. Jeochi (5), Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (6) and Umar v. Empress (1).] Similarly we think that the evidence brought in under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be accepted as proper corroboration of a confession made to a Magistrate and subsequently retracted. See Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das (3) and Queen-Empress v. Bharmappa (7).

Turning to the evidence in this case we find that against Pirthi, Dalu and Narain Singh, appellants, the only evidence is the statements brought on to the record under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code. In our opinion it would be unsafe to convict them on this evidence and we, therefore, accept their appeals.

The case against Shib Lal is on a different footing, for against him there is not only this evidence but also his own confession recorded by Mr. Rust on the 29th June 1916. It is true that this confession was retracted by him before Mr. Rust on the 13th July 1916 as well as before the Sessions Judge, but it is to some extent corroborated by the fact that a dhoti said to belong to the deceased Pem Singh was discovered from a well which was pointed out by him. In these circumstances we see no doubt as to his guilt and especially as there has been no reason shown to us for thinking that Bidhu and his companions had any motive for falsely naming him.

With regard to the case of Jhunni, there is in addition to the evidence brought on to the record under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, his own confession and that of Shib Lal. With regard to his own confession it is in evidence that before he made his statement, some sort of promise of pardon was made to him. It is not quite clear whether such an offer was actually made but we do not feel justified, in the circumstances, in taking his confession into consideration against him. Eliminating that, however, there still remains the confession made by Shib Lal. Although we would not consider the statements of Bidhu and his companions made before the Committing Magistrate as worthy of acceptance as complete corroboration of Shib Lal's confession as against Jhunni, there is in addition the fact that Jhunni himself produced a pair of shoes and a pugri which have been identified as belonging to the deceased. With this additional corroboration we feel no doubt as to Jhunni's guilt and we accordingly must uphold his conviction. The evidence recorded by the Sessions Judge clearly shows that the attack by the villagers on the person caught by Bidhu and his companions was made after the pursuit had ended and when the capture (who, we have no doubt, was Pem Singh) was being brought back to the village. In these circumstances there was not the slightest justification or excuse for killing him and the offence, therefore, clearly falls under section 302, Indian Penal Code.

We accordingly accept the appeal of Pirthi, Dalu and Narain Singh and direct their release. The convictions of Shib Lal and Jhunni are, however, maintained and their appeal is dismissed.

Appeal partly accepted.

PETITIONER

versus

ST. JOHN WILLIAM JOLLY—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488
(9)—Complaint—Husband complained against living temporarily in Calcutta—Jurisdiction of Calcutta Courts.

Respondent who lived in Darjeeling came to Calcutta where he resided from the 16th to 23rd January. While he was residing in Calcutta an application under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, was made by his wife to the Presidency Magistrate's Court in Calcutta:

Held, that the residence of the husband in Calcutta from the 16th to the 23rd January, when the application under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, was made, was sufficient to give the Presidency Magistrate's Court in Calcutta jurisdiction, having regard to sub-section 9 of section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. S. Sandell, for the Petitioner.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner before us applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate under the provisions of the section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application was against one St. John William Jolly who, it appears, is her husband. They have not been living together and the lady applies for maintenance. At the hearing of the case a preliminary objection was taken on the ground of jurisdiction. It is stated that the husband has lived in Darjeeling from the year 1913, and that he is still a resident of Darjeeling. But in his own affidavit the opposite party, the husband, admits that he was in fact in Calcutta on business from the 29th November till the 9th of January. The petitioner's first application bears date the 9th January. The husband says that he left Calcutta for Darjeeling on that day, and though it is clear that the petition was written on the 9th it is not clear that it was actually presented to the Magistrate before the 10th January. But the husband further admits that he had returned to Calcutta on the 16th January and has been in Calcutta since or at least throughout the continuance of the proceedings. Now, on the 23rd January when the husband was admittedly in Calcutta, the petitioner put in a fresh application to the Presidency Magistrate requesting that that petition and her original petition of the 9th should be treated as parts of one and the same petition and that action should be taken on her application as on and from the 23rd January. Obviously the evidence of the husband in Calcutta from the 16th to the 23rd January, when that application was made, is sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction having regard to sub-section (9) of section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

We, therefore, make the Rule absolute, set aside the order complained of and direct that the case be remitted to the Presidency Magistrate before whom it was to be heard and decided by him on the merits.

We desire to add that we trust that after the delay that has already been allowed to occur, the learned Presidency Magistrate on the return of the case to him will proceed to dispose of it with all expedition.

Rule made absolute.

PARBHU LAL v. JANKI.

JUDGMENT.—One Musammatt Janki had made over custody of certain valuables to a man named Parbhu Lal. This much is admitted by Parbhu Lal, although he says that he had not that amount of the valuables which Musammatt Janki says she made over to him. Musammatt Janki in the first instance went to Babu Sohan Lal and apparently instituted a criminal complaint in his Court against Parbhu Lal. The record of that case is not before me; but an order has been produced in the case which simply says that with reference to certain Police papers Janki's complaint is ordered to be filed. She then went to the Court of Babu Sham Lal, a Magistrate of the second class, a few days after. There is a certified copy of an order passed in the case, which is to the effect that the complainant has failed to produce any evidence, that on her own admission she deposited ornaments with the accused and the accused lost them in a theft at his house. Her case seems to be one for Civil Courts as no breach of trust seems to be intended. The complaint is dismissed under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. For the third time Musammatt Janki went to the Court of Babu Sohan Lal, Magistrate of the first class. Whether it was the same Sohan Lal who dealt with the case in the first instance does not appear. He too dismissed the complaint under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. He says that "two witnesses have been produced only to show that the complainant placed her valuables in the custody of her master Parbhu Lal. Whether or not they were returned to the custody of himself is not known, even if these doubtful witnesses were fully believed. Besides the Police who had already fully inquired into the matter certainly did not find that Parbhu Lal's house was not robbed. It seems true that the complainant's property was taken away by the thieves and she now wants it back from her master. I do not think a case of criminal misappropriation is made out. The complaint seems groundless and is dismissed under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. The complainant might go to Civil Court." As to the complaint which she preferred to the District Magistrate of Aligarh after Sohan Lal had dismissed her complaint, it would appear that she out of Court tried to interview the District

Magistrate and followed up her attempt by a complaint instituted before him. The Magistrate in an order dated 12th September 1916 sets aside the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order dismissing the complaint and directs that a warrant under section 420, Indian Penal Code, with reasonable bail be issued against Parbhu Lal. It is from this order of 12th September that the present application has been made; and it is contended that the learned District Magistrate has not shown in his order any legal ground which would justify further inquiry and that in face of the circumstances under which the complaints on the same facts had been dismissed, he did not exercise a proper discretion in the matter. I have always felt considerable difficulty in dealing with applications of this kind. I know that different High Courts take different views on the question but there is the Full Bench decision of this Court in Queen-Empress v. Chotu (1), in which it was held that when a Magistrate had discharged an accused person under section 253, Criminal Procedure Code, the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to hold further inquiry himself or direct further inquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate. So far as I know this decision has not been departed from in this Court. The Full Bench which arrived at that decision was a Full Bench of the whole Court, and the Judges who pronounced the decision were Judges of great experience, especially in criminal matters. I understand that this position is not contested by the learned Counsel who appears for Parbhu Lal. If a Magistrate has jurisdiction to hold further inquiry in such a case, I do not think that his discretion should be interfered with except on very strong grounds. I cannot say that I find in this case that the Magistrate who dealt with the case went at all fully into the matter, and the impression left upon my mind is that whether Musammatt Janki's complaint is true or false, on that point I pronounce no decision whatever, she has not had a full opportunity of proving her case in the Courts below. The first Court which dealt with it evidently looked into the matter through Police spectacles. The order passed by the second Court, namely, Babu Sham Lal, is also a very summary order. It undoubtedly was the case that the complainant had failed to adduce any evidence before him. At the same time I do not think it was a case which he should have dealt with under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. There was no doubt that ornaments belonging to Musammāt Janki had been deposited with Parbhu Lal; but the facts stated in her complaint were facts on which a summons should, in my opinion, have been ordered. The third order, namely, that passed by Babu Sohan Lal on the 5th of September 1916, bears internal evidence of carelessness and want of proper apprehension of the case. He too seems to have been led away by the Police report; and all that he says is that he does not think that a case of criminal misappropriation has been made out, and that the complaint seems groundless. He evidently wished to throw off the responsibility on to a Civil Court. Under these circumstances I am prepared to uphold the District Magistrate's order which was within his jurisdiction. But the Court to which the case goes for trial should warn Musammāt Janki in most clear terms of the danger of instituting a false case. Provided that is done and she incurs the risk, I think she is entitled to a full trial of the case which she puts against Parbhu Lal. Parbhu Lal was never summoned and as far as the record shows has not been in any way inconvenienced by the previous attempts of Musammāt Janki to get her case heard. He can recompense himself if the case after proper trial is found to be a false one. The application is dismissed.

(1) 9 A. 52; A. W. N. (1886) 281; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 465.

Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Revision—Enhancement of sentence—High Court, interference by.

The enhancement of a sentence by the High Court, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is a serious proceeding. The High Court should not ordinarily interfere where a substantial sentence has been passed by the Trying Court and will be always slow to interfere, unless the sentence passed is manifestly inadequate.

Criminal report by the District Magistrate, Karachi, against the order of the second class Magistrate, Manjhand.

Mr. E. Raymond (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused has been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment for theft.

The District Magistrate reports the case to us with a recommendation that the sentence be enhanced to six months.

Enhancement of a sentence is a serious proceeding. This Court does not ordinarily interfere when substantial sentence has been passed by the Trying Court and is always slow to interfere, unless the sentence passed is manifestly inadequate.

The alteration recommended by the District Magistrate is altogether too trivial to justify an appeal to our revisional jurisdiction. It is not desirable that District Magistrates should rely upon this Court to obtain appropriate punishments on the conviction of offenders. They should rather see that the case is properly represented before the Trying Magistrate.

We decline to interfere in this case and direct the record and proceedings to be returned.

Interference declined.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 54, scope of—Cognisable cases—Police, power of, to arrest when warrant already issued by Magistrate.

Section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not prevent any Police Officer from arresting a person where a warrant for his arrest has already been issued by a Magistrate, and the exercise of the power is not restricted only to the officer to whom the warrant is directed. [p. 709, col. 2.]

Charu Chandra Majumdar, In the matter of, 37 Ind. Cas. 57; 20 C. W. N. 1233; 44 C. 76; 18 Cr. L. J. 73 and Queen-Empress v. Dalip, 18 A. 246; A. W. N. (1896) 48; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 871; Queen-Empress v. Kalian, 19 M. 310; 6 M. L. T. 173; 1 Weir 206; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 922, distinguished.

Per Napier, J.—The object of the Code is to give the widest powers to the Police in cognisable cases and the only limitation is the necessary requirement of reasonability and credibility of the information to prevent the misuse of the powers. [p. 709, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sessions Court, Chingleput, in Criminal Appeal No. 30 of 1916, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Joint Magistrate of Chingleput, in Calendar Case No. 115 of 1916.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.

AYLING, J.—The only point argued is that the arrest was illegal. It is in evidence that a warrant had been issued for the arrest of Velan and Kuppan on a charge of a cognisable offence, that the constables knew of this, and had been directed by their Sub-Inspector to be on the lookout for them, and arrest them if found. In such circumstances, I have no hesitation whatever in deciding that they were justified, under section 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in making the arrest. Of the cases quoted by Mr. Rangachariar, In the matter of Charu Chandra Majumdar (1) is clearly distinguishable on the ground that no warrant had been issued. The other cases, Abdul Gafur v. Queen-Empress (2), Queen-Empress v. Dalip (3) and Queen-Empress v. Kalian (4), appear to me to have no bearing on the applicability of section 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

There is no reason for interfering with the convictions; but I regard the imposition of a fine on the 1st accused as unnecessary and would remit that portion of the sentence.

The fine, if paid, should be refunded.

NAPIER, J.—This point is to my mind not arguable. A clear distinction is made in the Criminal Procedure Code between cognisable and non-cognisable cases. Section 54 empowers any Police Officer to arrest without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant any person who has been concerned in a cognisable offence or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or credible information received or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been so concerned. The object of the Code is to give the widest powers to the Police in cognisable cases and the only limitation is the necessary requirement of reasonability and credibility to prevent the misuse of the powers. The Legislature could have confined the power to officers in charge of a Police station, as is done in section 55, where matters are dealt with which are not offences, but has not thought fit to do so. The suggestion that a Police Officer who suspects a man of having committed a cognisable offence may arrest but that he may not arrest when a warrant has been issued, has nothing in the language of the section to support it and would enable a man wanted by the Police on a charge of murder, for instance, acquittal in the murder trial is reversed he is instructed not to press the Government appeal against the acquittal in the section 330 trial.

The evidence produced by the prosecution in the case under section 302 falls into the following classes:—

1. The evidence that Jawand Singh was beaten by Abdullah approver under the orders of Miran Bakhsh, head constable, as soon as he reached the deori at Sandhwan and expressed his inability to disgorge his share of the stolen property.

2. The evidence of Abdullah the informer to the effect that on the evening of the 31st of October, Miran Bakhsh, head constable, between 9 P. M. and midnight in a state of intoxication pounded Jawand Singh with his knees, that Jawand Singh died at about 3 o'clock the next morning and that the approver and the two accused removed the body to the canal and there caused it to sink by weighing down the chadar which was wrapped round it with clods of earth.

3. The evidence of Abdullah chaukidar and Ranga and Waryama sweepers who during the night of the 31st of October sat and watched in the inner deori of the haveli where the Police had put up, and saw the head constable enter the room and heard the groans of Jawand Singh.

4. The evidence of Sant Singh and Bhagwan Singh, etc., who depose that on the early morning of the 1st of November on enquiry from the head constable they were told by him that Jawand Singh was still in the kothri which was then locked and that on the following day, i.e., 2nd of November they found, on opening the kothri with the key which was in possession of Ahmad Din, that Jawand Singh was not inside the kothri.

5. The statements of persons who prove that on the 10th of November the body of a man was found in a terminal lake of the canal at Harike, which is some 12 miles away from Sandhwan, that the body was photographed and buried and again after exhumation was identified as the body of Jawand Singh.

Finally there is the medical evidence which shows that the death of Jawand Singh was not due to drowning, that the post mortem revealed fractures of the 7th and 8th ribs on the right side in the mammary line and of the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 6th ribs on the left side in the parasternal line.

The body was identified on the 14th November by Musammatt Bhagan, the mother of Jawand Singh, by Siwan Singh, lambardar of his village, and also by Abdullah, the chaukidar of Sandhwan. The photograph which was taken of the body and also a pair of drawers which had been removed from the body by the sweeper at Kasur were identified by these witnesses. Although the learned Sessions Judge in so many words does not say that he found that this body was the body of Jawand Singh, he does not anywhere suggest that he disbelieves this evidence, and we understand him to have proceeded on the theory that the body recovered was indeed Jawand Singh's body. Before us it has not been contended on behalf of the respondents that the recovered body was not Jawand Singh's, and we have no hesitation in holding that it was Jawand Singh's corpse. So much then is clear, viz., that Jawand Singh was in the hands of the Police on the evening of the 31st of October 1915, that he was not seen alive subsequently in village Sandhwan or anywhere else; and the question for decision is whether he came by his death in a manner unknown to the respondents, for such was their plea before the learned Sessions Judge, or as is alleged by the prosecution, at the hands of the Police. The story told by Miran Bakhsh is that he was aroused between 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning of the 1st of November by Abdullah whom with Ahmad Din he had, the evening before, left in charge of Jawand Singh in the kothri and was then informed by Abdullah that Jawand Singh had disappeared. If this, however, were a truthful story, we should expect to find that he raised an alarm and that he caused a search to be made for the fugitive in the interior of the haveli, for it is admitted that the only means of exit from the haveli lay through the deori in which Miran Bakhsh, Sakhawat Ali, Mula, Bassa and Abdullah chaukidar were sleeping. Nothing, however, of this kind seems to have been done. The village was not aroused and the Jat witnesses depose that when they inquired about Jawand Singh next morning, they were told by the head constable that he was still in the kothri. On the morning of the 1st of November the head constable sent off Mula and Bassa to Kishen Kot in order that a remand might be obtained, and it is a remarkable fact that he sent no information to Kishenkot by the hand of the constable, who took Bassa and Mula, of the fact that Jawand Singh had escaped. It is true that Miran Bakhsh wrote up a diary dated the 1st of November in which a mention of the flight of Jawand Singh is made, but we have no assurance whatever that the entry referred to was really made at the time—3 or 4 A. M. on the 1st of November—at which it purports to have been written, for though the thana is only some 6 kos away, that report reached the thana only on the 4th November. On the showing of Miran Bakhsh himself he appears to have taken little or no action on the 1st of November beyond sending Abdullah away ostensibly in search of the fugitive. It is true that he says he despatched Sakhawat Ali also on the same errand, but Sakhawat Ali contradicts him on this point and states that he did nothing at all on that day. It was only on the evening of the 2nd of November that Miran Bakhsh proceeded to Kishenkot and there informed Lahori Mal Sub-Inspector of the flight of Jawand Singh, and it is a somewhat suspicious circumstance that in his report to Lahori Mal he suggested that Jawand Singh might have committed suicide. In view of the fact that Jawand Singh was merely suspected of complicity in an act of house-breaking, the suggestion that he might have committed suicide appears to indicate that the head constable knew that Jawand Singh was no longer alive.

On receipt of the head constable's report the Sub Inspector Lahori Mal proceeded to Sandhwan and reached there to find that the Jat proprietors had gone off to make a report of their suspicions to the thana. The Sub-Inspector, however, found the village full of rumour that Jawand Singh had been made away with by the Police, and he at once proceeded to record statements among which the most important was that of Waryama, one of the sweepers who had been watching inside the deori on the night of the 31st of October.

Waryama's statement was corroborated by those of Ranga, Kharaiti, Mehr Din, Budhi and Sant Singh on this point. They all agreed that they had heard the groans proceeding from the hut in which Jawand Singh was confined on the night of the 31st.

The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the story told by Abdullah approver is unreliable, also that the other witnesses who have been produced to corroborate the approver's statement are equally untrustworthy. We have been carefully conducted through the evidence by both the learned Government Advocate and the learned Counsel who appeared for Miran Bakhsh, and we find ourselves forced to the conclusion that the attitude of the learned Sessions Judge towards this mass of evidence cannot be supported. We find that his criticisms are in part quite erroneous, because he has compared portions of the approver's statement instead of comparing the statements made by him on different occasions as a whole. Other criticisms we must hold to be puerile because they deal with such minor incidents as would not affect the credibility of the main story. Generally speaking we hold that the attitude of the learned Sessions Judge was excessively hypercritical. We see no reason to doubt that whatever ill-usage was suffered by Jawand Singh was inflicted upon him with the full knowledge of Miran Bakhsh, head constable. Indeed, as Miran Bakhsh was conducting the enquiry in the burglary case and was the chief person interested in its successful solution, we have no doubt that the order to extort information from Jawand Singh came originally from him. In fact it is perfectly clear that as soon as Jawand Singh arrived the head constable had him well beaten by Abdullah in the deori. We are, however, unhesitatingly prepared to go farther than this; and we hold that the evidence of Waryama and Ranga sweepers to the effect that at about 9 o'clock at night they saw Miran Bakhsh proceed to the kothri in which Jawand Singh was confined, that immediately after they heard sounds of pain proceeding from the kothri and that Miran Bakhsh head constable left the kothri after a considerable stay there, is quite true in all its main details. Much argument has been used before us to show that the Police had no need of calling these two sweepers to keep watch during the night. Above all it was suggested that, had they intended to inflict torture on Jawand Singh, they would have carefully avoided calling witnesses who might subsequently give evidence against them. This argument is fallacious, for we are quite satisfied that it was never the intention of the accused to kill Jawand Singh and that they had no apprehension that the comparatively petty torture they originally intended to inflict would ever come to the ears of the authorities. Just as in the early morning Jawand Singh had been publicly beaten without any attempt to conceal the fact, similarly the torture inflicted upon him in the kothri, if it had had no fatal result, would have passed without attracting any particular attention.

The learned Sessions Judge appears to accept the fact that Jawand Singh was killed by the Police, but he comes to the conclusion that the whole offence could have been perpetrated by the approver without the consent and apparently without the knowledge of the head constable. We have, however, given above reasons for holding that Miran Bakhsh was the prime mover in the affair and though he might have screened his subordinate had the result been less serious, we do not believe that had he been innocent he would have displayed the inaction which he did exhibit, when, according to him, the flight of Jawand Singh was reported to him. It has been suggested that this charge against Miran Bakhsh is due solely to the enmity of the Jats of Sandhwan, but after all Jawand Singh was not a man of their village and they were not interested in him personally. Further if they were determined to get the Police into trouble, it has not been explained why they were not satisfied with implicating Ahmad Din and Abdullah approver, the two men who admittedly were in charge of Jawand Singh and spent the night with him inside the kothri, and why they determined to implicate also the head constable Miran Bakhsh. Moreover, had Miran Bakhsh been innocent, is it credible that the Superintendent of Police would have sacrificed him and tendered a pardon to Abdullah approver who according to the finding of the learned Sessions Judge was the protagonist among the offenders?

In addition to the evidence already mentioned, there is also the evidence of Mula and Bassa who were detained on the night of the 31st of October in the deori which led to the kothri in which Jawand Singh was confined. It is possible that their averment is correct and that they were too much under the influence of the accused to make an earlier disclosure than they did; no more than a passing reference is necessary to them, for the learned Counsel for the Crown has stated that he does not wish to attach any value to their evidence. With the exception of Sakhawat Ali constable, who also was under orders of Miran Bakhsh at Sandhwan all the witnesses produced by the prosecution support the prosecution story. Sakhawat Ali supports Miran Bakhsh's story, but on his own showing his knowledge of the events of that night is practically nil, for he admits that after a bibulous evening he fell into a drunken sleep and was awakened only early the next morning. The accused called no evidence in their defence before the Sessions Court and we are satisfied that the story told by the approver is true in its main lines and that the accused respondents must be held guilty of causing the death of Jawanda.

It remains for consideration of what offence they should be convicted. The prime offender was Miran Bakhsh, head constable, whilst Ahmad Din acted under his order, and though he abetted the offence of his superior officer, nevertheless played a minor part and with his own hands inflicted a minor degree of hurt upon Jawanda. It must also be borne in mind that the Police on the night of the offence had been indulging in liquor. This is clear not only from the statement of Sakhawat Ali but also from that of the approver, and it is extremely probable that had Miran Bakhsh not been under liquor, his assault upon Jawanda would not have been of so savage a nature and the results would not have been fatal. We are quite convinced that it was never originally the intention of the head constable and his co-adjutors to cause the death of Jawanda and bearing in mind the provisions of section 86 of the Code we do not think it right to find him guilty of a more serious offence than that of voluntarily causing grievous hurt in order to extort an admission. The abetment of that offence is brought home to Ahmad Din,

MUTHUSWAMI NADAN v. KALIANGA MOOPAN.

We, therefore, reverse the acquittal of the respondents and convict them respectively of the offence and of the abetment of the offence described in section 331 of the Indian Penal Code. Miran Bakhsh is sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement under section 331, Indian Penal Code, and Ahmad Din to five years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement under sections 331, 109, Indian Penal Code.

Appeal allowed.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 217 OF 1916.

December 19, 1916.

MUTHUSWAMI NADAN AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

KALIANGA MOOPAN—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 147, 148, 537—'Local enquiry,' meaning of—Evidence, recording of, by Magistrate deputed to make enquiry, legality of—Order on report and evidence—Jurisdiction—Waiver of objections, effect of—High Court—Revision, grounds for—Government of India Act (5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61), s. 107—Letters Patent, s. 15.

Per Curiam.—The High Court does not interfere, under section 15 of the Charter Act, with orders passed by a Magistrate under section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, unless such orders were passed without jurisdiction. [p. 715, col. 2.]

The words 'local enquiry' in section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, are not synonymous with mere local inspection, and a person deputed to make an enquiry under the section is competent to examine witnesses. [p. 717, col. 1; p. 716, col. 1.]

Per Ayling, J.—Whatever may be the scope of the enquiry contemplated by section 148, the Magistrate delegating the enquiry to a Subordinate Magistrate is not absolved, on receipt of the latter's report from the duty imposed on him by section 145 (4) of receiving any evidence produced before him by the parties and taking any further evidence he may find necessary. [p. 716, col. 1.]

Where a first class Magistrate acts on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who was deputed to make the enquiry without objection by the parties and bases his order thereon, the order is not one passed without jurisdiction and the High Court cannot interfere with it in revision. [p. 716, col. 2.]

Arumuga Govindan v. Venkatasubbier, 31 M. 82; 3 M. L. T. 108; 17 M. L. J. 535; 6 Cr. L. J. 384, dissented from.

Quære.—Whether such an order would amount to a defect of jurisdiction where the first class Magistrate refuses to take evidence tendered before him?

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Where a first class Magistrate acts upon evidence taken by a Subordinate Magistrate the former must be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction, but the defect is cured by section 537 where the parties do not object to the procedure and are not prejudiced thereby. [p. 717, col. 2.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Spencer in Criminal Reference Case No. 109 of 1916, reported as 36 Ind. Cas. 158, preferred against the order of the Court of the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Trichinopoly in Miscellaneous Case No. 42 of 1914.

Mr. S. V. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Appellants.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

Mr. K. S. Ganesa Aiyar, for Counter-Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal against the decision of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Spencer, passed on a petition presented under section 15 of the Letters Patent, Charter Act (section 107 of the Government of India Act), for the setting aside of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Trichinopoly under section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Judge held that the Sub Divisional Magistrate's order was not without jurisdiction and declined to interfere.

As observed in Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja (1), it has never been customary to interfere in cases of this sort under section 15 of the Charter Act, unless the Magistrate's order was passed without jurisdiction: and we have merely to consider whether that was the case in the order before us.

The chief ground of attack is that the Magistrate recorded no evidence himself: but forwarded the records to a Subordinate Magistrate under section 148 of the Criminal Procedure Code for trial, enquiry and report after taking evidence, and based his order on the said report and the oral evidence recorded by the Sub-Magistrate.

Appellants' first contention is that the term "local enquiry" in section 148 of the

MUTHUSWAMI NADAN v. KALIANGA MOOPAN.

Criminal Procedure Code means merely "local inspection" and that the order directing the Sub-Magistrate to record oral evidence on the spot is ultra vires. The word "inquiry" frequently occurs in the Criminal Procedure Code; but nowhere, so far as I know, with this very limited meaning. The main authority for appellants' contention is that evidence might legally be recorded by a Sub-Magistrate with the assent of parties, and that they might even agree to be bound by the result of the inquiry thus held. To what extent Prinsep, J.'s, view was shared by the learned Judge in Arumuga Govindan v. Venkatasubbier (2) is not clear: but as at present advised, I am not prepared to assent to the proposition that the local enquiry authorised by section 148 is only a local inspection, or that the Sub-Magistrate's report in this case was not admissible in evidence.

What seems to be clear is, that whatever the scope of the said inquiry, the receipt of the Sub-Magistrate's report does not absolve the Sub-Divisional Magistrate from the duty, imposed on him by section 145 (4), of receiving any evidence produced before him by the parties, and taking any further evidence he may find necessary. This, if I understand it right, is the true meaning of the pronouncement in Baikunt Kumar, In the matter of (3), as well as in Criminal Revision Case No. 243 of 1892 of this Court reported as Hanumanthappa v. Hussain Saib (4) and in Kolha Koer v. Muneswar Tewari (5). In the present case there is nothing to indicate that the parties were desirous of adducing any further evidence before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, though he gave a hearing to both sides after receipt of the Sub-Magistrate's report. In fact so far as appears, both parties were quite content to abide by the result of the Sub-Magistrate's inquiry: and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate even notes at the end of paragraph 4 of his order that before him they advanced no arguments against the Sub-Magistrate's finding. The present objection seems to me a pure afterthought put into the head of the unsuccessful party.

Whether in case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had declined to take evidence tendered before him, this would have amounted to a defect of jurisdiction is a matter we need not decide. The learned Judges in Kolha Koer v. Muneswar Tewari (5) held that it would, or that it was at any rate a matter justifying interference.

That, in the absence of such refusal, the order in the present case should be treated as one without jurisdiction, I see no reason to hold: and in so far as the decision of the learned Judge in Arumuga Govindan v. Venkatasubbier (2) seems to lay down such a proposition, I must most respectfully dissent from it.

The second point is that the Magistrate's order contains no finding that the right of way in question was exercised within three months before the inquiry. This, as pointed out by Spencer, J., was never raised in the Magistrate's Court: and I think we should decline to make it a ground of interference now.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs of the Public Prosecutor.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree. In this case there was a complaint to the Police by the respondents that their right of way was obstructed by the appellants. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate came to the conclusion that there was a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, and directed the parties to put in their statements. Then he went to the locality and after inspecting the disputed pathway directed the Sub-Magistrate to make a local enquiry, to record evidence and to report to him under section 148 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Witnesses were summoned by the parties for examination before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. It was apparently agreed by both parties that these witnesses might be examined by the Sub-Magistrate. It is clear that no objection was taken to the examination of witnesses by the Sub-Magistrate. The latter examined seven witnesses for the petitioners, four for the counter-petitioner and a Court witness, and sent in his report. The report was read in evidence before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and arguments were addressed by the Pleaders on both sides. Finally, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate came to the conclusion that there was a pathway which had been obstructed by the appellants, and directed that the appellants should not disturb the respondent in the enjoyment of that path until a decision was come to thereon by the Civil Court. Against this order, a petition was presented to this Court and was heard by Mr. Justice Spencer. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was no irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and dismissed the petition. This Letters Patent appeal is against the order of the learned Judge.

Mr. Srinivasa Gopalachariar contended that it was not competent to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to delegate the examination of his witnesses to his subordinates. It is true that section 148 of the Code of Criminal Procedure only authorises the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to depute his subordinate to make a local enquiry. What exactly is connoted by the term "local enquiry" has not been laid down in any decided case. "Local inspection" may perhaps imply that no witnesses are to be examined at the spot. But the expression "local enquiry" is not necessarily inconsistent with the idea that witnesses are to be examined in connection with the enquiry. The term "enquiry" itself is defined by section 4, clause (k), which says: "it includes every enquiry other than a trial conducted by a Magistrate or Court." As at present advised, I am not satisfied that a person making a local enquiry is not competent to examine witnesses.

The further question is, supposing it was competent to the Sub-Magistrate to examine the witnesses, whether the evidence taken by him can be used by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for passing his order. Clause 2 of section 148 says that the report of the officer so deputed may be read as evidence in the case. It does not say that the evidence taken at the enquiry shall be part of the record in the case, and can be relied upon for his order by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. It is, therefore, doubtful whether the procedure adopted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in basing his conclusion upon the evidence taken by the Sub-Magistrate is regular. The learned Advocate relied upon the decision of Mr. Justice Wallis (as he then was) in Arumuga Govindan v. Venkatasubbier (2), for the position that where a first class Magistrate acts upon evidence taken by a Sub-Magistrate, the former must be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction. I am inclined to take the same view. I have already held in Annie Besant v. Emperor (6) that where there is no legal evidence upon which a conclusion can be based, the Magistrate must be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction. But there is nothing in the record before us to suggest that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate refused to hear any evidence which was tendered before him. Apparently in the case disposed of by Mr. Justice Wallis, the Magistrate refused to hear the evidence which he was asked to receive. The reference at the end of the judgment to cross-examination on the depositions given before the Sub-Magistrate does not show that objection was not taken to the procedure by the party affected by it. I think that this defect or irregularity in the procedure is cured by section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Subramania Aiyar in Kader Batcha v. Kader Batcha Rowthan (7), a mere technical irregularity should not be allowed to affect the proceedings unless the party has been prejudiced thereby. In this case, the parties were apparently willing that the Sub-Magistrate should examine the witnesses. They took no objection to the procedure before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, examined the witnesses before him and were content to have his decision upon the materials placed before the Sub-Magistrate. It is clear to my mind that there has been no prejudice to the appellants by the procedure adopted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The learned Judge Mr. Justice Spencer was asked to exercise his powers of revision under the Government of India Act, section 107, and he came to the conclusion that there was no irregularity. In the Letters Patent appeal, we should not interfere with that order unless we are satisfied that the party has been prejudiced by the order of the Sub-Magistrate.

(7) 29 M. 237; 4 Cr. L. J. 58.

HAZANI KHAN v. NAFAER CHANDRA PAL.

On the second point as to whether the enquiry started at the instance of the respondent was within three months of the last exercise of the right of way, I am clear that we should not allow this objection to be argued in this Court, because if it had been raised before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, the respondent would have been in a position to say that when he filed the petition, more than three months had not elapsed from the date of his exercising the right of way.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the order of the learned Judge is right and that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 555 OF 1917.

June 8, 1917.

Present—Mr. Justice Teunon and Justice Sir Shamsul Huda, Kt.

HAZARI KHAN AND OTHERS—1ST PARTY—
PETITIONERS*versus*NAFAER CHANDRA PAL CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS—2ND PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceedings under—Symbolical possession of subject-matter delivered to party some time before proceedings—Evidence of actual possession on date of proceedings, whether can be discarded.

Where symbolical possession of a holding was delivered to a party on the 2nd June 1915 and proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of the same holding were instituted in November 1916:

Held, that it was incumbent on the Magistrate to go into the question of actual possession between those two dates and consider the evidence tendered by the parties on that question before he could properly pass a final order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code and that it was not competent to him to wholly discard and leave out of consideration the evidence of actual possession on the date on which the proceedings were instituted. [p. 719, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the District Magistrate, Nadia.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Gurudas Sinha, for the Petitioners.—The final order made by the Magistrate is clearly unsustainable. The delivery of possession was taken through the Civil Court by the opposite party on 22nd June 1915. The Magistrate has taken into consideration only the symbolical possession given to Nafar Chandra Pal of the 2nd party on 22nd June 1915. But we set up an independent title, and the present proceedings were started in November of 1916. The Magistrate has obviously erred in not trying the question of actual possession between June 1915 and November 1916. Before passing his final order, the Magistrate ought to have considered the evidence of actual possession tendered by both parties. The petitioners have been seriously prejudiced by the Magistrate not going into the question of actual possession. A Magistrate has to base his order upon actual possession and not upon symbolical possession.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee for Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babu Monmotho Nath Pal), for the Opposite Party.—The Criminal Court is bound to maintain the recent delivery of possession by the Civil Court, unless it is proved that the decree under which delivery of possession took place was obtained by fraud. The remedy of the other party lies in the Civil Court, see Krista Alhadini Dasi v. Radha Syam Panday (1). Some of the members of the first party were aware of the attachment after judgment and the delivery of possession and also some of them objected to the sale of the holding before the Munsif. So the 1st party petitioners cannot be heard to raise objection to the Magistrate's order now.

Babu Gurudas Sinha replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Nadia and the second party to proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to show cause why the final order that was made under that section should not be set aside on certain grounds. It appears that the members of the second party obtained a money decree against one Nabai Khan and three others, his sons, and that in execution of that decree certain holdings alleged to be the property of Nabai Khan were put up for sale and purchased by the second party. One of the holdings so put up for sale is described as the kunjimari khāl and four connected jalkars with a rental of Rs. 3 and it appears that in pursuance of the sale, delivery of possession was taken through the Civil Court on the 22nd June 1915. The case for the first party was that this khal and its connected jalkars did not in fact belong to Nabai Khan personally but were the property of practically the whole body of villagers, Nabai Khan and Sabdul Khan being entered in the zemindar's sherista as representative tenants. Their case then was that the possession given in July 15th to the zemindar of the second party in no way affected their rights and did not in fact affect their possession, which continued as before from June 1915 upto November 1916 when these proceedings were instituted.

From the judgment delivered by the Trying Magistrate it is quite clear that he did not appreciate the case set up by the 1st party, and in making his order he has proceeded solely upon the symbolical possession given to Nafar Chandra Pal, the leading member of the 2nd party, on the 22nd June 1915. But the possession thus given is obviously of little value as against parties who set up an independent title, and even as against Nabai Khan and his descendants the value of the decree and of the delivery of possession as a piece of evidence must vary inversely with the time that has elapsed since the date of the decree and the delivery of possession thereunder. As we have said, that delivery of possession was in June 1915 and the present proceedings were instituted in November 1916. It was obviously incumbent on the Magistrate to go into the question of actual possession between those miscellaneous dates and consider the evidence tendered by the parties on that question before he could properly pass a final order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. There can be no question that the petitioners have been seriously prejudiced by the way in which the trial has been held and by the way in which the Trying Magistrate has wholly discarded and left out of consideration the evidence of actual possession on the date on which the proceedings were instituted.

That being so, we set aside the order complained of and we direct that the proceedings be re-heard from the point at which the taking of evidence was completed in the Court of the Trying Magistrate. But having regard to the period of time that has elapsed, it will be open to either party to adduce further evidence as to possession and also, if they are so advised, evidence going to show under sub-section (5) of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, that no dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace now exists.

Order set aside.

CRIMINAL PETITION No. 11 OF 1917.

ALIQULLAH—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—

RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case, grounds for—Reasonable apprehension.

Where an accused person has a reasonable apprehension that he will not be fairly treated by the Magistrate his case should be transferred, but the apprehension must be a real and reasonable one. [p. 721, col. 1.]

The sole question to be considered is whether the facts disclosed in the application for transfer give rise to a reasonable inference that the Magistrate who is seised of the case may be wittingly or unwittingly prejudiced against the accused. [p. 721, col. 1.]

Juggan v. Emperor, 22 Ind. Cas. 996; 36 A. 239; 15 Cr. L. J. 212; 12 A. L. J. 399, relied upon.

Petition, under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of the case, Uttam Chand v. Aliquallah, from the Court of the Honorary Magistrate, 1st Class, Partabpur, to some competent Court at Lyallpur.

Kunwar Dalip Singh, for the Petitioner.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of a case under section 498, Indian Penal Code, pending in the Court of Sardar Bahadur Partab Singh, Honorary Magistrate at Jaranwala in the District of Lyallpur. The petitioner is in the Veterinary Department and the complainant in the case is a Sub-Assistant Surgeon. The complaint is that the petitioner with the assistance of some other persons abducted the wife of the complainant on the 16th of November 1916. The complaint was filed on the evening of the 17th November 1916 in the Court of Sardar Bahadur Partab Singh, Honorary Magistrate, who at once issued warrants resulting ultimately in the recovery of the woman. On the 6th December 1916 an application was filed on behalf of the petitioner in the Court of the District Magistrate asking for transfer of the case on grounds which are identical with those now advanced before me in this Court. The learned District Magistrate called for a report, which was furnished by the learned Magistrate on the 10th December 1916, in which he denied the allegations made. On the 19th December 1916 the learned District Magistrate rejected the application.

The case came up before the Magistrate on the 16th January when 13 witnesses were examined and the case postponed for the summoning of some five or six remaining witnesses. On the 18th January 1917 the petitioner filed this application and I have heard Mr. Dalip Singh on his behalf and Mr. Tek Chand on behalf of complainant. Mr. Dalip Singh referred me to Dupeyron v. Driver (1), Kali Charan Ghose v. Emperor (2), Machal v. Matru (3), Jit Singh v. Emperor (4) and Kadir Bakhsh v. Sundar Lal (5) and urged that the point for consideration in the applications for transfer was not whether the Magistrate was or was not a fit and competent Magistrate, but whether there was a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused person that justice would not be impartially meted out to him. The standard of reasonableness, he urged, was not to be an abstract one, but was to be gauged according to the incidents and surroundings of each particular case. He argued that in this particular case the facts set forth in the affidavit were sufficient to cause, in the mind of the petitioner, a reasonable apprehension that Sardar Bahadur Partab Singh would not deal with him fairly and impartially. These facts briefly are that—

November 1916 and issued warrants forthwith.

2. He acted wrongly in recording the statement of one of the other persons accused in this case.

3. The case was one between Hindus and Muhammadans.

4. The Tahsildar of Jaranwala is a friend of the complainant and would be likely to use his influence with the Honorary Magistrate against the petitioner.

The learned Magistrate has explained that the complainant came to him when he was still at work in the evening and lodged the complaint; that he thereupon recorded his statement and proceeded to take action which was obviously justified, inasmuch as it resulted in the recovery of the complainant's wife; that Mangal Sain, the co-accused above mentioned, was desirous of making his statement and he accordingly recorded it, after which he was remanded to custody inasmuch as nobody was prepared to stand surety for him. It was also urged before me that the complainant in his capacity as a medical man has treated the family of the Magistrate. This fact is admitted by the Honorary Magistrate who pointed out that precisely the same way the petitioner, in his capacity as a Veterinary Assistant, has been attending on the Magistrate's cattle. Mr. Tek Chand on behalf of complainant greatly emphasised this latter fact and has denied that the case is one between Hindus and Muhammadans. He pointed out that although the complainant was a Hindu and the petitioner a Muhammadan, arranged with the petitioner were six Hindus and one Sikh, and he urged that no ground had been made out for transfer. After giving my careful consideration to all the facts of this case, it seems to me that the petitioner has thought fit to assume the want of impartiality on the part of the Magistrate without any reasonable ground. The complainant apparently on the evening of the 16th November discovered that his wife was missing. It must have taken him a little time to ascertain that she had eloped or been abducted, and the names of those persons who had assisted her in running away. I can see nothing extraordinary or suspicious in his having gone to the Honorary Magistrate at Partapur on the evening of the 17th, after he had succeeded in giving such information as he deemed necessary, and in instituting the case in the Court of this Magistrate. The complainant has filed an affidavit which goes to show that there was no other Magistrate available in the neighbourhood, and the necessity for prompt action is apparent. Assuming that the Tahsildar of Jaranwala was available, the fact that he was on friendly terms with the complainant would be a valid reason for the complainant not instituting proceedings in his Court. The fact that the statement of Mangal Sain was recorded by the Magistrate is altogether insufficient, to my mind, to create any serious apprehension in the mind of the petitioner. Nor do I think that any such apprehension is justified by the fact that the complainant happens to be a friend of the Tahsildar. A man in the position of this Honorary Magistrate should, I think, be assumed to be above being influenced by a Tahsildar Magistrate. With regard to the allegation that the question involved is one between Hindus and Muhammadans, it seems to me that this is unduly straining the situation. The fact that he has more confidence in a European Magistrate cannot, I think, be taken judicial notice of and in this particular case it should be borne in mind that one of the accused persons only is a Muhammadan. Mr. Dalip Singh stated that the other co-accused were quite willing that the case should be transferred. It may be they are willing, but it seems to me significant that none of them have supported the action of the petitioner by filing any application for transfer. I am in complete accord with the rulings cited by Mr. Dalip Singh and consider that when an accused person has a reasonable apprehension that he will not be fairly treated, his case should be transferred, but at the same time I am strongly of opinion that that apprehension must be a real and reasonable one. As pointed out in Juggan v. Emperor (6), the sole question to be considered is whether the facts disclosed in an application for transfer give rise to a reasonable inference that the Magistrate who is seised of the case may be wittingly or unwittingly prejudiced against the accused.

Nothing that was put forward in the application or the affidavit before me or that has been urged at the Bar leads me to think that such an inference arises in this case.

It is also significant that after the application for transfer had been rejected by the District Magistrate, no steps were taken by the present petitioner to prosecute his wishes for the transfer till after the bulk of the evidence for prosecution had been recorded. Mr. Dalip Singh urged that, as a matter of fact, his client had asked the Court before the commencement of the case for an adjournment in order to enable him to move this Court. Reference to the record shows that no such application was made. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I am of opinion that no case for transfer has been made out and I accordingly reject this application and return the records to the Magistrate for disposal of the case.

Application rejected.

RAGHO LAYA AND OTHERS—

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 164 (3)
—Confession, how to be made—Magistrate, duty of, when recording confession.

Under section 164 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, no Magistrate should record any confession unless upon questioning the person making it he has reason to believe that it is made voluntarily. What is meant by the Code is that the Magistrate should ask the accused some such question as "why are you confessing? Are you sorry for your crime or is it that some one has told you that you will gain something by a confession?" and should refuse to proceed with the recording of the confession until he has had a satisfactory answer to his question. [p. 724, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Manbhum.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The appellants in this case

have been convicted on a charge of dacoity and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in cases in which there were no previous convictions and to six years in the case of previously convicted accused.

The dacoity took place on the night of the 9th of April 1916 in the house of one Hari Pado Ghose of Bhalahit. That there was a dacoity cannot be disputed. The sole point for consideration is whether it has been proved by evidence that the appellants before us were among the dacoits. The investigation was taken up by Sub-Inspector Shujan Kumar Bhattacharji on the 11th of April and no clue appears to have been obtained till the 30th of April. On that day the Sub-Inspector walking with the chaukidar saw an old convict named Dinu Mallik returning to his house at 7 A.M. with a bundle of raw lac on his shoulder. As soon as he saw the officer Dinu threw down the bundle and ran away. The officer searched his house and found nothing in it which could be connected with the dacoity under investigation but nevertheless arrested Dinu Mallik and on a statement made by him, caused searches to be made in the houses of Jitu Manjhi, and Lagwa Manjhi of Jamtara, Pahalan Goala of Aladi, Lakhiram Goala, Gobinda Rai and Bano Bagdi of Dangri; and himself made searches in the houses of Paran Goala and Ragho Laya of Jaspur. The only result of these searches was that a gathi was found in the house of Ragho Laya and that Hari Pado and his brother and another relative have identified that gathi as part of the proceeds of the dacoity.

On the 2nd or 3rd of May Gobinda made a statement in consequence of which the house of Manu Mallik of Palatpur was searched. Nothing was discovered, but Manu was arrested on the 6th or 7th of May and made a statement to the Police in consequence of which were found in a jungle, a mile and a half from the scene of the dacoity, traces of a cooking fire. The Sub-Inspector was also allowed to say in his evidence that Dinu Mallik and Manu Mallik had, at different stages of the investigation, pointed out to him spots at which they stood during the commission of the dacoity 20 or 30 yards from the house and also a mango grove in which it was alleged that the dacoits collected before attacking the house. Evidence was also collected to show that Gobinda Rai had been seen sitting with Manu Mallik on the outskirts of Palatpur on a date towards the end of Chaitra and that Gobinda was in the habit of visiting Manu Mallik.

From the evidence of P. W. No. 11 it appears that Dinu Mallik is a cousin of Ragho Laya and often goes to Ragho Laya's house and that in Chaitra last Paran Goala and Dinu Mallik together purchased at about besham time two handis and two other earthen pots.

In consequence of other information the house of Shyam Singh was searched and in a recently made hole in the floor a silk dhoti and a silk sari were discovered which have been identified as part of the proceeds of the dacoity. Dinu Mallik and Manu Mallik also made on the 8th of May 1916 statements to a Deputy Magistrate of the 1st Class which have been used as confessions. In both of their confessions occur the names of Pahalan Goala and Lakhiram Goala. It had been stated by Hari Pado that in the progress of the dacoity two of the dacoits held him down and threatened to kill him if he did not disclose the whereabouts of his valuables.

On the 14th of May, 12 suspected persons were mixed up with 53 other undertrial prisoners and out of these 70 persons Hari Pado identified Pahalan and Lakhiram. This exhausts the evidence in the case and upon it Dinu Mallik, Manu Mallik, Pahalan Goala, Lakhiram Goala, Ragho Laya, Gobinda Rai, and Paran Goala have been convicted of dacoity and Shyam Singh of an offence under section 411. Even upon this bald statement of the facts it is apparent that the case against the majority of the accused is a somewhat flimsy case. The accused were not represented in the Sessions Court and I feel bound to say that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge would have been well advised to regard himself as not merely a machine for recording a conviction but as a Judicial Officer required to scrutinise carefully the evidence upon the record. Not one single point has been mentioned in his judgment which might tell in favour of the accused. In the first information it is stated that from the voices of the dacoits they appeared to be low caste people of the locality, Bhuiyans, Dosads or Bouris. None of the accused belong to these classes. Ragho Laya has been convicted upon the identification of a water pot found among the utensils of his house. No allusion is made in the judgment to the fact that one of the assessors recorded his opinion that it was uncertain whether this water pot belonged to the accused himself or to Hari Pado or that in the evidence of the search witness P.W. No. 9 it is admitted that when this witness went to Ragho Laya's house for a sing-song in Magh last, he saw there a gathi similar to that produced as the gathi of Hari Pado.

In dealing with the case against Paran, no allusion is made to the fact that the date on which the two handis were purchased by him and Dinu Mallik might be any date in Chaitra, and not necessarily the date of the dacoity.

In dealing with the case against Gobinda it is said in the judgment that Manu Mallik and Gobinda were frequently seen together in Chaitra last. It is not mentioned that in the evidence of P. W. No. 16 an excellent reason for that association has been given, namely, that Gobinda when he goes to Manu's village holds pūja in the house of Manu.

In dealing with the confessions the learned Assistant Sessions Judge does not mention the fact that the statement made by Manu Mallik to the Deputy Magistrate was not a complete confession at all, but a denial that he was aware of the object of the dacoits in going to Bhalahit and a denial that he took any larger part in the dacoity than sitting at the mora of the village and receiving afterwards Rs. 5 from Pahalan; nor is it noted that the confession of Dinu gave no details whatsoever of the occurrence. His confession consists of seven lines of which four lines are names of accused, and the remainder runs baldly "committed dacoity in the house of a person at Bhalahit one night about three weeks ago. They did not give me any share out of their booty; we did not beat any one." No definite finding has been recorded that the Court is satisfied that these confessions were voluntarily made.

I propose to deal, firstly, with the case of Ragho Laya and to enquire whether it has been established that in consequence of Dinu Mallik's statement to the Police part of the proceeds of the dacoity were found in Ragho Laya's house. The assessor Babu Damodar Lal says it is doubtful whether the gathi Exhibit 10 belongs to Hari Pado or Ragho Laya. I think this is a fair opinion, bearing in mind the evidence given by the witness who sang songs in Ragho Laya's house. It has not been established to my satisfaction that anything was discovered in consequence of any of Dinu Mallik's statements to the Police. The pointing out of a patch of ground upon which the accused sat or the pointing to a mango grove as the place at which the dacoits collected cannot be said to have led to the discovery of anything. Therefore, the whole of the statements made to the Police by Dinu Mallik are inadmissible in evidence for the reason that nothing was discovered in consequence thereof. It is to be particularly noted with regard to Ragho Laya that he was a man well known to Hari Pado and if he was taking an active part in the dacoity, I fail to see why Hari Pado should have failed to recognise him at the time of the dacoity.

It is next to be considered whether the identification of Pahalan and Lakhiram by Hari Pado can be said to have arisen from any statement made by Dinu Mallik when under arrest. From the evidence of the Sub-Inspector it appears that the houses of Pahalan and Lakhiram were searched in consequence of those statements, and it is certain that it was on the combined confessions of Manu and Dinu that Pahalan and Lakhiram were among those who were put before Hari Pado for an honest identification. It is alleged in the grounds of appeal that Pahalan and Lakhiram were carefully shown to Hari Pado at the Mirza thana where they were kept for 24 hours before being identified in the jail. No investigation was made into this assertion in either of the Courts below, for the reason that no mention of the fact was made by the accused before the filing of the grounds of appeal. But it is to my mind curious that the two persons identified at this honest identification were persons against whom there was no other evidence whatsoever, and if indeed, the complainant Hari Pado did see these people so clearly on the night of the dacoity as to be able to identify them more than a month later, it is curious that he should not have noticed at the time that they were not low caste Bouris, Bhuiyans or Dosads. It may be said, however, that neither Lakhiram nor Pahalan have any previous convictions and there is no reason why particular efforts should be made to implicate them in the case. My impression of the evidence against the five non-confessing convicts is that there is nothing at all to corroborate the retracted confessions as against Ragho Laya, Gobinda and Paran and that the identification by Hari Pado of Pahalan and Lakhiram is not sufficiently convincing to justify their conviction.

The case against Dinu Mallik I regard as extraordinarily weak. He was arrested in the first instance not on account of this dacoity but because he was obviously in a guilty frame of mind when returning to his house at 7 A. M. on the 30th of April. In his house were found a number of old coats, which I take it the Sub Inspector suspected were proceeds of other thefts, but nothing in his house was found connected with the dacoity in question. His confession is on the face of it too bald a statement to carry with it any conviction that to have made such a statement he must have been fully aware of all the facts of the occurrence. And it was, moreover, recorded in a most slovenly fashion.

I have had occasion very frequently to point out that under section 164 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure no Magistrate shall record any such confession, unless upon questioning the person making it he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily. It is the invariable practice of the Deputy Magistrates in this Province to ignore entirely this provision of the Code. It is considered sufficient to make use of a stock phrase which in this instance runs "I am a Magistrate, if you want to make any statement of your own accord you may do so; do not make any statement which you have been tutored by others to make," and then follows the story of the crime without any answer whatsoever to the Magistrate's formula. To my mind a Magistrate might just as well say to the accused "hocus pocus" or "abra ca dabra." Such phrases would be as much a compliance with the terms of section 164 (3) as the formula now in vogue. What is meant by the Code is that the Magistrate should ask the accused some such question as "why are you confessing? are you sorry for your crime or is it that some one has told you that you will gain something by a confession", and to refuse to proceed with the recording of the confession until he has had a satisfactory answer to his question. The attention of Magistrates has been drawn several times to this defect in their procedure but the comments of this Court have invariably been completely ignored. In my view the Local Government should take steps to see that Magistrates understand the requirements of section 164 (3) and that if Magistrates fail to observe them they are severely reprimanded. I am of opinion that none of the statements made by Dinu Mallik to the Police are admissible against him and that the confession which he made to the Magistrate has not been shown to be a voluntary confession. It is inconclusive of his guilt and he should be acquitted.

The statement of Manu Mallik is very much more full than that of Dinu Mallik, but in it Manu denies taking any part in the occurrence. He does not admit assisting in the dacoity in any way. He acknowledges only the receipt of Rs. 5 after the dacoity as the price of his keeping silence during the dacoity. The statement made to the Police that the dacoits cooked their food at a place a mile and a half from the scene of occurrence resulted in the discovery of the chulha on which the food was cooked. Even granting that the statement made to the Magistrate was voluntarily made and that it is corroborated by the discovery made by the Police with Manu's assistance, there is nothing in the statement upon which Manu can be convicted. There is no evidence on the record to show that the statement is untrue. If true, Manu was merely an unwilling witness. We may suspect that he was something more than this, but in the absence of corroboration of this suspicion, we cannot convict him.

RAJESWAR BAGCHI v. EMPEROR.

The case of Shyam Lal Singh has been clearly proved by the silk articles found in his house and identified with certainty by the complainant. The circumstances in which they were concealed in his house indicate clearly knowledge that they were stolen property. I would, therefore, reject the appeal of Shyam Lal Singh.

I would allow the appeals of Manu Mallik, Dinu Mallik, Gobinda Rai, Ragho Laya, Lakhiram Goala, Pahalan Goala and Paran Goala and direct that they be released from jail.

CHAMIER, C. J.—I agree. The case against the men whom we are acquitting proves on careful examination of the record to be even weaker than I supposed when I first read the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge. I agree that a stricter compliance with section 164 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be insisted upon.

¹ Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 62 (b), 68 (c)—Offence, ingredients necessary for—Application for loan in prescribed form recommended by surety and approved by Manager of creditor Bank, whether agreement which should bear stamp.

An application was made to a Bank for a loan on a prescribed form, which contained columns intended to show the signature of the person recommending the loan or undertaking any responsibility on behalf of the applicant. A person recommended the loan by saying "I guarantee the payment". The accused, who was the Manager of the Bank, approved the proposal by saying in the last column of the form that the application for the loan should be granted. No stamp was affixed to the form:

Held, (1) that the words "I guarantee the payment" signed by the person who recommended the loan did not represent a completely executed security bond, so that the Manager by his signature in the last column of the form could not be held to have appended his signature to that security bond by way of acceptance thereof. Therefore the conviction of the Manager under section 62 (b) of the Stamp Act could not be supported; [p. 726, col. 1.]

(2) that the Secretary of the Bank, who advanced the loan to the applicant on his executing that bond, could not be convicted under section 68 (c) of the Stamp Act, as his duties in connection with the transaction were purely ministerial and he did not, in fact, accept the proposal for the loan. [p. 726, col. 1.]

The essential question in a case under section 68 (c) of the Stamp Act is whether the act complained of is a device intended to defraud the Government of duty payable in respect of a document. [p. 727, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1105 OF 1916.

This Rule is directed against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Rangpur convicting the petitioner of an offence under section 62 (b) of the Stamp Act II of 1899 and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 20.

It appears that on the 11th Agraahyan 1319, one Arajulla Sheikh applied to an institution, known as the Gaibandha Bank, Limited, for a loan of Rs. 50. The application was made on a prescribed form, which contains columns intended to show the signature of the person recommending the loan or undertaking any responsibility on behalf of the applicant. In that form one Sadat Ali stated that the applicant was a middle class man and gave certain other particulars with regard to him and recommended that he should be granted the loan on a bond. He then added the words in Bengali, "ami adai karia diba", that is to say, I will make the payment or see that the payment is made, in other words, he said "I guarantee the payment." The present petitioner was at that time, and we are informed that he is still, the Manager of the Bank, and in the last column of this form he approves the proposal made by Arajulla and says that this application for a loan of Rs. 50 to carry interest at the rate of Rs. 2-11-0 monthly should be granted, and to this approval he appends his signature. The Magistrate in convicting the petitioner has taken the view that the words "I guarantee the payment" signed by Sadat Ali represents a completely executed security bond, and that the signature of the Manager found in the last column of the proposal is to be taken as the signature to that security bond appended by way of acceptance thereof.

We are unable to take this view, and we are also unable to take the view which has been put forward before us by the learned Counsel for the Crown. That view is to the effect that the proposal and the approval of the proposal to be found in column 9 represent a completely executed agreement between the principal borrower and the Manager and that it should, therefore, have borne 8-annas stamp. We are unable to take that view for this reason, that the statements in the proposal made by applicant himself and by the Manager do not represent a completed agreement, more particularly with regard to the rate of interest. Neither the proposed surety nor the applicant said anything regarding interest and there is nothing in the form itself to show that the borrower or the surety agreed to the proposed rate. Thus at most the proposal with the statements made in its various columns represent merely negotiations which were intended to lead up to the execution of a bond and the payment thereon of the sum of Rs. 50.

In that view the conviction cannot be supported and we accordingly set aside the order complained of and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1107 of 1916.

This Rule is directed against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Rungpur convicting the petitioner under section 63 (c) of the Stamp Act II of 1899 and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 15.

It appears that on the 11th Agrahayan 1319, one Arajulla applied to an institution called the Gaibanda Bank Limited for a loan of Rs. 50. Applications or proposals for loan made to that Bank have apparently to be made on a certain form prescribed by the institution, and one of the columns of this form requires the signature of the person recommending the loan or taking upon himself responsibility in connection therewith. In this particular case after a recommendation to the effect that the loan applied for should be granted on a bond, a person of the name of Sadat Ali writes certain words translated as follows: "I guarantee payment." It next appears that on this application the Manager or the Managing Committee of the Bank, a person of the name of Rajeswar Bagchi, approved the application and decided that a loan of Rs. 50, carrying interest at the rate of Rs. 2-11-0 monthly, should be granted to the applicant. The bond was thereupon, it appears, executed by the applicant Arajulla and on the execution of this bond the present petitioner who was the Secretary of the Bank made to him a loan of Rs. 50. The surety did not, in fact, sign the bond. Arajulla having failed to make the payment a suit was brought by the Bank against the borrower Arajulla on his bond and apparently on the strength of the entry already referred to in the proposal form against Sadat also as his surety. The matter thus came to the notice of the authorities and a prosecution having been instituted, the petitioner who was at the time the Secretary of the Bank has been prosecuted and convicted, as already stated, on the ground that Sadat Ali's offer to make the payment, accepted by the Manager of the Bank with a qualification as to interest, is to be looked upon either as a security bond or as an agreement or at least as a device intended to avoid the necessity of a property executed security bond or agreement, and thus implying on the part of all concerned in it an intention to defraud the Government of duty. Whether, as it stands, having regard more particularly to the added qualification as to interest, there is on this proposal a complete agreement or security bond we need not in fact decide. The essential question is whether it is a device intended to defraud the Government of duty, and if so, whether the present petitioner who was at the time the Secretary of the Bank shared in that intention. On this point it is to be observed that the Secretary was in fact not the person who accepted the proposal. His duties in connection with the transaction were, it may be said, purely ministerial. Apart from that it is to be pointed out that the proposal and the recommendation of Sadat Ali contemplated throughout that the loan should be made not on this proposal but on a duly executed bond. That bond was, in fact, executed by the borrower Arajulla, and it is certainly a point very material to this question of intention to note that had the surety also signed it, no additional stamp duty would have been required.

Having regard to these considerations we are of opinion that it cannot be said that the present petitioner shared or took any part in this transaction with intent to defraud the Government. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Convictions set aside.

An order directing a prosecution for perjury merely upon materials arising out of cross-examination is a very unsafe proceeding, especially where the cross-examination has been protracted.

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, Sitamarhi, Mozufferpore.

Mr. Harnarain Prasad, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition asking for interference by this Court with an order passed under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure initiating the prosecution of one Raktoo Rai on a charge of perjury. Raktoo Rai was a witness in a case in which certain persons were charged with unlawful assembly and theft of a crop from a field. The case ended in a conviction in the Magistrate's Court. In appeal there has been an acquittal upon the ground that the case has every appearance of being false and that the motive for the false case was the dismissal by the Sheohar Raj of Tribeni Lal who gave the information to the Police, the persons whom he accused being mostly the amlas of the Sheohar Raj. Raktoo Rai was called as a witness for the prosecution. The moment his examination commenced he asserted that he knew nothing whatever about the matter. He was thereupon declared hostile and cross-examined at great length. The order passed under section 476 was after the receipt of the Sessions Judge's judgment. No reasons are cited in it why the prosecution should be ordered: but in his explanation the Magistrate says that the cross-examination of Raktoo Rai disclosed that the evidence was false, the false statements being to the effect that he had been intimidated into giving evidence before the Police by threats. He was ordered by the Sub-Inspector to give the name of a man named Lalji: the Sub-Inspector said that if he did not do so he would be prosecuted for theft and cheating: that he had been called by Tribeni Lal the first informant and taken to the Sub-Inspector: that Tribeni told the Sub-Inspector that Raktoo was his witness: and that he had then said that he would not give evidence as he knew nothing. The Sub-Inspector said that "he cited you as a witness—you will be compelled to give evidence." Thereupon Raktoo said: "I was afraid of his threats and so I spoke." I am of opinion that the order directing a prosecution for perjury merely upon materials arising out of cross-examination is a very unsafe proceeding, especially in the case of a protracted cross-examination of this kind. I have read this cross-examination and I have been unable to find any such manifest contradictions as would afford any basis for a prosecution. That is the only material upon which the proceeding has been based. I also consider it unsafe to charge a witness for perjury upon statements of this kind when the Sessions Judge has found substantial grounds for suspecting the whole conduct of the prosecution. It is clear that the only evidence that the statements were false would be the statements of the Sub-Inspector himself, Tribeni and other persons under their influence; this being so, the order directing the prosecution of the petitioner is set aside. I direct that further proceedings be stayed.

Order set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 406, 206—Disposing of car in contravention of hire-purchase agreement—Offence—Merger of agreement in decree.

The accused obtained a motor car from the complainant on a hire-purchase agreement, stipulating that so long as the whole amount of the price was not paid, the car would remain the absolute property of the complainant and that the accused would not in any way dispose of it. The complainant brought a suit for the recovery of the price still remaining due under the agreement and got a decree for a certain sum with costs, but no lien on the car was declared by the Court. Soon after this decree the accused sold away the car:

Held, that the accused in disposing of the car in contravention of the original hire-purchase agreement did not commit an offence under section 406, Indian Penal Code, as the original contract was merged in the decree of the Civil Court. [p. 729, col. 2.]

Seemle.—That the act of the accused might amount to an offence under section 206, Indian Penal Code, for which proceedings might be taken by the complainant against the accused on getting sanction from the Court which made the decree. [p. 729, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following portion of the verified petition of the complainant:—

1. That in December 1915 the accused above named took a motor car from your petitioner on the hire-purchase system, the price settled being Rs. 3,250, of which he paid Rs. 400 on the 14th November 1915, and Rs. 300 on the 1st of December 1915 and he took possession of the car agreeing to pay the balance by weekly instalments of Rs. 60 and executing a bond therefor.

2. That in the said bond the said accused made the following stipulation:—

“Failing payment of any four consecutive instalments, the bill to become due at once and for such consideration I do further agree that the motor car shall remain their absolute property till such time and period as the balance is liquidated in full. That I further undertake not to part with the possession of the said motor car, do or suffer anything to be done whereby the same may be distrained or taken in execution, or deal with the motor car otherwise than in the usual course of my business.”

3. That the said accused having stopped payment of the instalments stipulated by him, your petitioner instituted a suit in the Original Side of the Hon'ble High Court for the money due and obtained a decree in May 1916.

4. That thereafter when your petitioner went to attach the said motor car, he came to know that the accused had sold the car to Sheik Samir above named on or about the 24th June 1916 accepting Rs. 1,300 only as the price therefor.

5. That your petitioner thereafter instituted a complaint in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, charging the accused Sasi Bhusan Das Gupta aforesaid with an offence under section 406, Indian Penal Code, and your petitioner obtained a search warrant from the said Court in execution of which the car was brought before the Court where it is now lying.

6. That the case was tried by Mr. K. B. Das Gupta, Presidency Magistrate, who on the 4th January 1916 examined your petitioner and the aforesaid Sheik Samir as a witness called by the Court, and discharged the accused under section 253, Criminal Procedure Code, and made an order directing the car to be made over to the aforesaid Sheik Samir.”

* * * * *

The order of the Presidency Magistrate was in these terms: “I find from the judgment of the Hon'ble Judge of the High Court of the 19th May 1916 that it was held by the Hon'ble Judge that it was an executed contract of sale under which the accused took the car from the complainant. After the case was disposed of in the High Court, the accused sold the car to Sheik Samir. He sold it knowing that it was his property. So I cannot find that he dishonestly disposed of it. The case for the prosecution thus fails. The accused is discharged.”

The decree of the Hon'ble High Court referred to in paragraph 3 of the petition was in these terms:—

* * * * * It is ordered, and decreed, that the defendant do pay to the plaintiff

LALA C. EMPEROR.

the sum of Rs. 2,310 with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date hereof until realisation. * * * *

Babu Manmotha Nath Mookerjee, for the Petitioner, contended that the transaction was on hire-purchase system.

The title in the goods (car) could not pass till the whole amount was paid or realised.

The opposite party was clearly guilty under section 406, Indian Penal Code, because knowing full well that the price had not been paid and as such according to the agreement he could not be the owner of the car, the opposite party disposed of the same in violation of the express terms of the contract.

At any rate the accused should be retried for an offence under section 206, Indian Penal Code, for fraudulently transferring the car to prevent its seizure in execution.

Mr. S. K. Sen (with him Babus Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Surendra Kumar Bose), for the Opposite Party.—The transaction was an out and out sale and the car was not taken on hire-purchase system and as such the opposite party was the owner and could deal with the same in any manner he liked.

The petitioner having got a decree for the price of the car, the contractual obligation ceased to exist and the contract merged in the decree and as such the opposite party could not be guilty of a criminal offence for violating the terms of the contract.

The petitioner had applied in the Civil Court for the appointment of a Receiver to take charge of the car; the prayer was apparently not granted and the opposite party bona fide sold the car after the decree was passed.

There was no allegation before the learned Presidency Magistrate that the car was fraudulently sold. This is a new case made in the High Court. This Court has no power to order a further enquiry for an offence under section 206, Indian Penal Code, because no sanction has been obtained from the Civil Court for the prosecution of the opposite party under the said section.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Fourth Presidency Magistrate by which he discharged the accused person under the provisions of section 253, Criminal Procedure Code. The complainant in the case was one A. A. Cohen, and it appears that on what may be described as a hire-purchase agreement the accused opposite party has obtained from him a motor car. A sum of Rs. 2,310 remained due upon the car, and in that state of things the complainant brought a suit on the Original Side of this Court, praying inter alia for the appointment of a Receiver and the issue of an injunction. He obtained a decree directing payment by the defendant in that suit of the sum of Rs. 2,310 and also costs. No lien on the car was declared; and it would seem that the prayer for the issue of an injunction and the appointment of Receiver was refused. Before the Presidency Magistrate the complainant brought his suit on the footing that the car was still his property, and that in disposing of the car in contravention of the terms of the original contract the accused person had acted dishonestly. But it appears to us that the original contract has been merged in the decree, and it is, therefore, rather difficult to say at the present stage that the car still remains the property of the complainant.

We are, therefore, unable to make this Rule absolute. But we leave it open to the complainant to apply for sanction to the Court which made the decree to the taking of proceedings in view of the provisions of section 206, Indian Penal Code, or to take such other steps as he may be advised. In these terms this Rule is discharged.

Rule discharged.

Criminal reference by the first Additional Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 24th November 1916, LALA V. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—This case has got into a bad tangle. It appears from the evidence for the prosecution that Lala, Udai Ram, Moja, Har Chandi and Puran were convicted of offences under sections 325 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code, Udai Ram and Moja under section 323 and the others were convicted under section 325. The accused applied in revision to the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge of Aligarh. The view apparently taken, though this is not clear, by the learned Sessions Judge was that Lala was attempting to take cattle to the pound; that Kallua, Parshadi, Genda and Heta tried to rescue the cattle by force. Upon their doing so Lala, Udai Ram, Moja, Puran and Harchandi assaulted those who were trying to rescue the cattle. As a result both parties received injuries and one of them Lala accused received grievous hurt. The learned Sessions Judge, being of opinion that the Magistrate had gone wrong in convicting the applicants, was about to report the case to this Court but the parties, according to the learned Sessions Judge, have compromised and have duly attested a form before him to that effect. He sends the case on with a recommendation that the conviction and sentence be quashed. The so-called application for compromise is No. 14A of the record. In it Parshadi on the one side and Puran, Udai Ram, Moja and Lala on the other, say that the parties have come to an understanding with each other and the prayer is that the case be struck off and not decided. The paper No. 14 A is worthless. In the first place one of the accused Harchandi is no party to it. In the second place, and this is the more serious difficulty, Kallua who was one of the persons to whom hurt was caused is also no party to it. Section 345, clause (1), of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down that the offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code described in the first two columns of the table next following may be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table. When we look down the table and come to the offence of causing hurt under section 323, the person by whom the offence may be compromised is the person to whom the hurt is caused. The learned Sessions Judge appears to have misunderstood the meaning of the word "compounded." The table shows that the person by whom the offence may be compounded is the person to whom the hurt is caused, it is not the person who causes the hurt. In the case with which I am dealing the persons hurt were Parshadi and Kallua.

Again on turning to section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I find that while the High Court may exercise several powers enumerated therein which are conferred on a Court of Appeal, the powers granted to the Court of Appeal by section 345, are not mentioned. Looking to the case as reported by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, I can find no adequate reason why the conviction and sentence should be quashed.

There is another paper on the record No. 35A which purports to be a compromise between Lala, on the one side and Kallua, Parshadi, Genda and Heta on the other and it says that the matter between them has been settled and the case be struck off from under trial cases. It is described by the learned Sessions Judge as a cross-complaint. The Magistrate before whom the paper was filed had endorsed upon it the words: "I allow the compromise, these are cross-cases and the parties are related. I acquit the accused under section 345 of the Criminal Procedure Code". The case which the Magistrate had before him was a complaint under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code. How the learned Magistrate could accept a compromise under this section it is difficult to understand, especially as some of the persons to whom hurt had been caused were no parties to the compromise. As mentioned above the learned Sessions Judge describes the compromise as a cross-complaint. It is nothing of the kind. Lala, Udai Ram, Moja, Harchandi and Puran were sent up by the Police for the offence of causing grievous hurt under section 325. Lala appears to have filed a complaint against Kallua, Parshadi and Heta for the same offence, i.e., the offence under section 325 of the same date. There was only one case. The remarks made by the learned Sessions Judge and the Magistrate show the extreme danger there is of taking up what are supposed to be two cases together. There was only one case of which the Police took cognizance and which Lala tried to bolster up by a complaint of his own. The paper No. 35A is, for the reasons given above, equally defective.

I refer the learned Sessions Judge to the cases of Ram Chandra v. Emperor (1) and Murray v. Queen-Empress (2).

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 216 B—"Assisting in any way to evade apprehension", meaning of—Harbouring offender.

The words "assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension" in section 216B, Indian Penal Code, are not to be read as ejusdem generis with the two methods specified in the preceding part of the section, viz., supplying with food, shelter, etc. [p. 732, col. 1.]

Where the accused in answer to an enquiry of an Inspector of Police replied that his brother, who was charged under section 411, Indian Penal Code, was in the house and promised to produce him, but on going inside the house he returned after a delay of 15 minutes with his brother's son and said that he had made a mistake, as the son was in the house and not his brother, and subsequently on search being made by the Police, the brother was found hiding in the house:

Held, that as by the methods he employed the accused did give time and opportunity to the offender to conceal himself or effect his escape, he was guilty under section 216B for giving material assistance to the offender in evading apprehension, [p. 732, col. 1.]

Mr. Zorab and Babus Manmotha Nath Mukerjee and Santosh Kumar Pal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Remfry, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner has been convicted under section 216 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

It appears that the petitioner's brother one Azizar Rahman was charged with the commission of an offence punishable under section 411, Indian Penal Code, that to the knowledge of the petitioner first warrants for Azizar's arrest and then a proclamation under the provisions of section 87 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had been issued by a Magistrate. It also appears that the proclamation had been duly published at the house in which the two brothers as joint owners used to reside.

On the 23rd September 1916, on information received, an Inspector of Police with a sergeant and a posse of constables proceeded to his house and interviewed the petitioner.

The facts then found against the petitioner are that in answer to the Inspector's enquiry the petitioner replied that Azizar was in the house and promised to produce him. He then went inside the house and after a delay of 15 minutes returned with Azizar's son and said that he had made a mistake and that it was the son who had come to the house the preceding evening. The learned Sessions Judge has further found that the statement made to the Police Officer in the first instance, the delay of 15 minutes spent, as the Police Officer would presumably infer, on a search for the offender, the subsequent production of Azizar's son, and the false statement made with regard to Azizar himself, who on search was in fact found in hiding in the thatch of the roof, were all parts of a plan by which the petitioner sought to give and did give Azizar Rahman an opportunity of making his escape or of concealing himself.

On behalf of the petitioner it is contended that the facts found are insufficient for the finding that the petitioner "assisted (the offender) in any way to evade apprehension" and so "harboured" him within the meaning of sections 216A and 216B, Indian Penal Code. In support of this contention it is urged that the words "assisting in any way" should be read as ejusdem generis with the two methods specified in the preceding part of the section, and in further support of this view we are referred to the case of Emperor v. Husain Bakhsh (1). But this case though entitled to our great respect is not one which we are bound to follow and moreover the facts in that case were wholly different. If the intention had been that the words "assisting in any way" should be read as ejusdem generis with the former part of the section, we should have expected the Legislature to frame this provision of law somewhat in the following manner: "the word 'harbouring' includes the giving of assistance by supplying a person with shelter, food, etc., means of conveyance or otherwise."

(1) 25 A. 261; A. W. N. (1903) 29.

As the section has been framed, we are not prepared to hold that the ways in which assistance may be rendered must, for the purposes of the section, be restricted to methods which may properly be regarded as ejusdem generis or of a like nature with supplies of food or of other necessary articles.

On the contrary we are of opinion that by the methods he employed the petitioner did give time and opportunity for the offender to conceal himself or effect his escape and thereby gave him material assistance in evading apprehension.

In this view the petitioner has been properly convicted but having regard to all the facts we are of opinion that the sentence is unnecessarily severe. We, therefore, reduce the sentence from six months to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The petitioner will now surrender to his bail and serve out the unexpired portion of his sentence.

Sentence reduced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Acquittal, setting aside of—Revision—Mistake of law as to accused's right to property—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Theft—Bona fide claim of right—Execution—Land delivered to decree-holder in execution of decree—Crops growing, whether pass.

Where, in execution of a decree in a title suit, possession of land is given to the decree-holder the growing crops pass with the land. [p. 733, col. 2.]

The accused, having cut and removed paddy from a land of which possession had been delivered to the complainant in execution of a decree in a title suit, was prosecuted for theft, but was acquitted by the Magistrate on the ground that he had grown the paddy prior to the delivery of possession:

Held, (1) that the case had not been properly tried and, therefore, the order of acquittal could not stand; [p. 733, col. 2.]

(2) that the case should be re-tried but that the accused should not be convicted of theft if it was proved that though he may have made a mistake as to his rights under the law, he was acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right. [p. 733, col. 2.]

FACTS of the case material to this report are as follows:—

The petitioner, after having obtained a settlement from his landlord on payment of the proper selami, had been in possession of the disputed plot of land as tenant till 1912. After the death of the landlord, his son illegally settled the land with the accused who dispossessed the petitioner. Thereupon the petitioner brought a title suit against the accused in the Civil Court, and the Civil Court found that the petitioner was a tenant in possession of the land after having obtained settlement from the landlord on payment of a selami of Rs. 600 and that the defendant wrongfully dispossessed the petitioner. The petitioner obtained peaceful possession of the land through the Civil Court peon. Thereafter, the accused entered upon the land armed with lathis and other weapons, and forcibly cut away paddy growing on the land. The petitioner prosecuted the accused for criminal trespass, rioting and forcibly removing the paddy and causing hurt. The accused admitted having taken away the paddy but stated further that the paddy was grown by him before the delivery of possession to the petitioner. The Magistrate apparently believed the prosecution story that the accused carried away the paddy by force, but came to the conclusion that he did not commit any offence thereby inasmuch as the paddy was grown by the accused and acquitted the accused under section 258, Criminal Procedure Code. Against that order of acquittal the petitioner moved the High Court.

Babu Bejoy Kumar Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.—The report of the Magistrate is in favour of the petitioner's case. As a matter of fact he has found that there has been a miscarriage of justice in this case, but as in his opinion the case is of a trivial nature he has refused to ask the Local Government to prefer an appeal against the order of acquittal.

The opposite party after he was defeated in the civil suit went to the disputed land with his men, and forcibly cut and removed the paddy, after the Civil Court peon had given possession of the disputed land to the petitioner. I submit that the learned Magistrate erred in law in holding that the accused had a right to forcibly cut and remove the paddy, after the petitioner had taken possession of the land through Court, even though the paddy was grown by the accused. At any rate, the learned Judge ought to have held that the accused was guilty of criminal trespass and rioting by going to assert his right or supposed right by the use of force. It was improper on the part of the Magistrate to dismiss the case summarily in this way. The order of acquittal is evidently bad in law. The evidence as regards rioting was not at all taken into consideration by the Magistrate.

Babu Satis Chandra Ghose (with him Babus Manmotha Nath Mukherjee and Aruna Chandra Ghose.) for the Opposite Party.—Sufficient cause has not been shown for your Lordships' interference under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code. In Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhuri (1) it has been held that in the case of an acquittal the High Court should not interfere unless prima facie there has been a gross miscarriage of justice. No such gross mistake of law or miscarriage of justice has been shown as would justify your Lordships' interference. The paddy was grown before delivery of possession and the land was in possession of my client for three or four years under settlement from the landlord. The paddy was taken by him under a bona fide claim of right, and hence no offence was committed by him.

JUDGMENT.—This case arises out of a dispute regarding apparently 9 bighas of land. The Magistrate appears to have found that as a matter of fact in a suit brought by the complainant against the accused for declaration of his title to and recovery of possession of the said land the complainant was successful. In execution of that decree the complainant obtained possession from the Court. Thereafter the accused, opposite party removed from the land, the possession of which had been given to the complainant, the crop that the accused had grown thereon. The charges brought against the accused were charges of rioting and charges of theft. The charge of rioting has not been considered by the Magistrate, and in so far as the charge of theft is concerned the learned Magistrate has acquitted the accused on the ground that he had grown the crop prior to the delivery of possession. In this clearly he has fallen into a mistake of law. When in execution of a decree in a title suit possession of land is given, the growing crop passes with the land.

In that view of the matter it is quite clear that this case has not been properly tried, and we, therefore, set aside the order complained of and direct that the complainant's complaint be further enquired into and the case against the accused-opposite party re-tried. On the re-trial, of course, care will have to be taken not to convict the accused of theft, should it be found that though he may have made a mistake as to his rights under the law he was yet acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right.

Order set aside.

Police Officers investigating a crime under Chapter XIV of the Code.

Non-attendance, therefore, in obedience to a summons issued by a Sub-Inspector of Police and served personally on an amin requiring him to give evidence at a Police investigation constitutes an offence under section 174, Indian Penal Code.

The matter, however, is one to be departmentally dealt with. The practice of launching a prosecution without consultation with the delinquent's official superior deprecated.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Deputy Magistrate, Kavali, in Criminal Appeal No. 10 of 1916, preferred against that of the Court of the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate, Kavali, in Calendar Case No. 34 of 1916.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The petitioner is an amin of a Civil Court. He has been convicted for intentional disobedience to an order of a Sub-Inspector of Police issued under section 160 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to attend at an enquiry to be held by the Police into a case of mischief by fire.

The case seems to have arisen out of some inter-departmental jealousy, which is much to be deprecated. This hardly appears to have been a suitable case for criminal prosecution of one Government servant for disobedience to the order of another Government servant. If the Police Authorities had addressed the District Munsif or the District Judge, the amin might have been punished departmentally, if after enquiry it appeared that his conduct had been contumacious. Criminal proceedings were, however, instituted with the sanction of the District Superintendent of Police and ended in the conviction of the amin for an offence under section 174, Indian Penal Code. In the result a nominal punishment would have met the ends of justice. The Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Kavali imposed a fine of Rs. 100 on this public servant, whose monthly pay is only Rs. 8. On appeal this was reduced by the Deputy Magistrate of Kavali to Rs. 5.

In revision Dr. Swaminadhan relied on section 72 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which provides that where the person summoned is in the active service of the Government or of a Railway Company, the summons shall ordinarily be sent in duplicate to the head of the office in which such person is employed. The amin in the present case was in the active service of Government, being engaged at the time in getting a crop harvested under the orders of a Civil Court. He refused to receive the Police notice unless it was sent through his departmental superior, his excuse being that if he absented himself from the village, the parties to the civil litigation might have tampered with the straw and grain for which he was responsible.

I am of opinion that section 72 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot help the petitioner. From the context it evidently is intended to apply only to summonses issued by a Court of Justice and not to orders of Police Officers investigating a crime under Chapter XIV.

The petitioner was, therefore, legally bound to attend at the instance of the Sub-Inspector and his omission to do so was intentional.

The conviction was thus legal and I cannot interfere with it. I do not consider that the Police Authorities behaved reasonably in the matter. The Sub-Inspector might well have taken the amin's statement at Annavaram when he saw that the amin had a responsible public duty to perform there and could not conveniently leave the place. Instead, he ordered him to attend at Chinakraka Police Station next day without allowing him time to write to his departmental superior and arrange for a substitute to take his place during his absence. I reduce the fine to one anna and direct the remainder, if paid, to be refunded.

As I am unable to make any order as to costs, I will merely place my opinion on the record that the circumstances of this case are such that the amin deserves to have the costs, incurred by him in defending himself in the prosecution and in appealing here and in the Deputy Magistrate's Court, defrayed by the Government.

Sentence reduced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (7)—Sanction for prosecution of witness during pendency of suit, propriety of—District Judge, whether can revoke sanction granted by Subordinate Judge.

Sanction for the prosecution of a witness for deposing falsely in a suit which is still pending is improper, particularly when the witness is a near relative and am mukhtiar of the plaintiff, a lady who depends upon him for the proper prosecution of her suit.

Generally speaking, it is not desirable that witnesses should be prosecuted while the case in which they have deposed or are about to depose is still pending.

On a petition to the High Court for the revocation of a sanction for prosecution granted by a Subordinate Judge, the High Court having formed a firm opinion as to the impropriety of the sanction, set it aside, though it felt that the proper course for the petitioner should have been to apply to the District Judge under section 195 (7) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 14th November 1916.

Sir Satyendra Prosanna Sinha, Dr. Dawarka Nath Mitter and Babu Manindra Nath Banerjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Norton and Babus Haradhan Chatterjee and Manmotha Nath Ganguli, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the revocation of a sanction granted by the Subordinate Judge of Howrah. The sanction was granted in a suit brought by a lady of the name of Kali Dasi Dasi and her case was that a certain business was the exclusive property of her husband, while the case of the defendant, who is the brother of her deceased husband, was that it was the joint property of the two brothers. In the course of certain proceedings for the appointment of a Receiver it appears that the person whose prosecution has been directed, being the brother of the plaintiff, swore an affidavit to the effect that there are entries in the books of the business showing that the defendant was in fact a servant. Some, if not all, the books of business were apparently brought into Court but it is stated that no clear proof with regard to them was given, and it does not seem to be certain that all the books of the business were produced. It is in respect of this statement in the affidavit that the prosecution has been sanctioned. Now it appears that the petitioner, who is the brother of the plaintiff, is also her am mukhtiar and is the person on whom she depends for the proper prosecution of her suit. Generally speaking it is not desirable that witnesses should be prosecuted while the case in which they have deposed or are about to depose is still pending, and in this particular case, having regard to the position of the petitioner towards the plaintiff, we think the impropriety of such a step is all the greater. We, therefore, set aside the sanction which has been granted by the Subordinate Judge.

We may then observe that it has been objected in law that this application should have been made to the District Judge of Hooghly. This argument is based upon the language of section 195 (7) and of sub-clause (a) of that sub-section and also on the fact that the number of suits exceeding Rs. 5,000 in value, in which appeals lie from the decision of the Subordinate Judge to this Court, are much fewer in number than the suits of Rs. 5,000 and under in which appeals lie to the District Judge. That in such a case the application for revocation of sanction should be made to the District Judge is the view taken in the cases reported as Imperatrix v. Lakshman Sakharam (1) and Anant Ramchandra Lottikar In re (2), and those cases appear to have been followed in this Court in Maduray Pillay v. Elderton (3). Having, however, formed a firm opinion as to the impropriety of the sanction that has been granted we do not think it necessary, whatever may be the correct reading of section 195 (7), to send the petitioner before us back to the District Court in order to his obtaining relief which we are prepared and are competent to give him.

HARENDRA KUMAR DE AND OTHERS—
OPPOSITE PARTY.

Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act (II of 1907), s. 3, order passed under—Jurisdiction of District Magistrate to interfere with.

A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order passed by a Criminal Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under section 3 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act, 1907. [p. 737, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Additional District Magistrate, Dacca.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Petitioners, submitted that an order passed by a first class Magistrate under section 3 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act was a judicial order and as such the District Magistrate or the Additional District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to revise it or pass any final order in the matter by way of setting aside or modifying the order passed by the Trying Magistrate. He could only refer the case to this Hon'ble Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, if he thought fit. In Rajani Khemtawali v. Emperor (1) it was held that the High Court can interfere under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code. See also Kokil Ram v. Emperor (2), which is a case under the Bengal Disorderly Houses Act, and this Hon'ble Court interfered under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. J. N. Ray (with him Babu Khitish Chandra Neogy), for the Opposite Party, contended that the order passed was a purely administrative order and the Additional District Magistrate in his administrative or executive capacity had jurisdiction to modify or set aside the order of the Trying Magistrate. Section 3 does not create any offence; the proceedings are purely administrative. See Rajani Khemtawali v. Emperor (1).

(2) 6 C. L. J. 710; 6 Cr. L. J. 423.

[RICHARDSON, J.—The Magistrate issues a Rule and the party is called upon to show cause—is not this a judicial act?]

The proceedings seem to be in the nature of proceedings under sections 133, 144, Criminal Procedure Code, disobedience to which is punished under section 188, Indian Penal Code, as in the present proceedings under section 6 of the Act.

[TEUNON, J.—See section 5. It speaks of "prosecution," and proceedings have to be instituted on "sanction" or "complaint."]

In Rajani Khemtawali v. Emperor (1) it was held that the word "prosecutions" was a mistake.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—In this case it appears that on a complaint made in accordance with the provisions of section 5 (c) of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act, 1907, proceedings or prosecutions under section 3 were taken against the owners and occupiers of houses Nos. 7, 25 and 26 of a certain lane in the city of Dacca. On the enquiry held in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the aforesaid Act, the enquiring Magistrate found that as a matter of fact the houses in question were used as brothels, as disorderly houses and for the purpose of habitual prostitution to the annoyance of the inhabitants of the vicinity, that is to say, in contravention of the provisions of section 2 (b) of the same Act. He thereupon directed that such use of the houses in question should be discontinued within fifteen days from the date of the order. The persons affected by the order moved the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca and obtained from him an order by which he practically stayed the order of the enquiring Magistrate for a period of six months and also modified it in certain other particulars.

The question involved in this Rule is whether the District Magistrate had jurisdiction or was competent to modify the order of the enquiring Magistrate in the manner in which he has done, on in any manner whatsoever. Neither in the Act itself, nor in the Criminal Procedure Code, nor in any law that has been brought to our notice do we find any provision which justifies the District Magistrate in interfering with an order passed by a Criminal Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under section 3 of the Act, to which we have made reference. It is also clear that if orders made under section 3 are modified by other Magistrates, difficulties would arise in applying the provisions of section 6 of the Act. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the Magistrate's action was wholly without jurisdiction, and in so far as it is an order modifying the Trying Magistrate's order and not an order directed to Police Officers, we direct that it be set aside.

RICHARDSON, J.—I have only one word to add with reference to the case of Rajani Khemtawali v. Emperor (1), which was cited in the course of argument. Whatever opinion may have been expressed in the judgment delivered in that case, I do not understand that any point was actually decided by the learned Judges inconsistent with our decision in the present case.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 323—Conviction—Loss of record, whether ground for acquittal—Sentence, petty—Re-trial, whether can be ordered.

Petitioner was convicted under section 323 of the Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. He moved the Sessions Judge to exercise his revisional powers and to refer the case to the High Court. It was discovered that the record of the case was lost, so that the Sessions Judge could obtain no materials upon which to make his reference. He, therefore, asked the High Court to set aside the conviction and sentence and to order a re-trial:

Held, that the loss of the record after conviction was no ground for the acquittal of the accused and that the sentence being a petty one no re-trial could be ordered.

Criminal reference made by the District Judge, Chapra.

Mr. Sarju Persad, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that the petitioner was convicted by a Deputy Magistrate exercising first class powers of an offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. The petitioner then moved the Sessions Judge to exercise his revisional powers and to refer the case to the High Court. It was then discovered that the record of the case was lost, so that the learned Sessions Judge could obtain no materials upon which to make his reference. He has, therefore, asked this Court to set aside the conviction and sentence and to order a re-trial.

In my opinion this is just one of those cases in which a re-trial should not be ordered.

The loss of a record after conviction is no ground for the acquittal of the accused, for the logical conclusion from such an argument would be that in the event of a wholesale destruction of records by fire or earthquake, all accused persons whose records had been lost and who sought relief in appeal or revision would be entitled to acquittal. There is no authority in law for such a proposition.

If this had been a serious case in which the accused had been sentenced to a substantial term of imprisonment, there might have been some ground for directing a re-trial; but the case is a petty one, the fine inflicted small, and the Trial Magistrate an officer exercising first class powers. I do not think that in a case of this kind I should exercise my revisional powers either to set aside the conviction or direct a re-trial.

The reference is accordingly discharged.

Section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code is imperative and mandatory. [p. 738, col. 2.]

In proceeding under that section a Magistrate is not justified in assuming the role of an arbitrator, simply because both the parties agree to his acting as such. Consent or waiver of the parties cannot invest a Magistrate with jurisdiction which he does not possess [p. 738, col. 2.]

Where in a proceeding under section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a party appears and shows cause, alleging that what is claimed as a public pathway is not so, the Magistrate should record evidence on the matter of the complaint as in a summons case, and should at the outset enquire into the bona fides or speciosity of the claim. [p. 738, col. 2.]

Criminal revision upon a reference under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Sessions Judge, Jessore, for setting aside an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Narail, dated 24th May 1916.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Letter of Reference by the Sessions Judge to the Registrar of the High Court:—
“SIR,

Under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, I herewith transmit the record of the case noted in the margin to be laid before the High Court with the following report:—

(1) A brief analysis of the case.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail passed a conditional order on the petitioners to show cause why they should not remove the huts erected by them from a pathway lawfully used by the public. They appeared and showed cause. Neither party, however, adduced any evidence. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate was asked to arbitrate. He made the order absolute after a local enquiry on the 24th of May last.

(2) The order recommended for revision.

The order by which the conditional order for removal of obstruction was made absolute.

(3) In what particular portion of that order the Court making the reference considers an error on a point of law to exist.

The whole order. Section 137, Criminal Procedure Code, though imperative in its character, was not followed.

(4) The grounds on which in the opinion of this Court the order should be reversed.

(a) The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not follow the procedure laid down in section 137, Criminal Procedure Code. When the petitioners appeared and showed cause, when they alleged that what was claimed as a public pathway was not so, when they urged it was a part of their homestead, the learned Magistrate should have recorded evidence on the matter of the complaint as in a summons case. Section 137, Criminal Procedure Code, is imperative and mandatory. He was not justified in assuming the role of an arbitrator, because both the parties agreed to his being so. When the parties wished him to blink at law, he should not have readily agreed to it. Consent of parties or waiver did not vest him with jurisdiction. There is ample authority in support of this view: see Upendra Nath v. Rampal (1) and Paresh Nath Biswas v. Emperor (2). The order was illegally made absolute therefore.

(b) It does not appear that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate inquired at the outset into the bona fides or speciosity of the claim of the petitioners. He should have clearly inquired and found whether the petitioners urged a bona fide claim or elaborated a mere pretence to oust him of jurisdiction. This was absolutely necessary: see Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhusan Sarkar (3) and Rakhal Chandra Shaha v. Kailash Chandra Sarkar (4). The Magistrate now urges in his explanation that when he found the pathway a public thoroughfare, it necessarily followed that he held the claim of the petitioners to be a mere pretence. I do not think such an inference is always justifiable. The petitioners may have honestly, though mistakenly, believed in the truth of the claim they put forward (see section 3, clause 20 of Act X of 1897). It is moreover not open to the Magistrate to add by his explanation to the order complained of: see Madhu Sudan Das Gupta v Sasti Prosad Nandy (5).

On both these grounds, I am of opinion that the Magistrate illegally made the conditional order absolute. I recommend its reversal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 235
(1)—Joint trial for distinct offences against different persons committed at different times, whether legal—“Same transaction,” meaning of.

The trial of several accused in respect of several distinct offences committed at different times and at different places against different persons is illegal. The fact that the complaints were lodged on the same day or that the motive for the commission of the offences was the same in all the occurrences does not at all go to show that the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. [p. 740, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Judicial Commissioner, Ranchi.

Mr. Sharoshi Chandra Mitra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Simdega in the District of Ranchi under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of four complaints lodged before the Magistrate by four different persons:—

(1) Sukra Uraon lodged a complaint in respect of extortion, wrongful confinement, and possibly of criminal trespass said to have been committed on the 15th July 1916;

(2) Lende Uraon lodged a complaint in respect of criminal intimidation and trespass said to have been committed on the 16th of July 1916;

(3) Saijniwa Uraon lodged a complaint in respect of a criminal trespass of the 22nd of July 1916; and

(4) Chuku Uraon lodged a complaint in respect of a criminal trespass said to have been committed on the 22nd of July 1916.

The place of occurrence in each of these cases is different.

On appeal the learned Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi, in his judgment dated the 18th of January 1917, observes as follows:—“It seems that the accused was on his trial for four acts of criminal trespass committed on three separate dates. I am not prepared to hold that these acts under the special circumstances which existed were not so connected together as to form the same transaction. The joint trial is justified under section 235 (1). The details which appeared in the explanation should have been mentioned in the judgment.”

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate in his judgment does not at all hold that the above offences on separate dates were committed in the course of the same transaction. He has, however, in the explanation that he submitted to the Judicial Commissioner, tried to show that the aforesaid offences were committed in the same transaction. He says in his explanation: “The place of occurrence being village Bhaimunda, Tola Jumka Chhapar, Sukra Oraon’s case included a complaint of extortion said to have taken place in Khinda, the trespass occurring in Bhaimunda. All these complaints were brought the same day and the complainants are witnesses for themselves and for each other. It appears that on the same day and place these persons were made to sign an agreement regarding the terms of their tenancies. These terms are all of such a nature that it is quite impossible to believe that the accused obtained the so-called signatures honestly and it was to enforce these terms that he committed trespass in interfering with the cultivation of each of the complainants."

The above explanation of the Magistrate is, I think, not sufficient to show that the offences were so connected as to form the same transaction. The agreement, to enforce which the offences are said to have been committed, was executed on a date long prior to the dates of the occurrences complained of. The fact that the complaints were lodged on the same day or that the motive for the commission of the offences was the same in all these occurrences does not at all go to show that the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. The act complained of in each case is a complete transaction in itself, namely to compel the complainant to pay enhanced rent or to quit the land. The object in each case is distinct from and independent of the other cases. There is no distinct finding of the Courts below that the offences were in the course of the same transaction.

This case is similar to the case of Nanda Kumar Sirkar v. Emperor (1), where three persons laid three separate complaints against the accused, alleging that they committed rioting and individually caused hurt to each of the complainants, and it was held that though the origin and the preparations for the commission of the offences might be the same, the offences were distinct from each other and the joint trial of the accused for the offences was illegal.

The trial of the accused in respect of the four distinct offences committed in this case at different times and at different places must be held to be illegal and the conviction must be set aside.

The question is whether the case should be remanded for re-trial separately in respect of each of the complaints lodged against the accused. I do not think any useful purpose will be served by having a re-trial.

The main charge in the complaint of Sukra Uraon is that of extortion and of wrongful confinement of the complainant by the accused. This has been disbelieved by the first Court.

There is no mention in the complaint petitions of Sukra and Lende of their ploughs having been turned out of the fields.

In the other cases the ploughs of the complainants are said to have been turned out of their respective fields.

I have looked into the evidence on the record and I find that the evidence consists mainly of the four complainants themselves. It is doubtful if the evidence proves conclusively that the accused was present at the time when the ploughs were turned out of their fields.

The case against the accused is of a vague and general character, of having given orders to his servants in execution of which the ploughs of the complainants were turned out of their respective fields.

The conviction is, therefore, set aside and the application is allowed. The fine, if realized, must be refunded.

Application allowed.

The manufacture and sale of Mrita Sanjivani Sudha prepared in accordance with the "Ayurvedic" Pharmacopœia and used for medicinal purposes only otherwise than in conformity with the provisions of the Excise Act is an offence, unless it is exempted by notification under the provisions of section 90 of the Act. GANESH CHANDRA SIKDAR v. EMPEROR.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee and Phanindra Lal Maitra, for the Petitioners.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. C. Mitter, Advocate-General (with him Mr. Camell, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, Bengal), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioners before us have been convicted in respect of the manufacture and sale of a liquid substance spoken of as Mrita Sanjivani Sudha and have been sentenced under section 46 (a) of the Bengal Excise Act V of 1909 each to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or in default to undergo six weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

The manufacture and sale is admitted and the contention of the petitioners, who are Kavirajes by profession, is that Mrita Sanjivani Sudha is a beneficent drug, prepared in accordance with a formula to be found in an Ayurvedic Pharmacopœia, and used for medicinal purposes only. The ingredients, it is said, are gur, ginger, betel nut and various barks, and after a certain period of fermentation from this base with certain additions in the shape of spices, crushed fruits, and balela skins the finished product is obtained by a process of distillation. The preparation, there is evidence, is prescribed for women suffering from fever or bowel complaints after childbirth and other virtues claimed for it are that it stimulates the appetite, aids digestion, and when taken at bed time soothes the wakeful.

It may be conceded that the preparation possesses all these virtues, but the question still remains whether it is an excisable article within the meaning of the Bengal Excise Act. In that Act excisable article has been defined as meaning "any liquor or intoxicating drug as defined by or under this Act" and in section 2, clause (14), as amended by Bengal Act VII of 1914, liquor has again been defined as meaning "liquid consisting of or containing alcohol" and as including various specified substances.

It is not disputed that Mrita Sanjivani Sudha contains alcohol and analysis shows that the four sample phials or bottles submitted to the Chemical Examiner consisted of the usual volatile byproducts of distillation and fermentation, volatile essential oils, water and alcohol, the proportion of alcohol ranging from 68·3 per cent. to 87 per cent. In other words, the preparation as sold or as prepared and put up for sale is an alcoholic liquid varying in strength from 31·7 to 13 underproof. There can, therefore, be no question that the manufacture and sale of this preparation otherwise than in conformity with the provisions of the Excise Act is an offence, unless the petitioners can show that this article has been exempted by notification under the provisions of section 90 of the Act or that by reason of "repugnancy in the subject" the definition is not applicable. It is conceded that the article is not within the terms of any notification issued under section 90. It is, however, contended that to Mrita Sanjivani Sudha, as a medicinal preparation manufactured, prescribed and sold by Kavirajes, the definition contained in the Act does not apply and in support of this contention reliance is placed on the cases reported as Gonesh Chunder Sikdar v. Queen-Empress (1), Emperor v. Moti Lal Chander (2) and Satish Chandra Roy v. Emperor (3). It is unnecessary to discuss these cases which were all decided prior to the amendment of the Act made in 1914. Whatever may have been the state of the law at the time when the foregoing cases were decided, the intention of the law has been made clear by the amended Act of 1914, and to say now that a preparation containing alcohol is not within the provisions of the Bengal Excise Act simply because it is a medicinal preparation or may be used for medicinal purposes, would be to stultify this Court and ignore the plain purpose of the Legislature.

On the question of sentence, having regard to the fact that the manufacture of this Mrita Sanjivani Sudha has been continued on the strength of the decision in favour of the elder petitioner in Gonesh Chunder Sikdar v. Queen-Empress (1) and the further fact that it does not appear that prior to the present proceedings the petitioners were warned by the excise authorities, we think that a lesser sentence will meet the ends of justice. We, therefore, reduce the sentence in each case to a fine of Rs. 100, in default three weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 271, 164—Joint trial several accused—Plea of guilty entered by one of accused—Procedure—Confession—Recording of confession by Magistrate—Magistrate, power of, to put questions—Inspection of scene of occurrence by Judge accompanied by confessing accused—Additional statements made by confessing accused and recorded by Judge, admissibility of.

The trial of an accused does not necessarily come to an end as soon as he offers a plea of guilty, and where a Judge does not convict on such a plea the only other course open to him is to proceed with the trial of the accused. [p. 745, col. 2; p. 746, col. 1.]

When a plea of guilty is entered by one of several co-accused who are to be tried jointly, a Judge has, under section 271 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a discretion to decide either that the accused be convicted on such plea or that he should be put on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty. The proper procedure to follow in such cases is that if the Judge convicts the accused on his plea of guilty, he should be removed from the dock in which case he can be called as a witness against the other accused; or the Judge should put it on record that he decides to put the accused on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty. [p. 746, col. 1.]

The Judge is bound to read and explain the charge to the accused and he ought to satisfy himself by interrogation of the accused, if necessary that he fully understands the responsibility which he assumes in making a plea of guilty. Having done so, the Judge is then in a position to exercise properly the discretion which the law allows and to put upon record the reasons which guide his discretion. The course which it is intended to pursue should not be left in doubt. [p. 746, col. 1.]

It is, however, not illegal for the Court to proceed with the trial of an accused who has pleaded guilty without previously placing upon record its reasons for doing so. [p. 746, col. 2.]

Though the law does not contemplate or authorise inquisitorial procedure by a Magistrate who is called upon to record a confession under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he is not forbidden to ask questions to satisfy himself that the statement proposed to be made is voluntary or for the purpose of making clear and intelligible any particular passage of a statement made to him. [p. 746, col. 2.]

A Magistrate not trying a case can only record the confession of an accused person if voluntarily made under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is not permissible for him to question the accused closely and at great length for the purpose of extracting statements to be afterwards used as evidence. [p. 747, col. 2.]

The statement of an accused elicited by the Magistrate in this way is not admissible in evidence. [p. 747, col. 2.]

In a case while the trial of several accused, one of whom had made a confession, was in progress, the Sessions Judge went himself to the scene of the crime accompanied by the assessors and the confessing accused, who showed him over the ground and made certain additional statements by way of comment or illustration of his confession, and the Judge made note of them:

Held, that the Judge was wrong in allowing the accused to make these additional statements which ought not to have been regarded. [p. 748, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, at Unao, dated 19th December 1916.

Mr. Ross Alston, Pandit Jagat Narain and Mr. B. B. Chandra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Wallach and H. S. Gupta, Babu Gokul Chand Rai and Mr. N. N. Ghoshal, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals have arisen out of a trial held in the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow sitting at Unao, in which five persons were charged with being concerned in the murder of a Brahmin named Suraj Bali, who was killed on the morning of the 14th August 1916 at a hamlet in the Unao District.

One of the men charged, Ram Ratan (or Ratnu), was acquitted: the other four, namely, Kesho Singh, Jungar Singh, Sirdar Singh and Ram Nath, were convicted. The two former have been sentenced to death, the two latter to transportation for life.

Kesho Singh, Jungar Singh and Sirdar Singh have appealed. The fourth man Ram Nath pleaded guilty in the Sessions Court and has not appealed: indeed in view of his plea he has no right of appeal except on the question of sentence and as he has been awarded the minimum punishment which the law allows for murder, it was obviously useless for him to attempt to bring his case before this Court.

Apart from the appeals made by Kesho Singh and Jungar Singh we have the reference made in their cases by the Sessions Judge for confirmation of the capital sentences.

We may come now to the story of the murder and the narrative of the investigation which ended in the five men being committed to the Sessions Court on the charge of murder.

KESHO SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The first information of the crime was given to the Bihar Police Station at 11 A. M., on the morning of the 14th August. The report was made by Pancham, the chaukidar of Bhadia, and the substance of it was that having heard an alarm of dacoity raised at about sunrise, he proceeded to the hamlet of Moti Khera where he found the corpse of Suraj Bali lying by a gular tree close to the houses of some Ahirs.

He represented that he had ascertained by inquiry that two men had been seen chasing Suraj Bali, that they had overtaken him and had beaten him with lathis. He had also discovered that Suraj Bali was on his way to Purwa and that he had been accompanied by Jawahir Singh. He mentioned the fact that there was litigation going on between Sirdar Singh on one side and Suraj Bali and Janaka on the other and that there was enmity between them. In describing the appearance of the body he mentioned that the only wound visible was one in the middle of the skull three or four fingers in breadth and bleeding profusely. Kesho Singh having been apprised of the report went off to the scene of the crime and began an inquiry.

Meantime a copy of the report had been sent to Mr. Darling, the District Magistrate, who passed an order dated the 15th of August directing that the inquiry should be taken at once out of Kesho Singh's hands. On the 16th, Mr. Darling and the Police Superintendent went themselves to the scene of the murder. The investigation was placed in the hands of Inspector Afzal Husain, who was assisted by Sub-Inspector Ram Chandar, the second officer of the Bihar Police Station. It was decided that Kesho Singh should be removed from Bihar while the inquiry was going on: orders to that effect were issued and Kesho Singh was posted to another station and left Bihar on the 23rd August.

There seems to be no doubt that from the first Sirdar Singh fell under suspicion of having been concerned in the murder. Apart from what was stated in the chaukidar's report it appears to have become known that on the night before the murder two strangers had been putting up at Sirdar's house in Bhadia. It was from this village that Suraj Bali had started early on the morning of the murder: he had been staying the night at the house of Musammatt Janka who lives there. To get to Purwa he would have to travel along the road which leads north-west from Bhadia. The hamlet of Moti Khera is about a mile along this road, north of Bhadia, and is a little distance off the road, towards the east. It is a small place consisting of only two or three houses.

The story of the two strangers staying at Sirdar's house seems to have been communicated to Kesho Singh as soon as he arrived and when Afzal Husain took over charge this matter necessarily became known to him.

He took up the clue and made various inquiries, statements being made to him by Ballu Nai, a resident of Bhadia, by Badlu Chamar of that village, by Raghunandan a relative of Sirdar Singh and by Sirdar Singh himself.

He took these witnesses (except the Chamar) into headquarters on the 23rd August with a view to having their statements recorded. Mr. Darling on the 25th August took down the statements of the nai and of Raghunandan, but for certain reasons explained in his evidence he did not consider it advisable to make any record of Sirdar's statement. Sirdar was allowed to go but was again produced before Mr. Darling on the 3rd September, when his statement was taken down. Meantime according to Afzal Husain's story he had heard from Sirdar Singh the names of two persons, Manna and Gunnu, Mangtas: it was from these he learnt the name of Ram Nath for whose arrest a warrant was issued on the 26th August. Ram Nath was arrested in his own village, Naikaman, on the 27th August by the Sub-Inspector Ram Chandar. He was brought on that day to the Takia Railway Station and was taken thence by train to Unao where he arrived on the night of the 27th. On the following day, he was placed before Mr. Darling and made a long confessional statement implicating Kesho Singh, Jungar, Sirdar, Ram Ratan (or Ratnu) and himself. Following upon this statement the other accused were arrested, and other evidence was obtained

KESHO SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Certain identification proceedings were held in the Unao jail on the 1st and 4th September and finally the case came into the Magistrate's Court and was eventually committed to the Court of Session, in which the trial began on the 9th November 1916. The proceedings in the lower Court lasted a considerable time, judgment not being delivered till the 19th December. Of the three assessors one was of opinion that all five accused were guilty of murder. He held that the story told by Ram Nath in his confession which was adhered to by him at the Sessions trial was true: that the murder had been committed by Ram Nath and Ratnu: that Kesho Singh instigated them to do the murder and that Jungar Singh and Sirdar both helped.

The other two assessors took the contrary view: they did not believe that Ram Nath and Ratnu did the murder: they considered Ram Nath's story to be false and that the whole case was false, manufactured in their opinion by Muhammadans because apparently the Inspector who held the inquiry was a Muhammadan and because the accused were always accompanied from the jail (to Court presumably) by Muhammadan constables.

The learned Judge found that the charge had not been brought home to Ratnu but held that the other accused were guilty, Ram Nath of the substantive offence and Kesho Singh, Jungar and Sirdar of the offence of abetment of murder. As already mentioned Kesho Singh and Jungar Singh were sentenced to death: Ram Nath and Sirdar Singh to transportation for life.

Before we proceed to deal with the merits of the case, we have to dispose of two pleas which have been raised on behalf of the appellants, both of these pleas of law regarding the admissibility in evidence of the confession made by Ram Nath. It is common ground that the confessional statement made by Ram Nath is the backbone of the case against the other accused: this is admitted by the learned Judge in his judgment. He found the other three accused guilty because he believed Ram Nath's story, which he held to have been adequately and materially corroborated by independent evidence on the record.

In order to understand the force of the first legal plea taken we must first of all refer to what took place at the commencement of the proceedings in the Sessions Court. The five accused were called upon to plead to the charge. Ram Nath pleaded guilty, the other four accused not guilty and the pleas were recorded.

Notwithstanding his plea Ram Nath was not then and there convicted, the trial commenced, Ram Nath being in the dock with the others. He was permitted to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and he was, when the prosecution evidence had been closed, examined as an accused person. And finally after the defence evidence had all been taken the assessors were called upon to pronounce their opinion as to his guilt or innocence. We have already mentioned that two out of the three assessors found Ram Nath not guilty as they were convinced that the confession made by him was a false story: they did not believe that Ram Nath was concerned in the murder at all.

In his judgment the learned Judge sets out various reasons for trying out the case against Ram Nath instead of convicting him at once upon his plea of guilty. At present we only refer to this matter in order to show that it appears to have been the intention of the learned Judge that Ram Nath should stand his trial jointly with his co-accused. As we have pointed out all the procedure of a trial was observed in the case of Ram Nath.

Under section 30 of the Indian Evidence Act when more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes the confession. The explanation to the section shows that the expression "offence" here includes the abetment or attempt to commit the offence. To justify the use of such a confession, therefore, as evidence against persons other than the one who makes it, there must be a joint trial and the argument addressed to us has been that in the present instance, although it may be said that the form of a trial was gone through in the case of Ram Nath, there was in law no joint trial of Ram Nath and the other four accused,

KESHO SINGH v. EMPEROR.

In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the provisions of sections 271 and 272 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Sub-section (1) of section 271 provides that when the Sessions Court is ready to commence a trial, the accused is to be brought before it and asked to plead to the charge, which must in the first instance be read out and explained to the prisoner.

Sub-section (2) lays down that if after having the charge read and explained to him the accused pleads guilty, he "may" be convicted thereon.

Section 272 goes on to provide that if the accused refuses to or does not plead, or if he claims to be tried, the Court shall proceed to choose jurors and assessors to try the case.

According to the able argument put forward by the learned Counsel who appeared for Kesho Singh, the true construction of these sections is that a Court of Session can only proceed to the trial of an accused person in circumstances specified in section 272, that is to say, when the accused either (1) refuses to plead, (2) does not plead, or (3) claims to be tried. We think this proposition of law might hold good if we had to deal with the provisions of section 272 only. But it is impossible to disregard the terms of the second sub-section of section 271, according to which a discretion is left to the Court in the fourth of the possible cases which can arise, namely, the case where the accused pleads guilty. The Court "may" convict on the plea of guilty but if it does not elect to do so, what course is it to pursue? What is the alternative to the passing of an order of conviction under this sub-section? It was suggested by Mr. Ross Alston that as an alternative the Court might pass an order of acquittal, the argument being that in spite of the plea of guilty there might be present circumstances which would justify the conclusion that no offence had been committed. For example, it was said it might be made to appear that the case fell under one or other of certain of the general exceptions set out in Chapter IV of the Indian Penal Code; in particular the instance was cited of a child under seven years of age being sent up for trial, a case which would come under section 82, Indian Penal Code.

If it is possible to conceive of such a case, we should imagine that the proper course for the Judge to follow would be to investigate the question of the child's age and come to a judicial decision based upon legally receivable evidence and the only way in which such an investigation could be carried out would be by means of a trial. And so in other cases which might fall within the general exceptions: it could only be by means of a trial that the existence of the circumstances which constitute the exception could be established.

We can see no possible way of avoiding the conclusion that where a Judge does not convict on a plea of guilty, the only other course open to him is to proceed to the trial of the accused.

So far we have been considering only the language of the Code itself. Mr. Alston cited to us various rulings which touch the question raised by this legal plea. He referred to the following authorities:—Queen-Empress v. Pirbhu (1), Queen-Empress v. Pahuji (2), Emperor v. Dip Narain (3), Queen-Empress v. Paltua (4), Emperor v. Kheoraj (5), Queen-Empress v. Lakshmayya Pandaram (6), Queen-Empress v. Chinna Pavuchi (7).

It is admitted that there is a conflict of judicial opinion regarding this point of law and it is impossible to reconcile the various 'dicta' which have been delivered from time to time. In some of the cases referred to the facts were not altogether similar to the facts before us: in others they were, and it is not to be denied that there is much to be found in some of these judgments which favours Mr. Alston's argument. KESHO SINGH v. EMPEROR.

admitted that the two Madras rulings are against him.

We have no authority of our own Court to guide us and in the circumstances we are at liberty to treat the matter as res integra. We may say that having carefully considered the law itself and the various rulings which have been quoted, we agree with what was said by the learned Judges in the case of Queen-Empress v. Chinna Pavuchi (7). It seems to us impossible to hold that the trial of an accused person necessarily comes to an end as soon as he offers a plea of guilty. To arrive at that conclusion we should have to interpret section 271, sub-section 2, as if it left no discretion to the Court: we should have to read "must" or "shall" in place of "may" and we agree with the learned Judges of the Madras Court when they say:—

"Strictly speaking, a trial does not come to an end until the accused has been either convicted or acquitted or discharged."

We also agree generally with the observations made by the learned Judges with regard to the proper procedure to be followed when a plea of guilty is entered by one of several co accused. The accused should either be convicted on the plea of guilty and removed from the dock, in which case he could be called as a witness against the other accused, or the Judge should put it on record that he decides to put the accused on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty. He has the discretion so to decide under section 271, sub-section 2, and that discretion ought to be exercised as soon as the plea is offered and recorded. He is bound to read and explain the charge to the accused, and he ought to satisfy himself by interrogation of the accused, if necessary, that he fully understands the responsibility which he assumes by making a plea of guilty. Having done so, the Judge is then in a position to exercise properly the discretion which the law allows and to put upon record the reasons which guide his discretion in either direction. The course which it is intended to pursue should not be left in doubt, as was done in the present instance.

It is, we think a matter for regret that the Code of Criminal Procedure has not laid down explicit provisions to meet cases of this kind, for it might well have been expected to do so. All we can say is that as the law now stands, we are unable to say that it is "illegal" for the Court to proceed with the trial of a person who has pleaded guilty without previously placing upon record its reasons for doing so; and consequently we cannot hold in the present case that there was not a legal joint trial of Ram Nath and the other four accused.

We may observe here that Mr. Wallach who appeared for the Crown in the Court below has informed us that he put the matter directly before the Sessions Judge before the trial commenced and declared his intention to call Ram Nath as a prosecution witness in case the Court thought proper to convict him on his plea of guilty. We may infer, therefore, from this and from the other circumstances already mentioned that although the Judge did not expressly say so at the outset, he did intend that the trial should proceed and that he had reasons for not accepting and acting upon the plea of guilty.

The next plea taken with respect to the statement of Ram Nath recorded by Mr. Darling on the 28th August is that it was not a voluntary statement and that as a confession it cannot, therefore, be used. Various arguments have been addressed to us in this connection.

It is pointed out that Mr. Darling, when recording the statement, asked Ram Nath a great many questions and the suggestion is that statements made in answer to such questions cannot be deemed voluntary. No doubt it is true that the law does not contemplate or authorise inquisitorial procedure by a Magistrate who is called upon to record a confession under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure: but it cannot be argued that a Magistrate is forbidden to ask questions, for in the first place he must satisfy himself that the statement proposed to be made is voluntary and he can only do so by addressing questions to the person who is to make the statement. In the next place we do not see why a Magistrate should not ask questions for the purpose of making clear and intelligible any particular passage of a statement made to him. The record of Ram Nath's confession is to be found at pages 6 to 16 of the first volume of the printed record. We find that many questions were addressed to Ram Nath before he began to make his statement proper. It was inter alia about the circumstances of his arrest and as to the manner in which he had been brought to Unao. So far as these questions are concerned we cannot say that they were improper: Mr. Darling was evidently anxious to ascertain whether any pressure had been put upon Ram Nath or any inducement offered to him after the date of his arrest. It was not perhaps strictly in order to ask him the question to be found at the bottom of page 7: "Did Manna and Gunnu know you before?", for up to that stage Ram Nath had not mentioned these men's names. Similarly with respect to a question containing the name of a chaukidar named Puswa. With regard to a question on page 8: "Did you previously know Sirdar Singh?" to which exception has been taken, we are unable to entertain the argument that it was put deliberately with the intention of eliciting a statement about Sirdar Singh which would not otherwise have been forthcoming though it probably had that result. Ram Nath had just mentioned Sirdar Singh for the first time and we think the question was legitimate. On the whole the record of the confession does not bear out the theory that the statement was otherwise than spontaneous: it certainly cannot be argued that it was extracted by means of persistent questioning.

While we are on the subject of Mr. Darling's procedure in connection with the recording of statements made by the other accused before the trial, we may observe that it is open to adverse criticism. The record of Sirdar Singh's statement (it is not a confession properly speaking) made by him on the 23rd September shows that a great many questions were put to him for the purpose of eliciting information regarding matters which had already come to Mr. Darling's knowledge. And we must put it on record that Mr. Darling had no authority to take down the statements of Jungar Singh and Kesho Singh on the 29th and 30th of August respectively. It is quite obvious that in neither instance was the statement a voluntary statement. In both cases we have the Magistrate's note that at the commencement of the proceedings he warned both these accused that they were being charged with murder and that their statements would be used as evidence against them. Both men were closely questioned at great length, and in Jungar Singh's case at any rate the nature of the proceeding is apparent from Mr. Darling's note appended to the record that he had obtained the statement of Jungar Singh with considerable difficulty as he was hedging nearly all the time and was very reluctant to give accurate dates and hours. His demeanour, it is added, was not satisfactory. It is not permissible for a Magistrate to question an accused person in this way, for the purpose of extracting statements to be afterwards used as evidence and the Sessions Judge was certainly wrong in allowing these statements of Kesho Singh and Jungar Singh to be put in as evidence.

Another suggestion made is that this statement of Ram Nath was the result of a promise of pardon. As to this we have the evidence of the Inspector Afzal Husain who denies that he ever offered any promise of pardon to Ram Nath. Mr. Darling was not put the question directly. He admitted having discussed the question of a pardon with the Inspector and others, but he nowhere says that any promise or hint of a pardon was conveyed to Ram Nath and we may take it that no such inducement was held out by Mr. Darling.

Ram Chandar, the Sub-Inspector, was not cross-examined as to this, so we find that there is no evidence of inducement in this form.

With reference to the treatment of Ram Nath in the jail subsequent to the making of the confession it is admitted both by Mr. Darling and the Medical Officer in charge of the jail that Ram Nath, who was detained in a solitary cell, was allowed certain privileges in the shape of tobacco, oil, milk, molasses and daily exercise. So far as this is concerned all we need say is that whether this indulgence was proper or discreet, it cannot in any way affect the decision of the question we are considering, namely, whether any inducement was held out to Ram Nath before he made his confession on the 29th August. We find that it is not proved that any such inducement was offered.

We have only to notice an argument put forward by Mr. Jackson on behalf of the appellant Jungar Singh. He would have us exclude the confession on the ground that Mr. Darling was a Police Officer at the time he took down the confession.

Mr. Jackson refers to section 4 of the Police Act (V of 1861), which invests the District Magistrate with general control and direction of the administration of Police in his district. He also cited the rulings reported as Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (8), Queen-Empress v. Bhima (9) and Empress v. Lester (10), none of which seems to us to apply to the present case. It is true that Mr. Darling did interest himself deeply in the investigation of this offence, as indeed it was his duty to do. But that fact does not, in our opinion, constitute him a Police Officer, nor can he be held to be such an officer by reason of the language of section 4 of the Police Act. We are satisfied, therefore, that there was no legal obstacle in the way of using Ram Nath's confession as evidence against his co-accused in the trial in the Court below.

The important question which remains to be considered is the weight which ought to be attached to the confession.

Having arrived at this stage we may express the opinion that so far as Ram Nath's share in the crime is concerned, his own confession of guilt is sufficiently corroborated to justify the conclusion that he at any rate was one of Suraj Bali's murderers; to that extent his statement is proved to be true.

We have just mentioned that Ram Nath at the Sessions trial altered his statement so as to show that he and Ratnu got to Sirdar's house on this second occasion at 11 P. M. and not at 2 A. M., and we must now say a word or two in this connection. It appears from a note on the record that on the 28th November 1916 while the Sessions trial was in progress, the learned Judge accompanied by the Assessors, Ram Nath and the Pleader who was appearing for Sirdar and Ratnu paid a visit to Bhadia and the scene of the crime. He was shown over the ground by Ram Nath, who appears to have pointed out the various localities referred to in his confession, that is, places in the neighbourhood of Bhadia and Moti Khera. In the course of this peregrination it seems that Ram Nath made certain statements by way of comment on or illustration of his confession and the Judge made note of these. It was on this occasion that Ram Nath for the first time suggested that his second visit to Sirdar's house was at 11 P. M. and not at 2 A. M.

The learned Judge was clearly wrong in allowing Ram Nath to make these additional statements—statements which were given out behind the back of the other accused. The law does not recognise procedure of this kind. It is admitted by the Judge that these statements of Ram Nath produced a great impression upon his mind and helped him in a measure to reach the conclusion that Ram Nath's story was true. We need only say that the learned Judge ought not to have regarded these statements.

We are left with the feeling that the prosecution evidence has not succeeded in convincing us that the case against Kesho and Jungar is devoid of reasonable doubt so as to justify our agreement with the finding of the Court below that these two men inspired the murder of Suraj Bali.

It is a case of "not proven" and these two appellants must have the benefit of our doubts.

We are of opinion that the charge of abetment against Sirdar Singh is not established.

The result is that we allow these appeals, set aside the convictions and sentences of Kesho Singh, Jungar Singh and Sirdar Singh and acquitting them direct that they be released.

Appeals allowed.

KHUDA BAKSH v. EMPEROR.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 100 OF 1917.

April 12, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Walsh.

KHUDA BAKSH AND OTHERS—
PETITIONERS

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 15—Bench of Honorary Magistrates—Trial by two out of three, legality of—Proceedings, part of, before three, but decision by two, effect of.

A case was opened before a Bench of three duly appointed Honorary Magistrates, but one of them left at an early stage of the proceedings and took no further part in the proceedings. The other two Magistrates heard the whole of the case and one of them wrote the judgment but did not sign it, although he initialled certain corrections in the text. The third signed it:

Held, (1) that in the absence of a special order in the case, or applicable to all cases of the class to which the case belonged, requiring as a matter of law three persons to hear and decide it, the hearing and decision by two Magistrates was in accordance with law; [p. 749, col. 2.]

(2) that the mere fact that three or any other number of Magistrates happened to be present during any part of the hearing did not invalidate the trial of the case by two Magistrates. [p. 749, col. 2; p. 750, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Bijnor, dated the 18th November 1916.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. Jomini Mchan Banerji, for the Petitioners.—The proceedings began before a Bench of three Magistrates, but one of them absented himself and the other two heard the case. The judgment is signed by only one of these two. However, it appears from the record that the judgment was written by the other gentleman and the corrections therein have been initialled by him. The judgment should have been signed by both the Magistrates. But the other point which arises in this case is that the hearing of the case by the two only out of three Magistrates is illegal. The Bench constitutes one Magistrate and, therefore, where it consists of two or more members, all of them must hear and adjudicate upon the cases that come before it. Two Magistrates where the Bench consists of three have no power to decide a case [King-Emperor v. Lado (1)], and, therefore, when the trial began before the three Magistrates constituting the Bench and one of them absented himself and only the remaining two heard and decided the case, the conviction is bad. Damri Thakur v. Bhowani Sahoo (2).

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Bench, as originally constituted when the case was opened, consisted of three gentlemen (Honorary Magistrates) who were duly appointed members of the Bench. One of them left at an early stage of the proceedings when he had heard only part of the case for the prosecution and took no further part in the proceedings. The other two gentlemen heard the whole of the case. One of them wrote the judgment but did not sign it, although he initialled certain corrections in the text. The other one signed it. It is quite clear that both took part in the hearing of the case and the decision which was ultimately arrived at. It is, therefore, a case which has been heard and decided by two Honorary Magistrates. The point originally taken before this Court in revision was that the judgment should have been signed by both the Magistrates. But I have allowed arguments to proceed upon the other point, namely, that it should be presumed that the only Bench which could hear the case was the Bench of three Magistrates and, therefore, the hearing and decision were illegal as having been arrived at by two only. All I have before me is section 15 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which enables the Local Government to appoint persons to be members of a Bench of two or more Magistrates. Both the two gentlemen who took part in this case were legally appointed under that section, as appears by extracts from the Government Notification which has been supplied to this Court at my request by the District Magistrate. There is nothing before me to show that there was a special order in this case, or applicable to all cases of the class to which this case belongs, requiring as a matter of law three persons to hear and decide it. I hold that under these circumstances a hearing and decision by two Magistrates is in accordance with the law. The mere fact that three or any other number happened to be present during part of the hearing does not invalidate the trial of the case by two. The application is dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 426—Mischief—Cutting of ripe crop in full time—Offence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 424—Judgment of Appellate Court, rules to be observed in writing.

Where accused acting in good faith and under a bona fide belief that he was entitled to the possession of certain land delivered to him by the Court in consequence of his purchase at an auction sale, cut away a ripe crop growing on the land in its full time;

Held, that he was not guilty of the offence of mischief under section 426 of the Penal Code. [p. 751, col. 1.]

Section 424 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that a judgment, whether it be under section 421 or under section 423, should be written by an Appellate Court in accordance with the rules laid down in Chapter XVI, including section 367 of the Code, for the recording of a judgment. [p. 751, col. 2.]

When the order of an Appellate Court is liable to revision by the High Court, the former Court should give some reason for dismissing an appeal to show that the points raised in the appeal were properly considered by it. [p. 751, col. 2.]

Criminal revisions from the order of Deputy Commissioner, Hazaribagh.

Mr. Bankim Chandra Dey, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

IN CR. R. NO. 158 OF 1917.

The petitioner in this case was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Giridih for an offence under section 426 of the Indian Penal Code. The charge is in respect of paddy crop said to have been cut and removed by the accused on the 17th of November 1916. The accused was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two weeks and to pay a fine of Rs. 50. He appealed to the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh who, by his order dated the 27th of February 1917, summarily dismissed the appeal. The petitioner has, therefore, moved this Court for setting aside the order of the Deputy Commissioner as well as that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate convicting him of the offence referred to above.

It appears to me that the conviction cannot stand.

Neither in the complaint petition nor on the statement made on solemn affirmation by the complainant has any offence under section 426 been disclosed. The statement made in the complaint petition is that on the day of occurrence the accused forcibly cut and removed some paddy crops of the complainant from one plot of his land; and that when he remonstrated with him the accused was ready to quarrel. The reason given for this highhanded act of the accused is that the complainant had refused to serve the accused.

The facts appear to be as follows:—

There was a holding known as No. 3 in the Khas Mahal jamabundi. That holding originally stood in the name of one Gulab Dusadh. It was subsequently sub-divided among other co-sharers two of whom were Lalit Dusadh and Talebar Chaudhury—the latter is the accused in this case. Although the lands were split up, the rental or jama continued to be one in the records of the Khas Mahal, which is the proprietor of this holding. It is admitted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate as well as by the Khas Mahal Tahsildar, and peshkar who have been summoned as witnesses in the case, that the entire holding was liable to be sold for arrears due from any of the co-sharers of the holding.

It appears, as has been held by the first Court, that Lalit and Talebar fell into arrears of rent for the year 1914-15. An application was made by the Khas Mahal for issue of a certificate in respect of the arrears. A certificate was accordingly issued but the arrear was not realized. The entire holding No. 3 was accordingly advertised for sale and the accused, in the name of his wife, purchased the holding at the auction sale held in execution of the certificate referred to above. This sale took place in November 1915 and a sale certificate was obtained. Thereafter, on the 27th of June 1916, delivery of possession was effected by a peon of the Court. The peon in his evidence says that he actually put the purchaser into possession of the property by having in his presence 5 or 6 plots of land ploughed up. The peon, TALEBAR v. EMPEROR.

however, adds that he thought that only the lands of Lalit and Talebar, the judgment-debtors mentioned in the sale certificate, were being given possession of. Both in the sale certificate and in the dakhildehani, the holding has been described by its number which is No. 3 mentioned above. No boundary has been given in the sale certificate or in the dakhildehani. It appears, therefore, that the entire holding No. 3 was sold and purchased by the accused in the name of his wife and the effect of the delivery of possession would be to deliver the entire holding to the accused. The complainant, who is a co-sharer in the holding, was not made party either in the sale certificate or in the other execution proceedings relating to the delivery of possession, but it appears from the judgment of the first Court that these persons, after the delivery of possession, filed an objection to the sale of their lands which was rejected. Thus it is clear that the complainant and the other co-sharers of the land knew perfectly well of the sale of the land and of the delivery of possession of the same to the purchaser. Be that as it may, the conviction must be set aside upon the finding of the Court below. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate says in his judgment: "It is clear to me from the evidence that he (the accused) did not sow the crops he cut, but, as is usual with sale purchasers, after getting formal delivery of possession of some of the lands, allowed the claimants to sow the crops, then, when it was ripe for harvest, boldly cut it, setting up in defence good faith. In this case, therefore, the only point for decision is whether Talebar Chaudhuri acted in good faith."

The first question for determination was whether the facts, even if true, amounted to an offence of mischief under section 425 of the Indian Penal Code.

According to the Magistrate the crops were cut when they were ripe and in full time. The cutting of the crops, therefore, did not cause any deterioration in the value of the property and unless there is a deterioration caused by the act of the accused; there cannot be mischief within the meaning of the aforesaid section.

In this connection I would rely upon the case of In the matter of Miras Chowkidar (1). The facts of that case are very similar to those of the present case. The learned Judges in delivering judgment in that case said: "Taking these facts as found it appears to us that the accused could not be convicted of mischief, because he did not cause the deterioration of any property or any such change in any property or in the situation thereof as diminished its value or utility. Of course if the paddy had been unripe and not fit to be cut, he might have been convicted of mischief; but it is not found in this case that the paddy was not in a fit state to be cut."

The conviction of the accused must, therefore, be set aside on this sole ground. But I further hold that the accused in this case acted in good faith and under a bona fide belief that he was entitled to the possession of the land delivered to him by the Court in consequence of his purchase at the auction sale.

The learned Deputy Commissioner on the 27th January 1917 dismissed the appeal of the petitioner in the following words:—"Pleader heard. Appeal summarily dismissed." No reason has been given by him for dismissing the appeal. This is contrary to section 424 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which requires that a judgment, whether it be under section 421 or under section 423, should be written by the Appellate Court in accordance with the rules laid down in Chapter XVI, including section 367 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the recording of a judgment. When the order of the Appellate Court is liable to revision by the High Court, it is expected that the Court would give some reason for dismissing the appeal to show that the points raised in the appeal were properly considered by the Court.

The application is, therefore, allowed, the conviction and sentence are set aside and the fine, if realised, must be refunded to the accused.

IN CR. R. No. 157 OF 1917.

This case is in all respects similar to Criminal Revision No. 158 of 1917, which has just now been disposed of.

The Magistrate who tried the case has referred in his judgment to the reasons given in the judgment of the case from which Criminal Revision No. 158 of 1917 arises.

In addition to what I have said in my judgment in that case, I would mention that the Magistrate had framed a charge under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code in this case but he convicted the accused under section 426 of the Indian Penal Code, without giving any reason for altering in his judgment the charge that was originally framed by him.

The application is, therefore, allowed, the conviction and sentence are set aside and the fine, if realised, must be refunded to the accused.

Convictions set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 424
—Appeal, criminal—Judgment, contents of—Possession, determination of factum of—Court, duty of.

The judgment of a Court of Criminal Appeal must show on its face that the Court has considered the facts and evidence in reasonable detail.

A person in possession of land has a right to protect his possession by show and use of reasonable force against trespassers and wrongdoers.

Samba Pillai, In re, 35 Ind. Cas. 823; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 213; 17 Cr. L. J. 391; 4 L. W. 125, followed.

Where the factum of possession is the determining element in a case, a Magistrate must find which of the parties was in peaceable possession on the date of the offence and was trying to protect such possession, and which party was trying to acquire possession by use of force.

Petitions, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgments of the Court of the Sub-Divisional first class Magistrate, Sivakasi, in Criminal Appeals Nos. 8 and 9 of 1916, preferred against the judgments of the Court of the second class Magistrate, Sattur, in Calendar Cases Nos. 475 and 476 of 1915.

Mr. T. Ranga Ramanuja Chariar, for the Petitioners in Criminal Revision Case No. 206 of 1916.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioners in Criminal Revision Case No. 283 of 1916.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The Appellate Magistrate's judgment is even more unsatisfactory than that of the second class Magistrate. The second class Magistrate says that he is unable to decide who was in possession on the date of the offence of the land and the manure heap and yet convicts the accused because (in his opinion), "granting that accused No. 1 was in possession of the land and the manure belonged to him", he had no right to protect his possession by show and use of reasonable force against trespassers and wrongdoers. This is opposed to the ruling in In re Samba Pillai (1), with which I respectfully agree. The Appellate Magistrate does not go into the evidence at all.

I set aside the Appellate Magistrate's decision in Criminal Appeals Nos. 8 and 9 of 1916 and direct him to re-hear the appeals and pronounce a proper judgment, which should show on its face that he has considered the facts and the evidence in reasonable detail. He should also come to a definite finding as to which of the two contending parties was in peaceable possession on the date of the offence and was trying to protect such possession and which party was trying to acquire possession by use of force.

Muhammadan Law—Custom, whether can be proved in derogation of Muhammadan Law—Custom—Succession—Daughters, exclusion of—Palwal, Gurgaon District.

Evidence is admissible to prove a custom although it is at variance with Muhammadan Law. [p. 756, col. 2; p. 761, col. 2.]

One A., originally a resident of the town of Palwal in the Gurgaon District, obtained the village of Wair Badshahpur in the District of Bulandshahr from the Government for services rendered during the Mutiny of 1857. A. died in 1876 leaving him surviving two widows, a minor son and two daughters. The estate being crippled with the debts contracted by A., the two widows applied to the Government to take over the estate in the Bulandshahr District under the management of the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards took over the village under its management and it was assumed that it belonged to the widows, the minor son and the two daughters. In 1897 the minor attained majority and one half of the property was released to him, the other half remaining under the management of the Court of Wards on behalf of the daughters. The son sued for possession of the other half on the ground that according to the personal law and the custom prevailing in Palwal in the District of Gurgaon the daughters and their issue did not in any case get a share in the paternal estate in the presence of the son:

Held, that the plaintiff had failed to prove an ancient invariable custom prevailing in his family in derogation of Muhammadan Law whereby a daughter was excluded from inheritance. [p. 759, col. 2; p. 767, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Rafique, dated the 13th April 1916, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, in First Appeal No. 93 of 1914.

FACTS appear fully from the judgment of Piggott, J.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him Pandit Baldeva Rama), for the Plaintiff-Appellant.—The parties are governed by custom.

[PIGGOTT, J.—Inheritance is a matter of religion and not of custom.]

In the Punjab there has been very extensive inquiry and it has been found that the custom prevails. In rural towns throughout the Punjab the Hindus and the Muhammadans neither follow Hindu nor Muhammadan Law. A widow under the Muhammadan Law gets a full estate while in the Punjab a widow gets only a life-estate. Similarly daughters are excluded by sons.

In 1848 when the Punjab was taken over by the British Government some British Officers were appointed as members of the Punjab Commission. They found out that the people in the Punjab were governed by special custom.

[BANERJI, J.—You have to satisfy us that you can prove custom in derogation of Muhammadan Law.]

In Noor Jehan Begum v. Nawab Mahomed Ali (1) it was held that the custom could be proved, but this view was changed in Surmust Khan v. Kadir Dad Khan (2) and this view was followed in Jammya v. Diwan (3) and Ismail Khan v. Imtiaz-un-nisa (4). In the last mentioned case an appeal was preferred to the Privy Council and their Lordships set aside the decision and remanded the case for taking of evidence. Muhammad Ismail Khan v. Sheomukh Rai (Imtiaz-un-nissa) (5).

There is another case of the Privy Council from Mombassa, Abdurahim Haji v. Halimabai (6). It is optional to Muhammadans to be governed by Muhammadan Law or adopt the custom of their domicile. Unless this is done they must be considered to have taken the custom of their original domicile with them.

My argument is that this family of Syeds was governed by a certain custom and they have not changed that custom. They lived in the Punjab and they still live there. In fact there is no change. If the suit had been brought in the Punjab, the Punjab Courts would have held that the whole property was governed by Customary Law. As the suit has been brought here this question arises. They are governed by custom. The question is of their own special Customary Law. In England the law of inheritance is a territorial law. On the continent they say that the law of inheritance is a personal law. In India the law is a personal law. A man who is governed by the Benares School migrating to Bengal and acquiring property, there is still governed by the law of his original domicile. In Bombay people of all places are found and they are governed by their own law. In this case succession to the entire property was governed by tribal custom. It is only a matter of accident that a part of the property is in this Province. The question before the Chief Justice and Rafique, J., was whether custom was proved or not. Rafique, J., said that custom could not run to this Province. I submit that the succession in their own native place is governed by tribal law and daughters have no right.

[BANERJI, J.—Rafique, J., says that the custom is not proved].

I shall show that the custom is proved to the hilt.

[BANERJI, J.—You do not deny that the burden is heavy on you?]

I do not deny that, but I shall show that the custom has been admitted by the defendant though in qualified terms. The Hindus and the Muhammadans are governed by their tribal customs. Some incidents differ. The tribes in the Punjab are divided into two classes viz., (1) exogamous and (2) endogamous, i.e., those who marry, in their own gotra and those who marry outside it. The custom of succession of daughters is not proved. They do not want a member of another tribe to come in.

[BANERJI, J.—Custom must be proved to be an invariable custom.]

In the Punjab the Settlement Officers discovered that the people were not governed by Hindu and Muhammadan Law but by custom. The rural population is governed throughout by Customary Law in matters of succession. An inquiry was made as to custom.

[PIGGOTT, J.—Whatever custom may have been in the Punjab it did not prevail in the village in question. It was after mutiny that this part was taken in the Punjab.]

Dr. Sundar Lal then stated the procedure adopted in the Punjab for ascertaining custom.

In the case of these Syeds there is a clear indication that daughters do not inherit in preference to widows and sons. They accepted the law of the people among whom they settled. The tribal law should have the first place in the Punjab and if no custom is found, then and then only Hindu or Muhammadan Law is to be followed.

[BANERJI, J.—Muhammadan Law is to be applied unless modified by custom.]

Dr. Sundar Lal then distinguished between wajib ul-arz and riwaj-i-am and contended that riwaj-i-am was constantly regarded as some evidence of custom.

Mr. Ryves, for the Respondent.—I admit this.

Dr. Sundar Lal, after arguing on facts, contended that in proving custom hearsay evidence is admissible in evidence.

There are numerous cases among Syeds of daughters excluding collaterals. He referred to Nabi Bakhsh v. Musammat Zebo (7), Musammat Gulab Khatan v. Mian Muhammad (8), Musammat Emna v. Sajawal Khan (9), Kutbuddin Khan v. Musammat Amir Begam (10), Muzaffar Ali v. Zainab (11), Ellis's Note Book page 240, Akbar Ali v. Allah Di (12), Zahid Hussain v. Karam Ali (13).

After arguing on facts of the case he contended that among Syeds in several districts riwaj-i-am has been considered as good and binding.

There are some more cases in the Punjab Law Reporter.

These Syeds of Palwal are governed by the customary rule of succession. The family is a family of old biswadars.

ALI ASGHAR v. COLLECTOR OF BULANDSHAHR.

The rule laid down in the riwaj-i-am is the rule generally followed.

[BANERJI, J.—Riwaj-i-am is merely an opinion of the officer concerned or the officer who has taken evidence on the point.]

He was trying to find out the custom. He found that by unanimous consent this was the custom and he recorded it.

[BANERJI, J.—Shall we be justified in putting on the riwaj-i-am the reliance that you are asking? Is it evidence of so great a value?]

The Punjab Courts have done so. In case of Hindus daughters were entirely excluded. In case of Muhammadans if there were no sons widows and daughters came in.

There is no case exactly in point, the reason being that the cases have been between collaterals and sons.

[BANERJI, J.—You may say that the question was not gone into Court as nobody questions it.]

[PIGGOTT, J., referred to the Koran, Chapter IV, Sale's Translation.]

Dr. Sundar Lal referred to Palmer's Translation of the Koran, Chapter IV.

He then referred to Customary Law of several districts, viz. :—

Ambala	p. 18
Gurdaspur	p. 88
Shahpur	p. 48
Muzaffargarh	p. 34
Peshawar	p. 16

In the Punjab they will take as axiomatic that sons exclude daughters. There is not a single case in which it is departed from. In our Province up to 1864 custom could be proved. From 1866 to (1907) 4 A. L. J. R., no custom in contravention of Muhammadan Law could be proved. The Privy Council held that this is a matter which the plaintiff is entitled to prove. The question is whether the practice prior to 1866 has been restored by the Privy Council. If the rule has been restored the whole question is whether a custom can be proved as in the Punjab. Riwaj-i-am is regarded as a document of very great importance by the Courts throughout the Punjab.

Mr. Ryves, for the Respondent.—Asghar Ali had no property in Palwal when the property in Bulandshahr was acquired. Could it be put forward that the rule prevailing in Palwal applied here? The practice has grown up in recent times that among certain Muhammadans daughters are excluded. Is that practice a custom having the force of law in these provinces so as to overrule the Muhammadan Law?

He referred to (1) The Punjab Census Report (1911) Part I, page 176, (2) Rattigan's Digest of the Customary Law (8th Edition) page 2, (3) Raj Kaur v. Talok Singh (19).

It was not till 1875 that people in Gujarat began to set up custom.

He then referred to Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (20), Jamiat-ul-nisa v. Hashmat-ul-nisa (21), Maqsood-ul-nisa v. Kaniz Zohra (22), Gohra v. Hari Ram (23).

I adopt the judgment of Rafique, J., as part of my argument.

He then referred to Maya v. Gurdit Singh (24), Muzaffar Ali v. Zainab (11), Baij Nath v. Gulab Din (25), Elahi Bakhsh v. Khewni (26), Devi Singh v. Premi (27), Nathu v. Rahman (28), Moti Ram v. Sant Ram (29), Ayaz-ud-Din v. Mahfuzunnisa (30), Lelu v. Ram Chand (31).

According to these rulings the property must be ancestral and the parties must be pure agriculturists so that custom may apply.

He submitted that he was not going to argue the point whether evidence could be given to prove a custom at variance with Muhammadan Law. The case has been argued on the assumption that the law on that point has been set at rest by the Privy Council.

Dr. Sundar Lal was called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

BANERJI, J.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the appellant for possession of a half share of the village Wair Badshahpur in the District of Bulandshahr, which had been granted to his father Asghar Ali by the British Government for services rendered during the Mutiny of 1857. Asghar Ali was originally a resident of the town of Palwal in the Gurgaon District, now appertaining to the Punjab. He held various appointments and finally became Tahsildar of Azamgarh, where he rendered the good service for which he obtained the village of Wair Badshahpur. He died in 1876 leaving him surviving two widows, Moti Begam and Sakina Bagam, a son, Ali Asghar, the present plaintiff, and two daughters, Sughra Bagam and Saera Begam. The children were the issue of his marriage with Moti Begam. At the time of his death the son Ali Asghar was very young. Saera Begam is dead and her heirs are defendants to the suit, so also is Sughra Begam. In 1892 the widows applied to the Government to take over the estate in the Bulandshahr District under the management of the Court of Wards. An inquiry was held and it was reported that the property belonged to the two widows, the son and the daughters of Asghar Ali, they being his heirs under the Muhammadan Law. The Government declared the two widows and Sughra Begam, who were adults, to be disqualified proprietors and the Board of Revenue ordered that the Court of Wards should assume charge of the estate as the property of all the heirs of Asghar Ali (see page 78R).

In 1897 Ali Asghar attained majority, but it was not until 1910 that one half of the property was released in his favour. The remaining half is still under the management of the Court of Wards on behalf of Sughra Begam and the heirs of Saera Begam. For this reason the Court of Wards has been made a defendant to the suit. The widows of Asghar Ali being dead, one half of the property devolved under the Muhammadan Law on Ali Asghar, the son, and the other half on his sisters or their heirs. It is this half share which is claimed by the plaintiff in this suit and his claim is founded on the allegation, as contained in the 7th paragraph of the plaint, that "according to the personal law and the custom prevailing in Palwal, the residence of the plaintiff and his ancestors, and in the District of Gurgaon... and the entire Province of the Punjab, the daughters and their issue do not in any case get a share in the paternal estate in the presence of the son."

A contention was raised that the alleged custom being contrary to Muhammadan Law which governs inheritance among Muhammadans, no evidence could be given to prove it. This contention is supported by the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Surmatt Khan v. Kadir Dad Khan (2), which was followed in Jammya v. Diwan (3) and Ismail Khan v. Imtiaz un-nisa (4). In the case last mentioned an appeal was preferred to the Privy Council and their Lordships set aside the decision of this Court and remanded the case with directions to take evidence in proof of the alleged custom. The judgment of their Lordships is reported as Muhammad Ismail Khan v. Sheomukh Rai (Imtiaz-un-nissa) (5). We must, therefore, take it that in the opinion of their Lordships evidence is admissible to prove the alleged custom, although it is at variance with Muhammadan Law. The Trial Court accordingly took evidence, but it came to the conclusion that the custom set up by the plaintiff was not proved and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal to this Court the learned Judges who heard the appeal differed in opinion on the question of custom, the learned Chief Justice holding that the custom was proved whilst the view of Mr. Justice Rafique was in accordance with that of the lower Court. Hence this appeal under the Letters Patent. I need hardly observe that the custom alleged by the plaintiff being contrary to the Muhammadan Law of inheritance, it lay heavily upon the plaintiff to prove it by very cogent evidence. He must show not only that the custom exists but also that it is ancient, certain and invariable. The plaintiff does not assert that the custom prevails in the District of Bulandshahr, where the property in dispute is situate but he alleges that it obtains in the whole of the Punjab, in the District of Gurgaon and in the town of Palwal and that it is the personal law of his family whereby inheritance to his family property is governed. It must be remembered that the District of Gurgaon was a part of the North-Western Provinces, now called the Province of Agra, and was not annexed to the Punjab until the year 1858. In order, therefore, to establish the antiquity of the alleged custom it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that it prevailed in Gurgaon before its inclusion in the Punjab. This, in my opinion, he has entirely failed to do. Of the numerous instances mentioned by the plaintiff's witnesses only a very few, not more than eight at the most, relate to the period when Gurgaon was a part of these Provinces and as regards even these instances the statements of the witnesses are vague and it has not been alleged that daughters had claimed their legal share and were excluded from it. No documentary evidence has been produced on the point and it seems that none exists. The wajib-ul-arz of Palwal prepared at the Settlement of 1854 appears to be extant, as the defendants have filed an extract from it, showing the names of co-sharers in that town (R 99). Had any custom such as that alleged by the plaintiff prevailed at Palwal it would have been recorded in the wajib-ul-arz and the plaintiff would undoubtedly have produced a copy of the record. The non-production of the wajib-ul-arz is, in my opinion, a very significant circumstance. I also find that in years subsequent to the annexation of Gurgaon, daughters succeeded to their father's property and transferred it by sale or mortgage. A number of documents have been produced and proved from which it appears:—

(1) That on 1st January 1864 and 4th July 1864, the widows and sister of one Azimullah of Palwal sold property to a resident of the same place as their ancestral property (see R 41 and R 44);

(2) that on December 26th, 1865, the son and the daughter of Wazir Ali of Palwal executed a sale deed of property inherited by them from their father (R 43);

(3) that in a sale-deed, dated 16th December 1867, it was stated that the son and daughters of Inayat Ali of Palwal were in possession of his property as heirs (R 48);

(4) that in 1868 three sale-deeds were executed on 23rd and 25th July and 13th December, respectively, the first by the daughter and the widow of Bakhsh Ullah, the second by the daughter of Ismat Ullah, Nur Mohammad and Pirkakhsh and the third by the daughter of Ghulam Ghaus, all of Palwal, in respect of their "ancestral" shares in that town (R 50, R 53 and R 55); and

(5) that on 27th February 1869, the widow and daughter of Ghulam Ghaus of Palwal executed a mortgage (R 69).

The fact that daughters transferred property and described it as ancestral clearly shows that they inherited property and remained in possession thereof and were not excluded from inheritance. There is nothing to justify the assumption that they had acquired the property otherwise than by inheritance. It is said that the transferees, in order to secure themselves against any possible claim by the daughters, got them to join their male relatives in executing the documents, but this would have been unnecessary had an invariable custom of exclusion prevailed. The very fact of the purchasers being apprehensive of a claim by the daughters negatives the existence of a well established custom which was certain and invariable. The vendors and the purchasers were both residents of Palwal and the latter would have been well aware of the custom had any prevailed. Furthermore, the executants of most of the documents mentioned above were ladies only and there is, therefore, no room for the suggestion made on behalf of the plaintiff.

It appears that in 1876 a daughter—belonging to Palwal—claimed her share under the Muhammadan Law, in respect of property in that town, against her brother and transferees from him and obtained a decree on 31st May 1876 (R 70). The suit was contested by the brother but neither he nor his transferee set up the custom now put forward and alleged that a daughter was by custom excluded from inheritance. This also is, in my opinion, a strong circumstance against the existence of an invariable custom of exclusion of daughters.

The chief reliance of the plaintiff is on the document called the riwaj-i-am which records customs ascertained by the Settlement Officer as existing in particular localities. In the riwaj-i-am of Palwal and of the District of Gurgaon (A 225 and 227) it is stated that "the right of inheritance does not devolve on a daughter in any case." The custom prevailing among 18 castes is mentioned and it is recorded that "in the caste of Saiyids and Sheikhs the right of inheritance devolves on the widow, son, grandson, and great-grandson in preference to a daughter." The Settlement of the Gurgaon District was begun in 1865 and the riwaj-i-am was prepared in 1877. The mode in which an enquiry as to existing custom was made and the riwaj-i-am was prepared is narrated in Tupper's Punjab Customary Law and in the Settlement Report of the Gurgaon District. It appears that numbers of headmen were assembled and questioned and the result of the enquiry so made was recorded. It is more probable, so far as the Gurgaon District was concerned, that the custom recorded was the custom which the residents desired to adopt in common with the agriculturists of other neighbouring districts in the Punjab, where the custom was of great antiquity, than that it was a custom which had previously obtained in that district. As observed by Sir William Rattigan in his well-known work, The Digest of Civil Law for the Punjab, the evidential value of the riwaj-i-am "varies considerably as to what that unwritten law is" He says that... "when based on authenticated precedents the value of such records is great. But where the Settlement Officer, charged with the preparation of such records, has shaped public opinion on most questions in the direction in which he himself and others of longer experience thought equitable, as Mr. Thorburn candidly acknowledges he did in the Bannu District, the value of entries purporting to expound local customs is obviously reduced to zero. And it must, I fear, be added, that in the Settlement Records of other districts also, although we may not have a similar candid avowal with respect to them on the part of the Settlement Officer, such as Mr. Thorburn supplies, identical influences would nevertheless explain many of the most dogmatic statements of alleged customs which occur in them, for which no precedents are cited and for which probably none would be found to exist" (page 2). In a foot note on page 13 he remarks that "the riwaj-i-am not being a part of the Settlement Record, its authority is just that due to the precedents on which it rests, which should be examined and tested." And in support of this opinion he has cited a number of rulings of the Punjab Chief Court. It does not appear what the precedents are on the authority of which the riwaj-i-am of Gurgaon was prepared. It is, therefore, difficult to place on that document the value which is claimed for it. Moreover, it is stated in the document itself that "there are many instances.....in which on the death of a father, the property devolves on his daughter," but it is said "that this does not appear to be by right of inheritance".

The reason assigned appears to be merely a surmise but the fact remains that according to the particular riwaj-i-am on which the plaintiff relies the property of an owner has in many instances devolved on his daughter thus negating the existence of an invariable custom. I notice that in certain recent decisions the Punjab Chief Court has held that the riwaj-i-am by itself is not sufficient to prove a custom and raises no presumption as to its existence. The value of each riwaj-i-am depends on its own circumstances.

It is conceded on behalf of the plaintiff that the riwaj-i-am records customs by which agricultural tribes and agriculturists are governed. It has been held by the Punjab Chief Court that by an agricultural tribe is meant a tribe whose principal means of livelihood is agriculture [see Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (20)] and that a non-agricultural tribe is not governed by the custom recorded in the riwaj-i-am [Gohra v. Hari Ram (23)]. We have, therefore, to see whether, Asghar Ali was an agriculturist or biswadar. The evidence clearly shows that he was not originally a co-sharer (biswadar) in Palwal. An extract from the wajib-ul-arz of that town for 1854, which has been produced on behalf of the defendants, sets forth a complete list of the biswadars (proprietors) of kasba Palwal, but in that list the name of Asghar Ali or that of any of his ancestors finds no place. The great portion of his life was spent in service outside the Punjab and it was not until after the mutiny that he acquired some property in his native place Palwal. All that he owned was a few bighas of land attached to a well known as Sailahgarh Well. My learned colleague has dealt at some length with this part of the case and has referred to the evidence on the point. I deem it unnecessary to go over the same ground. It is sufficient to say that I fully agree with him in holding that it has not been proved that Asghar Ali was a biswadar and agriculturist. The custom recorded in the riwaj-i-am does not, therefore, govern the succession to his property.

A large amount of oral evidence has been adduced on behalf of the plaintiff to show that in numerous cases daughters have not succeeded to their father's property. I am unable to place much value on this evidence. The instances cited relate mostly to the period subsequent to the preparation of the riwaj-i-am and hardly any case has been cited to show that a daughter was excluded after contest. It may be that in the instances referred to, the daughters were married into well-to-do families and did not like to claim their shares from their brothers. It may also be that they lived with their brothers and were supported out of the income of the paternal estate. In the absence of clear and satisfactory evidence on these points the bare fact of daughters not taking a share proves very little. The witnesses for the defendants have, on the other hand, referred to a fairly large number of instances in which daughters have shared their father's property with their brothers. Although these instances are not as numerous as those mentioned by the plaintiff's witnesses, they clearly establish that an invariable custom of exclusion does not exist. It is noteworthy that we do not find in the Punjab Record any precedent in which in the district in question a brother was held to exclude a sister.

It is said that the fact of the name of the plaintiff alone being entered in the revenue papers of Wair Badshahpur after the death of Asghar Ali raises the inference that it was conceded by his daughters that they had no right because of the existence of the alleged custom. In my opinion this circumstance is entitled to very little weight. It is common knowledge that in many districts is this Province, where admittedly no custom of exclusion of daughters exists, the name of the brother alone is entered, specially when daughters live with their brother. In the present case the plaintiff was very young when Asghar Ali died. The whole family, consisting of the two widows, the son and the two daughters, lived together and were maintained out of the income of the property. Both the widows got themselves appointed guardians of the minor and both of them applied to Government to take over the estate and place it in charge of the Court of Wards. Asghar Ali had left heavy debts and the family was in an impecunious condition. It was for the payment of these debts that the widows prayed that the estate should be managed by the Court of Wards, the family undertaking to support itself, apparently in penury, from the income of the little property they had in Palwal. All this shows that it was never intended that the daughters had no interest in the property. I have already stated that the Court of Wards took charge of the estate not only on behalf of the plaintiff but also on behalf of the widows and the daughters. It went so far as to fix a separate allowance for Sughra Begam. It is also a significant circumstance that although the plaintiff attained majority in 1897 he did not claim the whole estate until 1910.

After giving the case my best consideration I am unable to hold that the plaintiff has proved an ancient invariable custom in derogation of Muhammadan Law, whereby a daughter is excluded from inheritance. The suit was, therefore, rightly dismissed and I would dismiss the appeal.

PIGGOTT, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to a portion of the estate left by one Saiyed Asghar Ali, who died as long ago as the year 1876. His personal history requires to be noticed as an aid to the correct appreciation of the questions which arise for disposal. He was born at the town of Palwal in the Gurgaon District, at a time when that district formed part of the territories administered by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces. He went abroad at an early age to seek his fortune. He first enlisted as a sipahi with the Raja of Ballabgarh but afterwards took service under the District Government, becoming a Sub-Inspector of Police and later a Tahsildar. During the mutiny he was stationed at Azamgarh, where he rendered faithful and distinguished service. As a reward he received from Government a grant of the entire village of Wair Badshahpur in the Bulandshahr District. The same sort of influence which made William Shakespeare in later life a landed proprietor at Stratford-on-Avon drew Saiyed Asghar Ali back to his native town. He made purchases of land there; and it seems fair matter of inference from the evidence that he must have lived beyond his means in order to cut a figure in the eyes of his townfolk. He left him surviving two widows, Moti Begam and Sakina Begam, a son named Ali Asghar and two daughters, Sughra Begam and Saera Begam. In the Bulandshahr District the son, Ali Asghar, was recorded as sole proprietor of Wair Badshahpur, under the guardianship of his mother and step-mother. The estate, however, was crippled with the debts contracted by the father, and in 1888 we find a decree for a large amount passed in favour of the Bank of Upper India, Limited. In 1893 the two widows threw themselves on the mercy of Government, asking that the Bulandshahr property might be taken under the management of the Court of Wards and nursed into solvency. The ladies offered to support themselves and their minor children on the income of the Palwal property, though protesting that it was barely sufficient for the purpose, and to leave the entire income of Wair Badshahpur available for clearing off the debts. The Court of Wards took over the village, substantially on these terms. The usual preliminary inquiries were made as to the names of the owners of the property and it was assumed, without question raised at the time, that it had devolved in accordance with the rules of the Muhammadan Law of inheritance and belonged to the two widows, the son and the two daughters of the original grantee. The question of ownership was raised later, when Ali Asghar opposed an application by one of his sisters for the grant of a maintenance allowance out of the income of the village. It was brought to a head when the Court of Wards released only half the village to Ali Asghar on the latter's attaining majority. One of the daughters, Saera Begam, is now dead; and it has been assumed in argument before us that the present possession of the parties represents correctly the devolution of the property concerned according to the rules of the Muhammadan Law. The plaintiff Ali Asghar is in possession of one half of the village of Wair Badshahpur; he is suing to recover possession of the other half from the Court of Wards, which is holding the same on behalf of the surviving sister, Sughra Begam, and of the heirs of Saera Begam.

The parties are Sunni Muhammadans, and it lies on the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that he is not bound by the law of inheritance generally applicable to his co-religionists. He is in fact seeking to deprive his sisters of a right expressly conferred on them by the revealed law. The directions on the subject are to be found in the Fourth Chapter of the Koran, entitled "Women." I quote the relevant passages from Sale's Translation: "Men ought to have a part of what their parents and kindred leave behind them when they die and women also ought to have a part of what their parents and kindred leave, whether it be little, or whether it be much, a determinate part is due to them." Then, a few lines further on, prefaced by the emphatic words, "God hath thus commanded you concerning your children," comes the definite rule: "A male shall have as much as the share of two females, but if they be females only and above two in number, they shall have two-thirds of what the deceased shall leave."

The plea with which the plaintiff came into Court was that "according to the personal law and the custom prevailing in Palwal, the residence of the plaintiff and his ancestors, and in the District of Gurgaon, part of the Province of the Punjab, and the entire Province of the Punjab, the daughters and their issue do not in any case get a share in the paternal estate in the presence of a son." In the witness-box the plaintiff stated his case thus: "In our family the daughters do not get the inheritance in the presence of sons, widows and greatgrandsons. Daughters do not get a share even in the presence of near relatives. The custom prevails among both the Hindus and the Muhammadans. It has been in vogue from the time of the ancestors..... I have never come across any instance of a girl who may have inherited any property, nor did any girl of our family ever inherit any property." The first Court having decided against the plaintiff, the latter's position is thus defined in the memorandum of appeal to this Court: "The succession to the estate of Asghar Ali is governed by the personal and Customary Law governing the succession to the estates of the members of his community at Palwal."

The defendants in reply may be said to have entrenched themselves behind a triple line of defence:—

(I) First they plead that it was not open to the plaintiff to set up, or to prove, any custom in derogation of the Muhammadan Law of inheritance.

(II) Secondly, while admitting that there is "a local custom at Palwal" under which daughters do not succeed to any share in the paternal inheritance in the presence of sons, they plead that this custom prevails only amongst "old biswadars," that is, co-sharers in landed property, and that neither the plaintiff himself, nor his father before him, nor the immediate ancestors of family could be correctly described as "old biswadars."

(III) Thirdly, they plead that the alleged custom, even to the limited extent to which its existence is admitted, is "one of the incidents" of the ownership of agricultural land in Palwal, and could in no case govern the succession to property situated in the District of Bulandshahr.

It is an essential part of the plaintiff's case, as laid before us in argument, that the evidence on the record should first of all be considered in reference to the pleadings of the defendants as above set forth. He claims, if I may so express it, that he has carried these three lines of entrenchments by direct assault. He denies the proposition of law enunciated in the first plea. He claims to have proved that his family are "old biswadars" of Palwal, within the meaning of the admission contained in the second plea; and he contends that, if this be once established, there is nothing on the record to warrant the limitation sought to be imposed by the third plea on the admission contained in the second.

Over and above this, the plaintiff claims to have turned the second and third lines of entrenchments by a wide flanking movement. He is in no way bound to establish a custom limited to "old biswadars" of Palwal. He sets up a custom which the Court is at liberty to call a "local", a "tribal" or a "family" custom, as it may think proper, but at any rate he claims to have established that, in the family to which the parties belong, daughters take no share in the paternal inheritance in the presence of sons.

The first line of defence the plaintiff may be said to have carried, though not without appreciable losses. A few years ago it would have been held by this Court to be impregnable. For many years this Court adhered inflexibly to a principle first laid down in Surmust Khan v. Kadir Dad Khan (2) and re-affirmed in Jammya v. Diwan (3). This principle was, in effect, that the provisions of section 37 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act of 1887 forbade the Civil Courts of this Province to entertain a plea that Muhammadan litigants, admittedly governed in a general way by the ordinary rules of Muhammadan Law, were subject in matters of inheritance to any custom of succession at variance with that law. It so happened that the question came up again before this Court in connection with a litigation the parties to which were not residents of this Province, but belonged to a family of immigrants from Baluchistan. In that case—Ismail Khan v. Imtiaz un nisa (4)—this Court applied the old rule. The case was taken to the Privy Council in appeal, and their Lordships directed evidence to be taken in proof of the alleged tribal or family custom. Vide Muhammad Ismail Khan v. Sheomukh Rai (Imtiaz-un-nissa) (5). The Court below has, therefore, rightly permitted the plaintiff to adduce evidence in proof of the custom set up by him, and that evidence it is our duty to consider.

It seems important, however, to appreciate fully what it is that the plaintiff sets out to prove. He belongs to an ancient family of Saiyeds, claiming descent from the Founder of Islam. The presumption is that there was a time when this family observed the rules of inheritance as laid down in the revealed law. The first we hear of them in India is as a family of settlers in the town of Palwal, living presumably under Muhammadan rule and at no great distance from the capital of the Moghal Empire. From the rule of the Moghals the District of Gurgaon passes under the control of the British Government, and it belongs thereafter to a Province where the Bengal Civil Courts Act enjoins upon the Local Courts to administer to Muhammadan litigants the Muhammadan Law on questions of inheritance. It seems to lie very heavily on the plaintiff to satisfy the Court as to when and how, under the circumstances above stated, it first became an established custom in his family for the sons to deprive the daughters of the share in the paternal inheritance expressly and emphatically reserved to the latter by the words of the Prophet himself.

The second line of defence is not to be carried by direct assault in the manner suggested on behalf of the plaintiff. I feel no hesitation in holding that neither Syed Asghar Ali himself nor any of his ancestors, as to whom information is available on this record, can be correctly described as an "old biswadar" of Palwal. The word "biswadar" is derived from the biswa, the twentieth portion of a bigha, the common land measure unit of Northern India. It is defined in Platt's Dictionary as meaning the "holder of a share or shares in a co-parcenary village." It crops up again in a judgment printed at pages 132A et seq. of this record, a judgment arising out of a litigation in this very town of Palwal, in which it is clearly explained that Muhammadan residents of that town who are not biswadars are presumably governed by the ordinary law in matters of inheritance, though it is presumed that biswadars are not. Elsewhere in this record it is used as the equivalent of the common word "biswadars" or "co-sharers," familiar in the revenue records of these Provinces. The defendants have placed on the record (pages 99 and 100 R) a copy of the list of biswadars of patti Khel and malguzars of Kasba Palwal, prepared at the Settlement of 1854. This list does not contain the name of Syed Asghar Ali or of any ancestor of his, or of any member of his family. There are only two Syeds in the list, and they are recorded as in possession as "lessees" presumably holding on a farming lease the shares of certain defaulting co-sharers. Their possession must have ripened later into full ownership, for we find Syed Asghar Ali purchasing land in Palwal from these men, or their descendants. Palwal itself is not an agricultural village, it is a small town. It has been a Municipality since 1880, and its population at the census of 1901 was close on thirteen thousand souls. Its agricultural lands seem to be divided, so far as this record shows, into "patti Khel" and "Khel Khurd." In the latter the plaintiff admitted that he held no landed property. The houses in kasba Palwal and the bulk of the lands in patti Khel at present in his possession the plaintiff admitted to have been purchased by his father. The defendants' document above referred to seems to prove incontestably that Syed Asghar Ali owned no agricultural land in patti Khel in the year 1854. Nevertheless, the plaintiff claims to have proved the contrary, and to have proved it mainly out of the mouth of Sarfaraz Ali, the principal witness for the defendants, whose evidence is at pages 9, 10 and 11 of the respondents' book. The witness begins by deposing in unqualified terms that "there was no ancestral property in Palwal in Asghar Ali's family. Asghar Ali was not an old biswadar. The members of his family and mine used to take up service from of old." In cross-examination he was asked first about a place called "Hajipura", which seems to be a portion of the town of Palwal. He said there was an old graveyard there and a grove, which belonged to the family of which Asghar Ali and himself are members; also that Asghar Ali had, presumably after his return to Palwal with his fortune made, settled certain Chamars in "Hajipura." It was not seriously contended before us that anything could be made in favour of the plaintiff out of these admissions, which constitute the whole available evidence as to any family property in "Hajipura." The witness went on to depose: "Sailahgarh is four or five hundred years old. It belongs to Asghar Ali and his ancestors. Asghar Ali purchased 500 bighas of land and included it in that very land. The well that is in Sailahgarh is an old one; it was built by Asghar Ali's ancestors. That well appertains to a cultivatory holding and cultivators use it. Formerly Asghar Ali used to realise the rent of that land." Along with this statement the plaintiff relies on documents printed at pages 72A, 248A, and 250A for further information about this well. On this evidence the learned Chief Justice of this Court has been satisfied that the ancestors of Saiyed Asghar Ali must have been originally landed proprietors in Palwal, and that Asghar Ali himself also must, despite the testimony to the contrary afforded by the Settlement Record of 1854, have always retained some fragment of proprietary interest in agricultural lands appertaining to that town. I admit that the evidence is somewhat doubtful and is susceptible of inferences favourable to the plaintiff's case; but on the whole I cannot see that it bears the weight of the superstructure sought to be raised thereon. To begin with, the plaintiff himself has explained precisely what the parties meant by the word "Sailahgarh." He says, "Sailahgarh is a well, and has been in our possession since the time of our ancestors. About 5 or 6 bighas of culturable land appertain to it." The first and oldest document, that at page 72 A, simply shows that there is "in Kasba Palwal" an ancient well, believed to have been built by one Muhammad Salah, that it holds drinkable water, but is used to a small extent for irrigation purposes. It is so used "under the supervision of the lessees of patti Khel." This was the state of things in 1863. The later documents printed at pages 248A and 250A were prepared in 1877 and in 1907-08. It is quite probable that some of the "remarks" entered in these papers represent merely attempts on the part of Sayed Asghar Ali, and of the plaintiff after him, to enhance their dignity in the eyes of their neighbours by claiming connection with the old proprietary body of Kasba Palwal on the strength of an ancient well, known by the name of one of their ancestors. The area actually irrigated from the well is only six or seven bighas in any one year; for many years in succession there is no land irrigated from it at all, and a note in the latest document shows that the well is no longer used for irrigation purposes. In any case these last two papers were prepared long after Saiyed Asghar Ali had acquired land in Palwal, in the neighbourhood of this well, and had acquired it from the very "lessees" referred to in the paper of 1863. The evidence of Sarfaraz Ali on the point seems to have been recorded in a somewhat confused fashion; but I do not understand him to mean that Saiyed Asghar Ali was collecting the rents of any cultivated lands in Palwal during the years that he was away on service. On the whole, what seems to me to be proved is something of this sort. There is in, or on the outskirts of, the town of Palwal an old well as to which the tradition is that it was built by one Muhammad Salah, this tradition may be accepted as well founded, and the evidence makes it fairly certain that this Muhammad Salah was an ancestor of Saiyed Asghar Ali. Near this well is a small patch of cultivated land which used at times to be irrigated from it. I consider it not proved that this well was primarily an irrigation well; the record of 1863 seems rather to suggest the contrary. I am not satisfied that it is proved that this land was regularly in the cultivation of the plaintiff's ancestors; but I am quite satisfied that it is not proved that, if they did cultivate it, they ever did so otherwise than as tenants holding from the proprietors of patti Khel. The testimony of the Settlement Record of 1854, to the effect that neither Syed Asghar Ali, nor any ancestor of his, held any proprietary rights in agricultural lands appertaining to Kasba Palwal stands, in my opinion, substantially un rebutted. In fact, the plaintiff's family are not "old biswadars" of Palwal. The plaintiff's direct assault having thus failed at the second line of defence, I do not think it necessary to discuss the third. In the form in which the plea is taken in the written statement I do not think there is much in it. What the evidence on the record does suggest to my mind is that a distinction is often drawn in the Customary Law of the Punjab between ancestral and self-acquired pro-party. If I thought that the plaintiff had made out a strong case for the proposition that his family was governed by a tribal custom under which the ancestral lands of the family descended to the sons, to the exclusion of daughters, I might find it necessary to inquire further whether it was certain that the custom applied to property so very definitely and peculiarly "self-acquired" as the estate of Wair Badshahpur. Looking at the fact that the grant was made by the Government of the North-Western Provinces of land situated in those Provinces, there seems an opening for the presumption that it was intended to be a grant subject to the ordinary incidents of the Muhammadan Law of inheritance.

I do not press this point further because, in my opinion, the plaintiff has failed to prove that the devolution of property in his family is subject to any custom, whether local or tribal, entitling the sons of a deceased member of that family to deprive their sisters of the share in the paternal inheritance reserved to the latter by the law of Muhammad. In my opinion the plaintiff's turning movement fails as completely as his direct assault on the position taken up by the defendants.

The principal piece of evidence relied on for the plaintiff is the document known as the riwaj-i-am (see page 225A of the record), supported by the extract from the record of the general customs prevailing in the Gurgaon District prepared in 1877—vide page 227A. These documents record the existence, amongst the old Saiyed families of that district, of a custom under which the right of inheritance devolves on the son, grandson or greatgrandson, and even on the widow to the exclusion of the daughters of the deceased. No doubt this custom applies to Saiyeds belonging to the agricultural classes in Palwal as well as in other parts of the district, but the conclusion I have come to is that these documents have no real bearing on the present case because we are not dealing with a family of agriculturists at all. I have already dealt with the evidence bearing on this point. In my opinion the statement of Sarfaraz Ali to the effect that "from of old" the occupation of members of this family was "to take up service" stands unshaken by anything in his cross-examination and is supported by the list of proprietors prepared in 1854. The Settlement Records which include the riwaj-i-am were drawn up years later. We know what the Settlement Officer was told as to the Customary Law of succession amongst the "Saiyeds and Shaikhs," but we have nothing on the record as to the instances put forward at the time to prove the existence of this custom amongst the Saiyed families of Palwal. It was contended that this particular riwaj-i-am had been accepted by the Punjab Chief Court as a particularly reliable record of custom; but we were referred on behalf of the defendants to another case in which the same Court had refused to act upon it, in the absence of evidence as to the instances put forward at the time as the basis for the Settlement Officer's conclusions. When this Settlement took place the District of Gurgaon had not long been transferred to the Punjab Government, it was not difficult for any Saiyed family or for any group of such families to agree amongst themselves that they would find it convenient to accept a custom generally prevalent amongst Hindus and amongst the descendants of Hindus converted to Islam, and so rid themselves from the irksome obligation of following the strict requirements of Muhammadan Law on the subject of female inheritance. The mere fact that those leaders of the Saiyed community in the Gurgaon District or in kasba Palwal in particular, who were questioned on the subject by the Settlement Officer, told him that in their community the daughters did not inherit in the presence of sons, grandsons, great-grandsons or widows does not seem to me a very strong piece of evidence, when I do not know what instances they laid before the Settlement Officer in proof of their assertion. In any case the Settlement Officer's inquiries were limited to the question of the customs prevailing amongst agriculturists; he had nothing to do with the question whether what one may call "Punjab custom" had or had not ousted Muhammadan Law on questions of inheritance amongst ancient Saiyed families residing in the town of Palwal, holding no share in the proprietary rights in respect of the agricultural lands appertaining to Palwal and depending for their livelihood, in the main, on military or other service.

One aspect of the case which I must not ignore, and which I can most conveniently deal with at this point, is the argument by which the plaintiff seeks to support his case by inferences drawn from the conduct of other members of his family, and more particularly of his mother and step-mother. Stress is laid on the fact, already noticed, that the plaintiff Ali Asghar was recorded as sole proprietor of Wair Badshahpur after his father's death. Even more emphatically our attention is called to the fact that the plaintiff is in sole and undisputed possession of the property at Palwal itself. The argument is that this state of things would be impossible if the widows of Saiyed Asghar Ali, and his daughters as they came of age, had not known perfectly well that they had no claim to succeed to any portion of the estate in the presence of the plaintiff. There is no question of any estoppel; it is merely a matter of inference from conduct. To my mind the possession of the property at Palwal means nothing. The ladies may have considered themselves bound by an "incident" of the tenure of landed property in that place, such as they have (I think erroneously) set up in the pleadings. Apart from this, it remains to be proved that the property at Palwal is worth fighting about. The papers of 1907 08 (page 250A) show that even the lands acquired by Saiyed Asghar Ali near the ancestral well were, at that date, still in possession of the mortgagees. The old gentleman left a heavily encumbered estate behind him; the Palwal property was thought to be barely sufficient to support the widows and young children. Later on we find them complaining that they cannot live on it at all. For aught that appears from this record, the Palwal property may consist wholly of mortgaged lands and residential houses acquired by Saiyed Asghar Ali in the days of his greatness, which the family does not care to part with but finds it a burden on their resources to keep up. As for the conduct of the two widow ladies, it was at most ambiguous and capable of more than one interpretation. Certainly, when they were importuning the Local Government to take the Bulandshahr property under the Court of Wards they put the plaintiff well into the background and themselves forward as the widows of a man who had deserved well of the Government, who had an interest of their own in what remained of his estate. The very fact that both the widows jointly obtained the guardianship of the minor plaintiff is inconsistent with the idea that they regarded him as sole owner of Wair Badshahpur. A very shady episode in this litigation is represented by certain evidence as to attempts made by the plaintiff to obtain from his sister Sughra Begam some sort of relinquishment of her rights, or admission that she had none. This evidence was touched on very lightly in argument on behalf of the appellant, it is enough to say that it does not help his case.

Having said all this, I feel that I have not yet dealt with the most substantial, certainly the bulkiest, part of the appellant's case. He has tendered a mass of oral evidence directed towards proving the prevalence in the Punjab generally, in the District of Gurgaon in particular, and even in the town of Palwal, of the custom that daughters do not take any share in the paternal inheritance. He claims to have proved at least one hundred instances in which daughters have been excluded from the share in the inheritance reserved to them under the Muhammadan Law. Of these instances thirty-four are claimed as coming from Palwal itself, thirty-one more from other villages in the same Tahsil, and seventeen more from other parts of the Gurgaon District. Now it can be readily ascertained from any standard book of reference, or digest of the decisions of the Punjab Chief Court, that the custom of excluding daughters and their issue from all share in the paternal inheritance is widely prevalent amongst the agriculturists of the Punjab. The custom is of Hindu origin, arising from the custom of exogamy and the reluctance to see ancestral landed property pass out of the possession of the family, sept or clan. It is beyond question that many Muhammadan families, descendants of converts from Hinduism, have never consented to follow the precepts of Islam in this matter, but have retained the ancient custom in their families of excluding daughters from inheritance. It cannot be denied there is abundant evidence of the fact on this record, that the position of Saiyed and other families claiming descent from Muhammadan immigrants is not quite the same. Even the riwaj-i-am on which the plaintiff so greatly relies distinguishes the case of the Saiyeds and other ancient Muhammadan families from that of the majority of their co-religionists; it represents them as permitting daughters to inherit in preference to more distant kindred, but excluding them only in favour of a son, a grandson or a widow of their deceased father. The oral evidence tendered by the plaintiff betrays a constant fluctuation and conflict of testimony on this point, some witnesses say bluntly, "in our family daughters never succeed," others limit the custom of exclusion in the manner suggested by the riwaj-i-am or to some lesser extent. Our attention was drawn in argument to a significant passage in the last Punjab Census Report as illustrating the attitude of old Muhammadan families on this point; they constantly betrayed marked reluctance to admit that they did not follow the precepts of the Koran in matters of inheritance as in all others; but would sometimes put forward the explanation that, in their families, daughters were always persuaded to renounce their right of inheritance.

This suggests an aspect of the case which I think of considerable importance. In Muhammadan families generally the girls are married young, almost certainly while still minors. In the case of an inheritance opening in favour of a married daughter the question of her claiming the share reserved to her by Muhammadan Law would be a matter for her husband and his family to decide. She may have married into a family in which the custom of daughters' exclusion prevails and her husband's people may have felt that they could not consistently claim a share for a daughter-in-law while refusing a share to their own daughters. Or again the whole question may have been settled by a bargain, express or understood, between the two families at the time of the marriage. In cases where the inheritance opens in favour of unmarried girls, the management of the property would naturally pass into the hands of a brother, mother or step-mother. The question whether any of the girls would ever claim her strict rights in the matter of the paternal inheritance would depend on the extent of the property, the way in which the girls were treated, and more particularly, on the arrangements made for their marriage.

In view of these considerations the mass of oral evidence relied on by the plaintiff does not greatly impress me. Much of it is devoted to proving the general prevalence of the custom, and has but little bearing on the case of a Saiyed family, residents of a town and not primarily agriculturists. Then again, there is no definite instance of a brother depriving a sister of her share in the paternal inheritance, after contest, or in the teeth of her protests. Out of the whole number of instances sought to be proved there are only eight in which the persons concerned are both Saiyeds and residents of Palwal. In two of these cases, those of the family of Yakub Ali (deposed to by Mohammad Yasin, page A3, and a number of other witnesses) and of Amir Ali (vide the witness Ali Abbas, page 52A), the persons concerned are old biswadars of Palwal. That leaves six instances, Irshad Ali (page A3), Barkat (page A 27), Ausaf Ali (pages A32 and A 35), Irshad Ali II (page A52), Jiwan Ali (page A 56) and Bahadur Ali (page A58), in which the exclusion is alleged to have taken place in families mainly non-agricultural, and in respect of property consisting principally of dwelling-houses. Except for Ausaf Ali's case, each of these instances is proved by a single witness. We know nothing of the circumstances beyond the bald statement that the daughter or daughters concerned did not receive a share in the house property. To take the last instance, that of Saiyed Bahadur Ali (page A58), we are told that he left four sons and two daughters and that the daughters took no share in the paternal estate. We do not know to whom and under what circumstances the girls were married or where they were living at the time of their father's death: the alleged "exclusion" may amount to nothing more than this, that the sons occupied and shared amongst themselves residential houses for which the daughters had no use, and that the whole matter was amicably settled by some assignment of jewelry or other moveable property of which the witness knew nothing. I do not say that the whole of the evidence can be disposed of by considerations such as these. Instances like those of Ausaf Ali (deposed to by his own son Imtiaz Ali, page A35) and Irshad Ali, who is said to have owned some land as well as house property, must be regarded as going some way in support of the plaintiff's case. On the whole, however, the oral evidence seems to me to fall a good deal short of proving an ancient, certain and invariable custom.

I would, therefore, concur in dismissing this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Messrs. Muhammad Iqbal and Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which the present appeal has arisen are as follows:—

On the 23rd July 1914 Muhammad Idris, defendant No. 2, sold a house in Ambala City to Allah Diya, defendant No. 1, for Rs. 300. On the 10th August 1914 Allah Diya re-sold it to Sharif Hussain defendant No. 3, the minor son of Muhammad Idris the original vendor. The plaintiff brought a suit for pre-emption as regards the original sale in favour of Allah Diya. The first Court gave him a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 300. Upon appeal the District Judge held that the sale to Sharif Hussain was benami, the real vendee being his father Muhammad Idris, original vendor of the house. In other words, the sale was really a re-purchase by the vendor which, in the opinion of the District Judge, he was perfectly entitled to make in order to defeat the pre-emptor. The original vendor is said to have a right of pre-emption by reason of vicinage. The District Judge relying upon Liakat Husain v. Rashid-ud-Din (1) held that plaintiff's claim to pre-emption must fail as he had no better right than Muhammad Idris, the original vendor.

The plaintiff has filed a second appeal to this Court. The point as stated by the admitting Judge is whether there was any legal bar to the original owner and the vendor defeating the would-be pre-emptor by purchasing the house from his vendee prior to suit and taking his stand on the plea that he, the original owner and new vendee, owns the adjoining house. The ruling relied upon by the lower Appellate Court reported as Liakat Husain v. Rashid ud-Din (1) is no doubt against the plaintiff, but the previous decisions of this Court are in support of the proposition that such a re-sale cannot defeat the pre-emptor's rights. The matter was fully discussed in Civil Appeal No. 886 of 1902, which is reported as Lachhu v. Maheshu (2). There it was held that whenever a pre-emptor sues for pre-emption upon a sale and it is found that before his suit the vendee has transferred the property to a third party, the test is whether the pre-emptor has a superior right of pre-emption in regard to the first sale as compared with the transferee, and that where it is re-conveyed to the original vendor, the pre-emptor must succeed as the former cannot have any right of pre-emption whatever in regard to the sale which he himself made. In that case the Division Bench followed the cases reported as Kahna v. Dewa Sing (3) and Shiv Charn Singh v.

AMULYA CHANDRA ROY v. SHIVA KRISHNA BOSE.

Secretary of State, (4), and in Civil Appeal No. 493 of 1908 reported as Sukha v. Arura Mal (5) a single Judge of this Court took the same view and refused to follow Liakat Husain v. Rashid-ul-Din (1). I agree with the decisions of this Court and following them hold that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree and that his claim cannot be defeated by the re-sale of the property to the original vendor, even though that re-sale took place before the present suit was instituted.

In the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff filed cross-objections as to the price fixed by the first Court. The price entered in the sale-deed was Rs. 300, but the first Court found that Rs. 100 out of that was fictitious and that only Rs. 200 was the price actually fixed. I agree with that finding and I, therefore, accept the appeal and give the plaintiff a decree for possession by pre-emption of the house in dispute on payment of Rs. 200. If plaintiff has not already deposited in Court the sum fixed, he should deposit it within two months of this date. On his failing to do so the suit will stand dismissed with costs. If he pays in the money as ordered, his costs in all the Courts shall be paid by the defendants.

Landlord and tenant—Purchaser of lessee's interest, liability of, to pay interest stipulated in lease—Interest on arrears of rent, whether payable down to date of decree in rent suit.

The purchaser of a leasehold is bound to pay interest on the rent falling into arrears at the rate stipulated in the contract of lease. The contractual rate ought to be allowed by the Court from the date of institution of the suit down to the date of the decree. [p. 769, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 27th August 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 30th July 1914.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extracts from the Munsif's judgment:—

"In this case, the two plaintiffs together seek to recover arrears of rent in respect of a $9\frac{1}{2}$ -annas share of the plaint lands on account of the years 1316 to 1319 B. S. as per details set forth in the schedule to the plaint. There is claim for interest on the arrears at the rate of 5 per cent. per mensem.

* * * * *

"The plaintiffs will, therefore, have rent and cesses for the period in suit proportionate to the said $8\frac{1}{2}$ -annas share. They will also have interest on the arrears at the rate of 5 per cent. per month as claimed. The kabuliyats of the defendant's predecessor, which were executed long before the enactment of the Bengal Tenancy Act, stipulate for the payment of interest on defaulted kists at that rate and no reason has been shown why that contract should not be enforceable or enforced. It appears that the said contract was already enforced in the previous suit. The defendant admits to have satisfied that decree. It is no valid defence to the claim to say that the plaintiffs have not always realised interest at that rate."

Against this decision of the Munsif the defendants preferred an appeal which was dismissed with the following observations:—

"* * * * * As regards the first point it appears that the name of the plaintiff No. 1 is registered in respect of the said share under Act VII (B. C.) of 1876. Under section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the defendant is not entitled to plead that the rent for that share is due to any third person. As regards the second point, it appears that the interest claimed is payable under registered kabuliyats which were executed long before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to get interest at the rate claimed."

Babu Brojolah Chakraborty (with him Babu Susil Coomar Bose), for the Appellant.—This is a suit for arrears of rent. The question in controversy is as regards the amount of interest allowed. The lower Courts have allowed 60 per cent. (Refers to section 74, Indian Contract Act). It is not an ordinary case of bond-debt, it is a case of arrears of rent. Is the Court bound to give plaintiff a decree at such an exceedingly high rate of interest? The Court was not bound to do so by reason of default. The Judge thinks that because it is in the written contract, it should be allowed. There is no question of money being insecure here. Then again under section 34, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has discretion as to interest after institution of suit. The Court has not exercised its discretion. The Judge not having exercised his discretion as enjoined by section 34, his allowing of interest at 60 per cent. even after the institution of the suit is erroneous in law. Under law and equity a Court has ample powers to relieve a party against liability to pay interest at an exorbitant rate. Interest at the rate of 60 per cent. is too much, it can never be urged by the landlord that by non-payment of rent on the due dates, the landlord had been put to such a loss that he would not be compensated unless he got interest on the arrears at 60 per cent.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose II, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLEICHER, J.—This appeal must be dismissed. The defendant appeals against the rate of interest which he has to pay according to the terms of the contract under which the property is held. He purchased the property with full knowledge apparently of what the terms of the contract were. He knew that, if he did not pay his rent on the proper day, the rent in arrears would carry interest at the heavy rate of 60 per cent. per annum. He might have avoided this liability, first of all, by not purchasing the property and, secondly, by paying his rent in proper time. It seems that there is no case of hardship against the defendant-appellant at all. He has put his head deliberately into the noose and for good or bad, he is a tenant holding his land at a rent which carries interest at 60 per cent. per annum when in arrears. The other point argued is that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court ought not to have allowed interest at the contractual rate from the date of the institution of the suit down to the date of judgment.

The learned Judge says that that is the rate agreed upon and, therefore, presumably there is no reason, because the defendant has put the plaintiff to the trouble of coming to Court to realize the rent in arrears, why the defendant should pay a rate smaller than the contractual rate. Otherwise, it would be encouraging the defendant who is liable to pay interest at 60 per cent. per annum on the rent in arrears to avoid payment every time when the rent becomes due, on the ground that the rent during the pendency of the suit, which by a judicious set of movements and applications for postponement can, we all know, be extended for a long period of years, should be at a smaller rate. I think the learned Judge exercised his discretion very wisely, when he held that if the defendant did not pay his rent in time he would have to pay the contractual rate of interest. I see no reason why we should dissent from the view taken by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Palghat, in Appeal Suit No. 457 of 1914, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 148 of 1913.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and P. Appu Nair, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

SAHDEO SINGH v. KARIMAN SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—Counsel for appellant argues that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that inalienability is a condition of adimayavana tenure: and contends that the decision in Ukkandath v. Puliya Kot Kunhi Kuttan (1) of Sadasiva Aiyar and Hannay, JJ., relied on by the Subordinate Judge, proceeds only on a consideration of the terms of the particular document in that case. We are clear on a perusal of the judgment and record that this is not so. The decision of the Sudder Court in its proceedings dated 5th August 1856, which is quoted at page 307 of Moore's Malabar Law, has been referred to as authoritative in two judgments of this Court, Theyyan Nair v. Zamorin of Calicut (2) and Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (3), and lays down in unmistakeable terms that inalienability is a characteristic of adima or anubhavam tenure. It has not been seriously argued that any distinction is to be drawn in this respect between tenures termed adimayavana or anubhavam and as shown at pages 195-6 of Moore's Malabar Law this nomenclature merely varies with the caste of the grantee. Vide also Theyyan Nair v. Zamorin of Calicut (2).

The only other point sought to be argued is one of estoppel based on the defendant's receipt of michavaram from plaintiffs. This was not raised in either of the lower Courts and we cannot allow it to be set up in second appeal.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon a bond. The mortgagor undertook to pay in instalments and it was agreed that in case of breach of promise the creditors would have the right to realise the instalment money as regards the expired and unexpired period, principal with interest at 2 per cent per month from the expiration of the kist till realization. Both the lower Courts have agreed that there is no reason why the bond as it stands should not be given effect to. In appeal before us it is first of all contended that the intention was that the interest should fall due only at the expiration of the period of the kists, although it was agreed that on failure to pay an instalment the whole of the money should fall due. Such an interpretation appears to be quite impossible. The next contention is that the stipulation of the payment of interest was by way of penalty. It does not appear to us to be a stipulation by way of penalty and if it was, the promise being to pay only at the rate of 2 per cent. per month was in the circumstances of the case stated in the judgment of the first Court, was rightly allowed.

Appeal—Finding on particular point against party in whose favour decree is made—Res judicata.

Where it is necessary to decide a particular point between the parties to the suit and the Court comes to a finding upon that point, the finding operates as res judicata between them and the aggrieved party can prefer an appeal against that finding, although the decree is in his favour. [p. 772, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. Abani Bhushan Mukerji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Krishna Sahai, Khurshed Husnain and Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The case of the plaintiffs is that they hold 3 *raiya*ti holdings under defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but that while the Record of Rights shows them correctly to be the tenants of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in respect of the holding of 1 bigha 1 cottah, bearing a rental of Rs. 8-10-3, it wrongly shows them to be the tenants of defendant No. 1 in respect of the other two holdings which measure 2 bighas 19 kottas and 2 bighas 2 kottas 18 dhurs, respectively. They also allege that this defendant has been wrongly shown in the Records of Rights to be a tenure-holder under defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in respect of these holdings and further that the Record of Rights has wrongly omitted survey plots Nos. 348 and 482 from the holdings. The plaintiffs accordingly ask for the following reliefs:—

(1) That the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1;

(2) That the defendant No. 1 is not a tenure-holder; and

(3) That plots Nos. 347, 348 and 482 are not parts of the tenure of defendant No. 1 but parts of the *raiya*ti holdings of the plaintiff.

The suit was dismissed. There was an appeal by the plaintiffs and a cross-appeal by defendant No. 1 with the result that the appeal was dismissed, while the cross-appeal was decreed. The subject of the cross-appeal was this, that the Trial Court had found that the plaintiffs were tenants under defendant No. 1 in respect of the holdings in suit and that defendant No. 1 in his turn was a tenure-holder under defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

The case of defendant No. 1 in the trial Court was that there was no connection between him and the plaintiffs and that the Record of Rights to that extent was incorrect. Therefore, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge on appeal was in favour of defendant No. 1 and the effect of his order decreeing the cross-appeal was that defendant No. 1 was a tenure-holder and that the plaintiffs had no *raiya*ti interest in the lands in suit.

With regard to the finding as to plots Nos. 347, 348 and 482 the plaintiffs have not taken any objection before me and the finding that these plots do not belong to the plaintiffs is conclusive and final. The only grievance that the plaintiffs have in second appeal is that the learned Subordinate Judge has made a decree declaring that the plaintiffs are not *raiya*ts of the land at all. As this declaration will be res judicata they desire that the learned Subordinate Judge's decree should be corrected and the Munsif's decree restored. The point of law taken by the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs before me is that the whole suit having been dismissed by the Munsif, it was not competent to defendant No. 1 who was the successful party to prefer either an appeal or a cross-appeal, and it is observed that the Code only allows appeals against decrees; it allows no appeal against a finding so that if the decree of the Munsif was in favour of defendant, the finding as to the plaintiffs' tenancy under the defendant must be treated as merely obiter and could not be attacked in appeal. Now it is quite clear that although the learned Munsif's decree is expressed in very general terms, it must be construed as a decree refusing the reliefs prayed for in the plaint and which have been set out in full in the opening paragraphs of the decree. One of these reliefs, as has already been shown, was for a declaration that the plaintiffs were not the tenants of defendant No. 1 and a distinct and specific issue was framed for the purpose of determining this question. The learned Munsif decided the question against the plaintiffs and held that they were *raiya*s of defendant No. 1. The decree of dismissal, therefore, must be construed as involving the declaration that the plaintiffs were the *raiya*s of defendant No. 1. Now admittedly the defendant No. 1 is aggrieved by such a declaration and, therefore, he had the right to attack by cross-appeal that part of the decree. He might also without having preferred a cross appeal have supported the decree of the Munsif by filing a cross-objection against the finding as to the tenancy of the plaintiffs and by satisfying the Subordinate Judge that that finding was wrong. But the defendant chose to prefer a cross-appeal and there was no obstacle in law to his doing so. It is not really necessary for the purposes of this second appeal to go into the question whether or not the finding of the Munsif as to the tenancy of the plaintiffs under defendant No. 1 would have been res judicata in any event and whether the learned Vakil for the appellants is right in contending that it would not have been res judicata if the Subordinate Judge had not embodied that finding in his decree. Reliance in this connection is placed upon Jamaituanissa v. Lutfunnissa (1) and Ran Bahadur Singh v. Luchko Koer (2). No doubt these cases are authority for the proposition that where a particular finding is not necessary for the purposes of the decree made by the Court, then that finding must be treated as an obiter dictum but that is not the case here. Here the declaration that the plaintiffs are the *raiya*s of the defendants, was one of the main reliefs of the suit and the dismissal of the suit means that that declaration has been refused by the Munsif and the finding that the plaintiffs were the tenants of defendant No. 1 was a vital and integral part of the decree. If it were necessary to decide this point, my opinion would be that the finding is res judicata, apart from the fact that the Subordinate Judge's order is now definitely incorporated into the decree.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

question of fact and that the finding of the lower Appellate Court being final, no second appeal lay.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellants.—The finding of the lower Appellate Court is based on no evidence whatever and can be upset in second appeal. Harendra Lal Roy v. Hari Dasi Debi (1). The Court has arbitrarily disallowed certain items, there is no evidence of the return of the purchase money and the Local Commissioner rejected our evidence on no grounds. It is enough if the price was fixed in good faith. The phrase "good faith" has in the new Act been retained only as regards the fixing of the price and not with regard to payment. Ellis's Law of Pre-emption in the Punjab, Edition I, page 352. The Court has applied a wrong ratio decidendi and its finding is perverse.

Mr. Muhammad Shafi.—The appellant's argument amounts to this that the finding is based on no evidence and, therefore, it is grossly erroneous. That is no ground for second appeal. Durga Chowdhri v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhri (2). The suit was instituted in 1911 and is, therefore, governed by the Act of 1905. The onus is on the vendee to prove that the price was fixed or paid in good faith.

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—Do you mean to say that if the vendee has a charge on the land he must prove everything even after a long time?]

Yes, because it is a matter between the vendor and the vendee and not between the pre-emptor and the vendee. Gulab v. Ram Singh (3).

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—It does not appear that the lower Appellate Court has considered all the evidence on the record. Its finding is perverse.]

Even if so, the Privy Council ruling is clear and this Court as a Court of second appeal has no jurisdiction to disturb that finding.

Mr. Sheo Narain, in reply.—A finding based on no evidence is no finding in law and is liable to be set aside even in second appeal.

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—The onus was on your client. How is it a case of no evidence?]

Where there are deeds of a prior date what is sold is the equity of redemption. The deciding factor is the time that elapses between the prior charge and the sale. The standing charge ought to be accepted as such and accounted for.

JUDGMENT.—On the 14th of August 1910 one Muhammad Hussain sold the property in suit to Lal Chand and Pharaya Mal for Rs. 9,000. On the 14th of January 1911, the plaintiffs-respondents Ilahi Bakhsh and Murad Bakhsh instituted a suit for possession of the said land by pre-emption, alleging that the price as shown in the sale-deed was not fixed or paid in good faith. The consideration was made up as follows:—

1. Rs. 2,100 for a previous mortgage deed with possession of the land in suit.

2. Rs. 5,10 4-0 for interest on No. 1 and cost of improvements.

3. Rs. 800 due on a mortgage of Khakara-wala well in favour of Pharaya Mal, vendee, and one Sohara Mal.

4. Rs. 469-12-0 on account of a decree against the vendor and in favour of a certain Pharaya (Bhambri). [In the sale-deed it is stated that the decree-holder is really Pharaya Mal, vendee, but this appears to be a mistake.]

5. Rs. 3,050 for a decree in favour of Lal Chand, vendee, and the widow of Sohara Mal.

6. Rs. 170 due to Ilahi Bakhsh and Khuda Bakhsh tenants of the vendor, which debt is undertaken by Pharaya Mal, vendee.

7. Rs. 125 paid in cash.

8. Rs. 125 for stamp and other deed expenses.

9. Rs. 1,650 paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar.

The Trial Judge held that out of this Rs. 9,000, Rs. 7,530 had been paid in cash, the balance of the consideration money being made up of interest payable on the moneys actually paid. He accordingly decreed the suit on payment of Rs. 9,000.

GOWHAR ALI v. ENAYAT ALI.

On appeal by the plaintiffs to the Divisional Judge it was held that, as a matter of fact, out of Rs. 9,000 only 5,016-4-0 had been paid in cash. Of the balance it was held that Rs. 1,700 had been fictitiously entered and the balance consisted of interest. Both the lower Courts held that the market value of the property was Rs. 6,000, and the learned Divisional Judge, therefore, granted the plaintiffs a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 6,000. Against this decree the defendants-appellants, vendees, have preferred this second appeal through Mr. Sheo Narain, and we have heard Mr. Shafi on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents.

Mr. Shafi urged that inasmuch as the learned Divisional Judge had held that Rs. 1,700 out of the consideration stated in the deed was fictitious, and that the price had not been fixed in good faith, this was a finding of fact which could not be disturbed on second appeal, and we were referred to Durga Chowdhurani v. Jewahir Singh (2). Mr. Sheo Narain contended that Harendra Lal Roy v. Hari Dasi Debi (1) applied and that where findings have been arrived at on no evidence they could be challenged on second appeal, and he endeavoured to show us that there was no evidence to support the finding with regard to this sum of Rs. 1,700. This sum is made up of two items—of Rs. 700 and Rs. 1,000 respectively. With regard to the item of Rs. 700 which forms a part of item No. 1 [Rs. 2,100], the learned Divisional Judge holds that inasmuch as there is no receipt from the vendor and no evidence that this sum was actually paid, it must be regarded as fictitious. With regard to the item of Rs. 1,000, it was admitted that this sum was actually paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar. The onus of proving that this sum had been subsequently returned clearly lay on the plaintiffs-respondents. Gulab v. Ram Singh (3).

Mr. Shafi urged that the evidence of the vendee, who was put into the witness-box by the plaintiff, clearly shows that this sum of money could not possibly have been paid by Pharaya, who is alleged to have made the payment. The learned Divisional Judge has considered this evidence as well as the account books produced by Pharaya and Lal Chand, and on this evidence has held that it was impossible for Pharaya to have paid this money. In Durga Chowdhurani v. Jewahir Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that there is not jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be. Even if we felt inclined to doubt the correctness of the conclusions arrived at by the learned Divisional Judge on this evidence, it seems clear that we are precluded from disturbing his finding in a second appeal. In these circumstances it follows that the finding that the price in the sale-deed was not fixed in good faith is one that cannot be challenged in second appeal and we, therefore, reject this appeal with costs.

Appeal rejected.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—The only question in this appeal is whether the suit is governed by the provisions of Article 3, part I, Schedule

NANAK CHAND v. LACHHMAN DAS.

III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides a period of two years for a suit to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as an occupancy raiyat or under-raiyat. The two years are to run from the date of dispossession. The facts found are that the plaintiffs are tenants of an area of about 51 bighas. The defendant owns a 12-annas 6-pies share as a co-sharer malik of the village. The plaintiffs' case was that at the survey proceedings the defendant got his name entered as milkdar in respect of the land in question, suppressing the fact that the plaintiffs were *raiya*s of the land. The Settlement Authorities entered the land as being in khas possession of the defendant. The plaintiffs state that on the strength of the entry made by the Settlement Authorities, the defendant ejected them from their jote. It has been found that the suit was brought about seven years after the date on which the plaintiffs were dispossessed. The contention is that the special period of limitation provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply, inasmuch as the defendant when dispossessing the plaintiffs was not acting in the capacity of landlord. The Court of first appeal assumed that the suit was governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation and did not consider the question in what capacity the defendant had ejected the plaintiffs. The learned Judge of this Court before whom the case came held that the defendant, when dispossessing the plaintiffs, was acting as purchaser of the jote right. There appears to be no direct evidence of this but whether it was so or not, I am of opinion that the suit is governed by the two years' rule of limitation. The same question arose in Letters Patent Appeal No. 53 of 1916 [Kunti Dai v. Jharu Lal Das Mazumdar (1)] and we then held that Article 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act applied to a case of this kind, whether the landlord when dispossessing the raiyat acted in the capacity of landlord or not. In my opinion the present case is covered by the decision in the case cited and, therefore, this suit should have been dismissed. I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court and of the Court of first appeal and restore the decision of the

In a suit for possession of joint family property by partition, it appeared that R. the deceased father of the parties had three sons, one of whom had received a share of the property and executed a deed renouncing all further claim thereto on the 25th April 1886. Subsequently R. and his other two sons continued to live together, but some years before 1895 R. gave a house, a shop and some moveable property to the plaintiff who thereafter lived separately and conducted a separate business. On the 29th October 1895 R. executed a Will in which after reciting these facts he bequeathed all his remaining property to the defendant who was then in possession. On the 4th April 1896 the plaintiff sued for a declaration to the effect that this Will should not affect his rights of inheritance in the property to the extent of a half share.

NANAK CHAND v. LACHHMAN DAS.

This suit was decreed as it was held that there had been no formal partition or separation of the plaintiff from the family and he was not, therefore, bound by the terms of the Will. The plaintiff brought this suit for possession of his share:

Held, (1) that the family having been found in the earlier suit to be joint and there being no formal partition thereafter, all property acquired by the defendant out of the original nucleus of ancestral property was joint family property, as also was the property in the possession of the plaintiff which must be brought into hotch-pot at the time of the partition; [p. 778, col. 2; p. 779, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in all the family property which was in the defendant's possession as well as in his own possession. [p. 779, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff, Nanak Chand, sued for possession by partition of one half of certain property, moveable and immovable, specified in the plaint, said to have left by his and defendant's father Ralla Shah, who died on the 18th November 1908. Lachhman Das, defendant, was said to be in possession of all the property left by Ralla Shah. The plaintiff admitted that he had a house and a shop out of the ancestral property and he included them in the claim. Ralla Shah deceased had three sons, Ram, Nanak Chand and Lachhman Das. Ram admittedly received a share of his father's property and executed a deed renouncing all further claim thereto on the 25th April 1886. Subsequently Ralla Shah and his other two sons, the present parties, continued to live together as a joint family, but some years before 1895 Ralla Shah gave a house and a shop and some moveable property to Nanak Chand plaintiff, who thereafter lived separately and conducted a separate business. Lachhman Das continued to live with his father. On the 29th October 1895 Ralla Shah executed a Will, which will be found on page 9 of the printed paper book, in which he recited that he had separated off his sons Ram Chand and Nanak Chand previously and that since then all the three sons had been carrying on separate businesses, and that at the time of the separation he had kept with himself Rs. 1,200 in cash besides certain outstanding debts and houses. He then went on to say that he bequeathed all this property to his son Lachhman Das, who was living with him and rendering him services.

On the 4th April 1896 Nanak Chand brought a suit against Ralla Shah and Lachhman Das, in which he asked for a declaration to the effect that the Will above mentioned should not affect his rights of inheritance in the property to the extent of a half share. This suit was tried by the District Judge of Sialkot, who held that some eight years prior to the Will Ralla Shah had separated off Nanak Chand and had given him an adequate share of the family property and that Ralla Shah had authority to dispose of the property which he had kept with himself in any way he chose. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The Divisional Judge upheld the finding of the first Court and upon this Nanak Chand filed a further appeal in this Court. The judgment is printed at pages 13 to 16 of the paper-book. We extract the following portions from it:—

“On the whole, we are disposed to believe that a considerable nucleus of property came from Jiwan Shah, father of Ralla Shah, and what Ralla Shah subsequently acquired by utilizing the income of this nucleus must be treated as ancestral and not as self-acquired property. The rule as to equal distribution of ancestral property on occasions of partition by the father or after his death according to Mitakshara Law is to be found in section 488 of Mayne's Hindu Law, 6th Edition. According to it Ralla Shah had no power to make any unequal distribution amongst undivided sons, as he might have done in a case of self-acquired property.....”

“With reference to the evidence discussed above and the interpretation we put on it, we consider that the defendants have not succeeded in rebutting the presumption as to jointness of property after Ram's separation which they admit, and are unable to treat this as a case of a family having become dissolved and afterwards re-united."

* * * * *

"We hold, then, that the suit, as brought, lies and that on the record there is no sufficient proof that a formal partition or separation of plaintiff from the family was ever made and consequently he ought not to be held bound by the terms of the Will of 29th October 1895, to which Ralla Shah, defendant, has still expressed his adherence, the property being treated by us as ancestral.

"In this view of the case we accept the appeal and grant plaintiff a decree as prayed for with costs throughout."

The judgment is dated the 24th February 1902. We start then with the propositions that Ralla Shah and the parties to the present suit formed a joint Hindu family, that there was a nucleus of ancestral property, that, therefore, all the property acquired by Ralla Shah must be treated as ancestral property, that Ralla Shah some years before 1895 allotted separate property to each of his sons and that thereafter they lived separately and conducted separate businesses, but that there was no formal partition of the joint family property prior to the date of the Chief Court judgment of the 24th February 1902.

Now what the lower Court has held is that there was a partial partition. In its judgment at page 145, line 26 of the paper book, the lower Court says: "It is quite clear from the said wording (of the Will) that the property then in question was wholly ancestral and that the rest of the property was separately given by Ralla Shah to his sons according to proportionate shares." By this the Court means that there was a partition of the whole of the property with the exception of that mentioned in the Will. Now there is no doubt that the members of a joint Hindu family can agree among themselves to make a partition of part of the joint family property and to keep another part of it as joint, but it was distinctly found by this Court in the previous case that there had been no formal partition of any of the joint family property. The mere allotment by Ralla Shah of some property to one son and another property to another, in order that they might conduct separate businesses did not amount to a partial partition of the ancestral property. It, therefore, seems to us that the lower Court's view that there was a partial partition is opposed to the finding of this Court in the previous case. It follows from the latter that all the property in the possession of the parties and of Ralla Shah at the time of the previous suit must be considered to be joint family property, which was acquired from the original nucleus of ancestral property. The first Court, in accordance with the view it took of the case, with certain small modifications which we need not here refer to, gave the plaintiff a decree for a half share of the property referred to in the Will made by Ralla Shah in 1895. From this decree the plaintiff has appealed and the defendant has filed a cross-appeal in regard to a sum of Rs. 1,300 which has been decreed to the plaintiff.

It has been argued by Mr. G. C. Narang on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that as the parties formed a joint Hindu family in 1902, the presumption of law is that the family continued joint unless it is shewn to have become divided since that date. In support of this proposition he referred to Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, page 185, Naragunty Lutchmeedavamah v. Vengama Naidoo (1), Dhurm Das Pandey v. Musammatt Shama Soondri Dibiah (2) and Musammatt Cheetha v. Baboo Miheen Lall (3). These authorities support the argument advanced by Mr. Narang and Mr. Kirkpatrick has nothing to say to the contrary. As then the family was held to be a joint family in 1902, the presumption is that it continued to be joint and the onus was upon the defendant to prove that there was a partition or separation subsequent to that time. It is contended by plaintiff's Counsel, and we think rightly, that the lower Court has improperly considered that the onus was upon the plaintiff to shew what ancestral property was left by Ralla Shah. In Pran Kristo Mojomdar v. Sreemutty Bhageerutee Gooptia (4) it is laid down that where a family is joint, and there is a nucleus from which property may be acquired, the presumption is that property acquired by any member is joint property, and the onus is with those who allege that it is self-acquired. In Sham Das v. Pohlo Ram (5) it was pointed out that the mere fact that any particular acquisition is in the name of one or more of the brothers does not warrant the assumption that it is the exclusive acquisition of the person or persons named and not of the whole of the joint family. Mr. Kirkpatrick has argued that the family remained joint as to the property mentioned in the Will and was separated as to the other property which had been given to them by their father. The Chief Court judgment in the previous case, however, stands in the way of such a view, for there it was distinctly held that there had been no formal partition. As already pointed out by us, the mere assignment by the father of certain property to his sons to enable them to start in business on their own account has not the same effect as a formal partition of the joint property.

Turning now to the evidence produced in the present case, we find that the plaintiff produced evidence to shew that Ralla Shah died possessed of a large amount of property valued by the witnesses at forty or fifty thousand rupees, that he used to live with Lachhman Das, the defendant, and that there was never any formal partition of the joint property. Lachhman Das has himself admitted that he used to take care of his father and supply him with food. There is no doubt that all the property that Ralla Shah died possessed of came into the possession of the defendant. The defendant's evidence was to the effect that the parties lived and carried on business separately and that defendant acquired various properties in his own name. The witnesses, however, for the most part distinctly state that they know nothing about any division of the property. Any evidence as to separation which has been given obviously refers to what took place prior to the previous suit. See in this connection the evidence of Nihal Chand at page 58 of the paper-book where he says that after the separation, Nanak Chand refused to execute a deed of relinquishment. This fact was referred to by this Court in its judgment in the previous case and was one of the grounds for its decision that there had been no formal separation. There is no doubt that a number of deeds have been executed in Lachhman Das's name, but as pointed out in Sham Das v. Pohlo Ram (5), this fact alone does not prove that the property acquired by those deeds is the exclusive acquisition of Lachhman Das. Prior to the previous suit each of the present parties had received a certain amount of ancestral property and working with that as a nucleus acquired other property, all of which must, in our opinion, be considered, in accordance with the authorities, to be joint family property unless it is shewn that there was a subsequent separation. After the decision in the previous suit the parties continued to live separately and to conduct separate businesses, but there is absolutely no evidence that there was any formal partition between them.

Our conclusions then are as follows:—

- (1) Ralla Shah and his three sons constituted a joint Hindu family.
- (2) One of the sons, Ram, was finally separated off in the year 1883 and executed a deed of relinquishment.
- (3) After this Ralla Shah and the present parties continued to be a joint Hindu family.
- (4) Some years before 1893 Ralla Shah gave Nanak Chand a separate house to live in, a shop to carry on business therein and some moveable property and thereafter Nanak Chand lived and conducted business separately from his father and Lachhman Das. Lachhman Das continued to live with his father.
- (5) In 1895 Ralla Shah executed a Will by which he bequeathed certain property to Lachhman Das.
- (6) In a suit brought by Nanak Chand this Court held in 1902 that the Will was invalid and that there had been no formal partition between the parties.
- (7) Since that time the parties have continued to live and to transact business separately. Lachhman Das prospered and acquired a good deal of immoveable property, many deeds being executed in his name. There was, however, no formal partition even after 1902 and, therefore, all the property acquired by Lachhman Das out of the original nucleus of ancestral property which he received must be held to be joint family property. Similarly all the property in the possession of the plaintiff is joint family property and must be brought into hotch-pot at the time of partition.

(8) The plaintiff is, therefore, now entitled to a half share in all the family property, both that in the defendant's possession and that in his own possession.

We, therefore, accept the plaintiff's appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Court give him a preliminary decree for possession by partition of a half share of all the property, moveable and immoveable, in possession of both the parties and of Ralla Shah at the time of the latter's death. The lower Court will now proceed to ascertain exactly what this property is and will pass a final decree dividing the property between the parties. If any mortgages have been redeemed or property sold by either party, the amounts realized must be ascertained and taken into account.

As regards defendant's appeal we do not approve of the lower Court's method of arriving at its finding that Ralla Shah must have had some Rs. 2,600 cash in his possession at the time of his death. Whatever he had when he made the Will was probably used by defendant in the conduct of his business, and was part of the nucleus out of which he acquired property. The plaintiff had to prove what assets were in Ralla Shah's possession at the time of his death, and conjecture cannot take the place of proof. In view of our order accepting plaintiff's appeal we must also accept that of the defendant; the stamp on his appeal will be refunded.

Plaintiff's claim is an exaggerated one and we, therefore, direct that the parties shall bear their own costs in both Courts, but the Court-fee due to Government (the suit and appeal having been heard in forma pauperis) will be paid by the parties in equal shares.

Appeal accepted.

DEFENDANT No. 5—RESPONDENTS.

Trust—Trustee for payment to creditors—Transfer of bonds and book debts to trustee—Accounts—Negligence in collection—Damage or loss, liability of trustee for—Mortgagee in possession—Interest, liability to pay—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 23.

A trustee, appointed by a person for payment to his creditors to whom the debtor transfers bonds and book debts for collection and payment as aforesaid is bound to realize the amounts due thereon with due diligence and is liable for loss caused to his appointor by his laches. The trustee should, in that event, be debited with the face value of the documents and should not be allowed the costs of suit incurred by him for his belated enforcement of the bonds. [p. 782, col. 1.]

In the matter of liability for interest, there is a difference between a trustee and a mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee in possession, as soon as his debt is paid off, will be bound to pay interest on any money which he may retain thereafter, while the liability of a trustee would depend on whether he is guilty of a breach of trust. [p. 782, col. 1.]

Where there has been negligence in the trustee and contributory negligence in the debtor who appointed him which has occasioned loss to the latter, the trustee should not be charged with interest. [p. 782, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1914 (Original Suit No. 54 of 1913 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Guntur).

Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Messrs. T. Ramachandra Rao and M. Purushothama Naidu), for the Respondents.

This appeal and the memorandum of objections filed on behalf of the respondents Nos. 2 and 3 coming on for hearing on the 27th July 1916, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 28th July 1916, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs who are traders got into difficulties in the beginning of 1908 and being unable to pay their debts, compounded with their creditors and agreed to pay 9 annas in the rupee. They paid one anna with the aid of two friends and arranged with the defendants for the payment of the balance amounting to Rs. 41,638-2-0. To re-pay this sum, the plaintiffs proposed to transfer to the defendants certain immoveable property valued at Rs. 9,500, goods valued at Rs. 20,000 and certain book-debts and mortgage-debts of the value of Rs. 12,135 2 4, making a total of Rs. 46,635-2 0. The defendants were not sure that they would be able to realise the full value of the moveables and debts and also anticipated some difficulty in obtaining possession of the goods and the immoveable property. They, therefore, required the plaintiffs to give security for any balance that may remain due to them after realising the debts and selling the goods and also for any loss they might sustain by not being able to obtain possession of the moveables and immoveables. The plaintiffs agreed to this and deposited Rs. 4,000 in cash and endorsed promissory notes of the value of Rs. 2,100 6 9 as security and caused one P. Baparayya to execute a bond for Rs. 2,000 as additional security. As the defendants declined to take the risk of the moveables and the debts not realising their full value, the plaintiffs in their turn insisted on the defendants accounting to them for the actual amount realised by the sale of the goods and collection of the debts, to which the defendants agreed. The transaction was carried through by the execution of Exhibits I, II and III by the plaintiffs to the defendants and of Exhibit A by the defendants to the plaintiff. Exhibits I, II and III are transfers of the moveable and immoveable property, the book-debts and mortgage-debt respectively and Exhibit A is the contract of the defendants to account to the plaintiffs. Besides these P. Bapanayya executed Exhibit XX to the defendants at the request of the plaintiffs as further security for Rs. 2,000 and this document recites the terms on which the security of Rs. 6,100 6 9 was deposited. Plaintiffs now sue for accounts on the covenant contained in Exhibit A. The Subordinate Judge in the Court below has taken the accounts and awarded to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 5,968-7-4 as the amount due to them with interest at six per cent. from the beginning of 1909, when he thinks the amount due to the defendants had been fully discharged. The defendants appeal objecting to the disallowance of several items of credit in their favour. Before we deal with the items it is necessary to dispose of two other points raised by the appellants.

The first is this: In taking the accounts, the lower Court deducted the value of the immoveable property Rs. 9,500 from the Rs. 41,638-2-0 found by the defendants for payment to plaintiffs' creditors, thus treating the defendants as owners of the immoveable property. The defendants contend that this is wrong, and that they are only liable to account for the immoveable property as trustees and the sum of Rs. 9,500 should not be deducted from the amount due to them. We think the lower Court was right in treating the defendants as owners of the immoveable property and in deducting Rs. 9,500-0-0 from the amount due to them. Exhibit A is quite clear on this point and is in these terms: "We shall at once re-sell the moveable property which we purchased from you, and we shall add up the sale-proceeds thereof to the amount that will be realised under the transfer deeds which you executed to us and if the total amount should exceed the amount of the balance after deducting Rs. 9,500-0-0 relating to the immoveable property, from Rs. 41,638-2-0 which we now paid for you, such excess amount and the pro-notes of the value of Rs. 2,100-6-9 which you kept with us in advance, or the balance of the pro-notes (if any amounts should be collected under some of the pro-notes), and the cash Rs. 4,000 0-0, these items will be accounted for." Exhibit I is in terms a sale of the moveable and immoveable properties for a sum of Rs. 29,500-0 0. It is only as regards moveables and the debts that the risk of loss was undertaken by the plaintiffs and security given for the deficiency. As to the immoveables the sale operated as an immediate extinguishment of the debt due to the defendants of the sum of Rs. 9,500 0 0, the value of the immoveables. The learned Pleader for the appellants wanted to refer to certain subsequent documents which, he said, showed that was not what the parties intended. We think that Exhibit A is quite plain and unambiguous and we are not at liberty to qualify or deviate from the plain meaning of the document by reference to subsequent statements or conduct of the parties. We must, therefore, disallow this contention.

The next point argued is that the lower Court should have assessed and allowed the loss sustained by the defendants owing to the non-delivery of certain of the immoveable properties conveyed to them under Exhibit I. The learned Subordinate Judge has declined to go into this question and has referred the defendants to a separate suit. In this, we think he was wrong. It is to be observed that the security given by the plaintiffs was intended to cover this loss also. (See Exhibit XX.) The decree of the Subordinate Judge in effect directs the return of their security to the plaintiffs freed from the charge of the defendants. Now coming to the several items for which the defendants claim credit, the first is a sum of Rs. 1,000 for commission as stipulated in Exhibit A. The plaintiffs contend, and their contention has been accepted by the lower Court, that this commission of Rs. 1,000 is payable only in the event of the moveables and the debts transferred to the defendants realising more than the amount for which they were transferred; and as admittedly they realised less the defendants are not entitled to any commission. The language of Exhibit A is not as clear as it might be, but we think that on a fair construction of Exhibit A, the defendants are entitled to the commission claimed. Exhibit A recites that the plaintiffs agreed to pay Rs. 1,000 as commission for conducting "all these affairs" as for their trouble in selling the moveables and realising the debts; their trouble would be the same whether they realised more or less than their estimated value. It cannot be the intention of the parties that if the defendants realised one rupee more than the estimated value they should get the Rs. 1,000, but if they realised one rupee less they should lose their commission. The commission, it is to be observed, is a fixed sum and not a proportion of the excess. We allow this item.

The next item is a sum of Rs. 951 the value of goods sold by the 2nd defendant to the plaintiff which had not been paid for. This sum is admittedly included in the debt for which the plaintiffs agreed to pay the dividend of 9 annas in the rupee. It is said that though the plaintiffs purchased the goods they did not take actual delivery. We are not inclined to believe this story. The goods were admittedly weighed and after weighment the plaintiffs were debited with the price in the defendants' books and the plaintiffs signed the entry. The title to the goods passed to them and if they did not take actual delivery it must have been included in the goods transferred to the defendants under Exhibit I, for the value of which the defendants have accounted in this suit. We allow this item.

The next item consists of two sums of Rs. 1,30 and 140 making a total of Rs. 1,270. The plaintiffs signed an acknowledgment of having received these two sums from the defendants and expressly stipulated that they will re-pay this sum with interest if on taking accounts it was found that no money was due to them from the defendants. The acknowledgment shows that this sum was paid for railway and other charges for goods, which was not included in the sum of Rs. 41,000 and odd which the defendants undertook to pay on behalf of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs now say that these two sums are really part of the aforesaid Rs. 41,000 and odd; in fact their previous acknowledgment of the receipt of these sums for railway charges, etc., is false. We see no reason to believe their present story and allow this item also.

The next two items are items of charge against the defendants in respect of a mortgage-bond and a promissory note transferred to the defendants. The defendants did not take any steps to realise the sums due till nearly two years after the transfer and when they sued, the position of the debtor had materially changed for the worse. The result was the defendants, though they obtained a decree on the note, have not been able to recover anything from the debtor and it is said he has now become an insolvent. They have not realised the mortgage either and the security, it is said, is not sufficient to pay even a half of the mortgage-money. If they had sued soon after the transfer to them, the defendants, as the Judge finds, might have realised the whole sum due from the mortgagors personally on their covenant. In these circumstances we agree with the lower Court that they were negligent in realising these two debts and were properly charged with their value. A distinction was sought to be drawn between the mortgage-debt which was transferred to the defendants, it is said, as trustees and the promissory note which was deposited as security, which the defendants were not bound to realise and which they were entitled to return to the plaintiffs in specie. Exhibit A, no doubt, gives the defendants liberty to return the pro-notes deposited as security, but the document contemplates that the matter should be completed in two months. Whether the debts were transferred to the defendants as trustees or mortgagees, in either case they were bound to realise the debts with due diligence [Coote on Mortgages, page 319. Shyam Kumari v. Rameswar Singh (1)]. The lower Court was right in debiting the defendants with the face value of the documents. The learned Judge was also right in not allowing the defendants the costs incurred by them in suing on the note.

The only other question which remains is the allowance of interest on the amount found due to the plaintiff. Both the parties proceeded to trial in the first Court on the footing that the jural relationship between them was that of trustee and beneficiary and the same assumption was made in the arguments in appeal. We are not certain that the true relationship was not that of mortgagor and mortgagee. The distinction, however, is hardly material as regards the taking of accounts, though in the matter of charging interest it may make a difference. A mortgagee in possession, as soon as his debt is paid off, will be bound to pay interest on any money which he may retain thereafter, while the liability of a trustee would depend on whether he is guilty of a breach of trust [see Wilson v. Metcalfe (2), Ashworth v. Lord (3) and compare section 23 of the Indian Trusts Act.]

In this case, however, there were bona fide disputes as to the amount payable to the defendants and it is far from clear that the amounts due to the defendants had been paid in the beginning of 1909. The total sum found due to the plaintiffs by the lower Court was Rs. 5,968.7-4; we have now allowed the defendants Rs. 3,221 and there can be no doubt that there was a bona fide dispute as to the liability of the defendants with respect to the non-realisation of the promissory note and the mortgage-debt. If this had been allowed in their favour there would have been no balance to pay to the plaintiffs. Again the defendants were entitled to be paid any loss they may have sustained owing to the default of the plaintiffs in the delivery of possession of the immoveable properties sold to the defendants. We, therefore, think that the lower Court was wrong in charging the defendants with interest. These are our conclusions on the various points raised in appeal. Before we can dispose of this appeal finally we must have a finding from the Subordinate Judge's Court of Guntur on the following issue: "Whether the defendants sustained any loss by the non-delivery (if any) of possession of the immoveable properties sold under Exhibit I, and if they did, what is the amount of the loss." The parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence. Finding will be returned in two months and seven days will be allowed for filing objections. We dismiss the memorandum of objections with costs.

This appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred to it for trial by this Court, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The finding is that the defendants have sustained a loss of Rs. 1,943-5-9 on account of non-delivery of the immoveable property. We have already allowed certain items of claim in favour of the defendants. The parties agree that on taking the accounts as stated above the amount due to the plaintiffs is Rs. 954-11-3. The decree of the lower Court will be modified and plaintiffs will be entitled to Rs. 954-11-3 with interest from date of plaint and at 6 per cent. till date of deposit by the defendants in the lower Court. Hindu Law—Widow, re-marriage of—Forfeiture of property granted for maintenance—Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), s. 2, effect of—Construction of document—Intention.

A Hindu widow on her re-marriage, although such re-marriage is permissible and legal according to the custom of the caste to which she belongs, forfeits her interest in the property allotted to her by a family arrangement based upon her right to maintenance out of the interest which her deceased husband had in the ancestral estate. [p. 789, col. 1; p. 790, col. 2.]

It would make no difference in her position whether section 2 of Act XV of 1856 does or does not apply to her case, as that section has not introduced any change in the Hindu Law so far as it relates to the forfeiture of a widow's interest on her re-marriage. [p. 789, col. 1; p. 790, col. 2.]

For the purpose of construing a document the Court has to look at the whole of the document and consider all its terms one with the other, and for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties the Court is also entitled to look at the position of affairs at the time when the document was entered into and also at the position of the parties who executed the document. Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Mullick, dated the 8th July 1915, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2661 of 1913.

FACTS material will appear from the following judgment of Mullick, J.:

"The property in dispute in this suit is a house which has admittedly been let to defendant No. 1 at a rental of Rs. 3 per month. It is a part of the estate of Har Lal Bhagat. The plaintiff is the widow of Har Lal's son, Kishen Ram, who predeceased his father. Har Lal had another son named Thakur Ram, who has left a widow named Musammât Bifo, and he had a daughter named Musammât Jago, the defendant No. 3, who has a son called Chamari Lal the defendant No. 4. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 allege that they are the sole proprietors by inheritance of the house as well as Har Lal's other properties and by a kobala, dated the 24th March 1911, they have sold the house to Mohammad Ibrahim the defendant No. 2.

The plaintiff's case is that, by a family arrangement or an ekrarnama, dated the 19th August 1907, the house was assigned to her and that she had received rents for the same from defendant No. 2 for the years 1909-10. In the present suits he claims rent for the period between May 1910 and September 1911 and further asks that as defendant No. 1 has, after service of notice, refused to quit, a decree for ejectment may be passed in her favour. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 had been impleaded because they are alleged to be in collusion with defendant No. 1, it being asserted that defendant No. 2 is a benamdar of defendant No. 1. The learned Munsif found that defendant No. 1 had paid rent to the plaintiff for the years 1909 and 1910. It was contended before him that by her re-marriage the plaintiff had forfeited her right to the property in suit, but the learned Munsif held, upon the authority of Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (1), that re-marriage by a widow who was permitted, by her caste rules, to re-marry, did not work a forfeiture. The Court declared the plaintiff's title for life but the prayer for ejectment was dismissed for want of proof of service of notice.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that the learned Munsif's view of the law was incorrect and that upon the authority of the Full Bench decision in the case of Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (2), the re-marriage of the plaintiff caused an absolute forfeiture of her estate. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff now appeals. The first point taken before me is that the Full Bench decision in Matungini Gupta's case (2) does not apply to a widow, who is by her caste rules permitted to re-marry. It is contended that as her case is not covered by the Hindu

MOHAMAD UMAR V. MAN KOER.

Widows' Re-marriage Act, the Full Bench decision has no application. I think this view is correct. But the widow is governed by the general provisions of the Hindu Law, and the question is whether under these provisions the re-marriage causes forfeiture of the estate inherited from her deceased husband. On this point with the exception of an Allahabad case, namely, Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (1), there is no authority in support of the plaintiff. On the other hand, Ganja Prasad Shahu v. Ramasrey Shahu (3) and Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (4) are authorities for the proposition that, under the Hindu Law, re-marriage by a widow causes a forfeiture. I think, therefore, that if the property in suit is the property of her deceased husband, the plaintiff by her re-marriage has lost her title to it and her suit fails. But it is argued that it is not the property of her deceased husband, and that by virtue of the family arrangement, an ekrarnama, the plaintiff got an absolute title to the property. In reply, it is contended by the respondents that the ekrarnama merely conferred upon the plaintiff the right to draw maintenance by realising the rent of the house in suit, and that as the plaintiff by her re-marriage has lost her right to maintenance, she has also lost her title to realise the rent. With regard to this it is to be observed in the first place that the ekrarnama does not make any mention of maintenance. It was executed by the plaintiff, defendant No. 3 and Bifo Kuar, under the impression that they were all heirs to the property of Har Lal. Such an impression was not justified by the Hindu Law, for under that law defendant No. 3 alone was the sole heir. But, however that may be, the parties to the ekrarnama seem to have been under the impression that they were all co-sharers in the properties. If then they, by way of family arrangement, agreed to assign some property to the plaintiff, it cannot be said that the title to that property was a charge for maintenance. It also further appears that as the value of the house was Rs. 1,200 and her interest in the property of Har Lal was valued at Rs. 782, she actually paid in cash to defendant No. 3 the balance of Rs. 418. This being so, I cannot see upon what ground the learned District Judge states that the house in question was given to the plaintiff by way of maintenance. Her interest seems to be that of an absolute proprietor. As this finding depends on the construction of a document which is the basis of the plaintiff's title, it is competent for me to set it aside in second appeal.

It appears, however, that the learned Munsif came to the conclusion that the ekrarnama conferred upon the plaintiff a title for life only, and that the plaintiff did not cross-appeal against that finding to the District Judge. Although, therefore, I think the plaintiff acquired an absolute title to the property, I ought not in second appeal to give a declaration to the plaintiff to that effect. In my opinion the house was not assigned to the plaintiff as an allowance for maintenance, and if that is so, then the question whether by the subsequent re-marriage she lost her title to the property, does not arise. But even if we admit that the house was given for the purpose of maintenance, still she cannot be said to have lost her right by re-marriage, as the house was not the property of her husband. The learned Vakil for the respondent relies upon those cases in which the widow has been held to forfeit her maintenance on proof of unchastity. He argues on the principle that a widow on her re-marriage, whether such re-marriage is allowed by custom or not by custom, loses her right to claim maintenance. There is no authority in support of the proposition that re-marriage is synonymous with unchastity. On the contrary there are observations in Gajadhar v. Kaunsilla (1) to show that re-marriage cannot be classed in the same category as unchastity. In these circumstances, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The decree of the learned District Judge will, therefore, be set aside and that of the Munsif restored. I do not allow the successful appellant before me any costs in this appeal, as by not printing the ekrarnama, he has caused a great loss of time of this Court, but he will get costs in the lower Courts."

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case the suit was brought by the plaintiff asking for several reliefs, mainly for a declaration that she was entitled to a certain house and for possession and for arrears of rent.

The defendant No. 1 is the tenant of the house; defendant No. 2 is a person who purchased the house on the 22nd of March 1911 from the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the daughter and grandson of one Har Lal Bhagat.

The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree for arrears of rent only. That Court would have awarded a decree for possession of the property to the plaintiff but for the fact that the requisite notice had not been served.

The first Appellate Court reversed that decision on the ground that the plaintiff had obtained whatever right she had to the house in question by way of maintenance, and that she being a Hindu widow and having married again had forfeited that right, and, consequently, it gave a decree in favour of the defendants.

Mr. Justice Mullick, sitting alone to hear the second appeal, reversed the decision of the first Appellate Court and confirmed the decree of the learned Munsif, and he came to the conclusion that the interest which the plaintiff had in the house was that of an absolute proprietor, but that as the plaintiff had not appealed from the Munsif's judgment her title must be taken to be for life only, that she had not obtained her interest in that house by way of maintenance and that her re-marriage did not consequently result in forfeiture. As there was no cross-appeal he could do no more than confirm the decree of the first Court. Consequently, the plaintiff obtained merely a decree for arrears of rent.

Now, the question which is before us in this case depends upon the construction of an agreement in writing which was entered into on the 19th of August 1907 by three individuals the plaintiff, the lady called Musammât Bifo, and the defendant Musammât Jago. For the purpose of construing this document it is necessary to consider the position of the parties at the time when that agreement was made. That position was this. One Har Lal Bhagat had died on the 16th of April 1906. He had had two sons, and one daughter Musammât Jago. Both his sons Thakur Ram and Kishen Ram died during his lifetime, and he left surviving him his daughter Musammât Jago.

There were also living the widow of Thakur Ram, Musammât Bifo, and the widow of the second son, Musammât Man Koer, the present plaintiff. Apparently, these three women after Har Lal's death were living together and had been carrying on a shop which had been the joint property of the Hindu family. That was the position at the time when this agreement was entered into.

Now, on the one hand, it is alleged on behalf of the defendant that the interest of the plaintiff in the house in question was merely given to her under a family arrangement, in order that she might maintain herself out of the profits of that house, and that consequently when she married again, as undoubtedly she did between the dates, the 19th of August 1907 and the 22nd of March 1911, the exact date is not ascertained, she lost her right to maintenance and, therefore, lost all interest in this house. On the other hand, stated shortly, the plaintiff's case is that she did not obtain her interest in the house by way of maintenance but that under a family arrangement she got an absolute right in it, and that her interest in the family house at all events would subsist as long as she, the plaintiff, lived and as long as the defendant Musammât Jago lived.

Now, the agreement came into existence in this way: Apparently there was a dispute between the parties. The exact nature of the dispute is not specified, but it is stated in the agreement that "Various kinds of differences have arisen between us the declarants, and there is likelihood of quarrels occurring." Then the agreement recited that "this gave rise to the reflection as to what was the extent of the property on which there were liabilities amounting by accounts to Rs. 1,852-8-0, and in case of disputes occurring there would be further loss in costs of litigation, and eventually there would be no other result besides loss and waste of the properties belonging to the estate of the late Hara Lal Bhagat alias Hassani Bhagat." Consequently, the parties apparently agreed to refer their differences to certain arbitrators whose names are stated in the agreement, and to abide by the result of their award. The arbitrators made their award and this agreement was entered by the three declarants, whose names I have mentioned, for the purpose of carrying out the effect of the award. Apparently, there were three houses of the value of Rs. 3,100 and the stock of the shop was of the approximate value of Rs. 1,100. The agreement recites that Har Lal Bhagat died on the date I have mentioned, leaving him surviving the three declarants, his heirs, so that from the date of his death the declarants became and continued to be joint possessors of the entire property and shop and moveable and immoveable property and were carrying on the business of the shop. The plaintiff relies upon that part of the agreement as well as other parts of it for the purpose of showing that this interest which the plaintiff undoubtedly obtained, whatever the extent of it was, was not by way of maintenance of the plaintiff, and she points to the word 'heirs' in the clause which I have just read. I shall have to say more about it later on. Then it recites that "in consideration of the above reflection it was thought advisable for a settlement to refer the matter to a panch of fellow-castemen and those who are respectable and trustworthy, and whatever settlement they make in respect of the estate, shop and liabilities be and do remain binding on us the three declarants." Then it recites that the panch has come to the conclusion that the value of the estate of the deceased person was ascertained to amount to Rs. 4,200 and the liabilities of the shop were proved to amount to Rs. 1,852-8-0. It then proceeds to apportion the shares, and I may state it quite generally. The principle upon which the property was to be divided, if I may use that as a neutral word for the present, was that each was to get a third. The surviving daughter was to have possession of the more valuable house and was to take over the business and the liabilities attached thereto and she would have power to sell some of the property apportioned to her, in order to meet the liabilities. The agreement goes on to state that "property of the value of Rs. 782-8-0 be given to each of the two declarants Musammât Bifo and Musammât Man Koer," these are the two daughters-in-law, "so that they may maintain themselves from the profits of their respective properties and one may not have any concern with the other, whereby quarrels and animosities may be averted, and the ancestral estate of Har Lal Bhagat may not be ruined." That is a portion of the agreement upon which the defendant very strongly relies, because he says it shows what the real intention of the parties was. He says, this was an ancestral property, and the object of the agreement was that the ancestral property should not be ruined in useless litigation and that the shares which the two daughters-in-law were to obtain were for the purpose of maintaining themselves without having recourse to the daughter, so that friction in future might be avoided.

Then the agreement recites that "the ancestor had three houses, one the dwelling-house with shop valued at Rs. 1,800, the second house valued at Rs. 1,200 and the third house valued at Rs. 100 and the stock existing in the shop valued at Rs. 1,100, of which we the declarants have all been from the date of the death of the said ancestor, and are, joint in possession up to the present time, and similarly Rs. 1,815-8-0 the liabilities are justly chargeable to and payable by us three declarants." That is a clause upon which the plaintiff's Vakil strongly relies. He says it shows that the three declarants had been jointly interested in the property, that they had been jointly carrying on the business, that they had been treated as in equality and consequently they were being treated in equality in this distribution of the assets, and that that being so the clause was not consistent with the interest of the plaintiff in the house being merely for the purpose of maintenance. On the other hand it is urged by the defendant that that is a clause which does not hurt the defendant's case, because the parties had obviously been carrying on the business together and this is not a declaration of their strict liability to debts according to law, but having regard to justice and equity, inasmuch as they had been carrying on the business together since the death of the ancestor, it would be right to say that the liabilities were justly chargeable to each of the three declarants.

Then comes the operative part of the agreement. First of all, it begins by saying—"Now of our own free-will and accord while sound of mind and understanding without coercion, instigation or unlawful pressure by anybody, we the declarants have partitioned between us the properties

above mentioned and hereunder described according to our respective shares in accordance with the direction and decision of the panches, and we the declarants have become separate possessors thereof. From this date one of us the declarants has not any sort of concern with another of us the declarants nor shall we have any in the future. If contrary to this, any of the parties take any action or make any claim against any of the parties, that shall be altogether invalid and void. We the declarants have acquired full right and authority in respect of the property apportioned to us respectively, so that each may take whatever she thinks fit and proper with respect thereto without consulting and without reference to another." I draw attention to those words because they are important for the purpose of ascertaining the real intention of the parties. Then the last clause to which I need refer in this agreement is the 10th clause, which sets out the method by which the award of the arbitrators is to be carried out, and it says, "Of the estate of the said ancestor there are three houses of different values, consequently we have got a house and by refund of the excess", that is an inartistic way of expressing the intention of the parties; I understand the meaning of that is, that as each of the three ladies was to get a house, and the houses being of different values, as one of them must get a house more valuable than the other, she would have to make up the difference in value by payment of money to the other or others, so that the shares might be equalized. "Thus the first house with shop, the value of which is approximately Rs. 1,800, and the stock existing in the shop, the value of which is Rs. 1,100, the aggregate value of the house with shop amounting to Rs. 2,900 has been taken by me, Musammatt Jago Kuar, for my rateable share and for payment of debts to creditors, so Rs. 265 the amount which is in excess of my Musammatt Jago Kuar's share has been made good by me in cash to Musammatt Bifo Kuar, the declarant. Now we the declarants Nos. 2 and 3 have not and shall not have any sort of claim and lien in respect of the house and the properties existing in the shop against me Musammatt Jago Kuar or my heirs and successors." That deals with the share of the daughter.

Now, I come to the important part which deals with the share of the plaintiff: "The house of which the approximate value is Rs. 1,200 is apportioned to the share of me Musammatt Man Kuar" (i.e., the present plaintiff) and as the share of Musammatt Man Kuar amounts to Rs. 782 8-0 and the value of the said house is Rs. 1,200, so by this calculation I have made good Rs. 417-8-0 in cash to Musammatt Jago Kuar (i.e., the daughter), now we the declarants Nos. 1 and 2 have not any claim in respect of the said house against Musammatt Man Kuar or her heirs and successors." That, as I have said, is the plaintiff's share. Then comes Bifo's share: "The share of me Musammatt Bifo Kuar amounts to Rs. 782-8-0. Consequently I have received Rs. 265 in cash from Musammatt Jago Kuar as per details.... And I have received Rs. 417-8-0 from Musammatt Man Kuar." That must be the particular sum which the plaintiff has alleged to have paid to the defendant daughter, and which obviously by this arrangement passed from the defendant daughter to Musammatt Bifo, so in this way the three shares of these ladies were equalized. Then it concludes by saying: "None of us have any concern with any other. If anything be done contrary to this, it shall be altogether invalid and void."

That is the agreement.

Now we have to ascertain what was the real intention of the parties. There is no doubt that for the purpose of construing the document we have to look at the whole of the document and consider all its terms one with the other: and for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties we are also entitled to look at the position of affairs at the time when the document was entered into and also at the position of the parties who executed the document and, having regard to such a document as this, I cannot do better than quote a passage, which was referred to this morning, in the case of Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (5);

(5) 6 M. I. A. 526 at p. 550; 4 W. R. (P. C.) 114; 1 Ind. Jur. (N. S.) 37; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 291; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 583; 1 Boulr. Rep. 228; 19 E. R. 198.

MOHAMAD UMAR V. MAN KOER.

that no doubt refers to a testamentary document but, in my opinion, it is equally applicable to the construction of an agreement such as we have now before us. The passage is as follows: "The Hindu Law, no less than the English Law, points to the intention as the element by which we are to be guided in determining the effect of a testamentary disposition; nor, so far as we are aware, is there any difference between the one law and the other as to the materials from which the intention is to be collected." And in construing the terms of a document, it has been pointed out in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Munraj Koonweree (6) that "deeds and contracts of the people of India ought to be liberally construed. The form of expression, the literal sense, is not to be so much regarded as the real meaning of the parties which the transaction discloses." If any further authority were needed, I might refer to the case of Srcemutty Rabutty Dossee v. Sibchunder Mullick (7) (which again is reported in the same Volume at page 1, the passage being at page 23), where it is said by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council: "You must look at the words of the deed with reference to the parties who use them, and the grant must be consistent with that; consistent with the interests of those who make the grant." That being so, I have first of all to consider the position of the parties: the plaintiff was the widow of a man who had been a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. Her husband, therefore, had an interest in his father's property since he was born and when he died, that property of the plaintiff's husband passed to his father subject to his widow's right of maintenance and when the husband's father died, as he died in this case, leaving the defendant daughter surviving him, the property passed to the defendant daughter again subject to the right of the widow to maintenance.

Now, that being the position of the parties, I have to consider what was the intention of the parties when this agreement was entered into. Having given due consideration to the arguments which were advanced on the one side and on the other, I have come to the conclusion that the intention was first of all to get rid of what was apparently a constant source of friction among the three women living together and trying to carry on a joint business in the same premises. That was the first intention. The second intention was that the two daughters-in-law or rather the daughter-in-law, the plaintiff, I need not say two daughters-in-law, because I am only concerned with one, the plaintiff, should have certain property, in order that she might maintain herself out of the profits of that property; and this agreement was entered into upon the basis of the plaintiff's right to maintenance which existed in her according to the Hindu Law. I think the word "heirs" in this agreement, having regard to the other provisions of it, was not used in the strict legal sense, but rather as a word implying person interested in the estate.

That being the true construction of the document, the question then arises did the plaintiff by her re-marriage forfeit her interest in the house? The position of the plaintiff in this respect was this: she belonged to a caste which by custom allowed the re-marriage of a widow. But that in itself would not prevent her from forfeiting her right to maintenance out of her deceased husband's property, and the case of Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (4) was referred to, where the head-note is to the following effect: "A Hindu widow, on re-marriage, forfeits the estate inherited from her former husband, although according to custom prevailing in her caste, a re-marriage is permissible." That case, it is to be noted, deals with the estate which is inherited by a widow from her former husband. This is not a case of inheritance: and as I have already pointed out, in my opinion, this is an agreement which is based upon the widow's right to maintenance which is a charge upon the property of her deceased husband. It is not disputed that but for this agreement she would forfeit that right on her re-marriage.

In my judgment, inasmuch as I have come to the conclusion that this agreement was based upon the plaintiff's right to maintenance out of her deceased husband's property, and that the provisions contained in it were intended to secure the efficient carrying out of that right, I am of opinion that the plaintiff when she was married again forfeited her interest in the house in question.

There is another argument which has been brought forward, and I must deal with that. It is said that the property, in which the plaintiff by reason of this agreement obtained an interest, was not that of her deceased husband, and that is one of the grounds on which the learned Judge who decided the case in favour of the plaintiff relied. The answer to it is that which I have already given, and that is this: The deceased husband having had an interest in the ancestral property out of which she would be maintained during her life, the obligation to maintain her out of that property continued after his death, when the property passed by survivorship, and as I have already mentioned, the property passed to the defendant No. 3 subject to the plaintiff's right of maintenance, and part of that property was the subject-matter of the agreement.

It has been argued that section 2 of Act XV of 1855 does not apply to this case, because of the facts which I have already mentioned. I do not think that it much matters whether this Act applies or not, because it has been admitted during the course of the argument that this section is practically a statement of the Hindu Law as it existed apart from the Act, so far as it related to the forfeiture of a widow's interest on her re-marriage under the circumstances mentioned.

I ought to say before concluding my judgment in deference to the learned Judge that he had not the translation of the agreement before him when he gave his judgment, and, therefore, he had not the advantage which we have had in this Court, and, as far as he knew, the agreement did not make any specific reference to maintenance: Whereas it turns out, when we look at the translation of the agreement, that, as I have already explained in the beginning of my judgment, the object specifically mentioned in this arrangement was that the plaintiff and the other daughter-in-law might maintain themselves from the profits of their respective properties.

For these reasons I think that the learned Judge's judgment cannot stand. But inasmuch as the plaintiff has paid the sum of Rs. 417-8-0 in respect of this property for the purpose of equalizing the shares as they are called in the agreement, it will be wholly inequitable to allow the defendants to deprive the plaintiff of the house in question, unless the defendants or some of them refund the sum of Rs. 417-8-0 to the plaintiff.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—The main contention in this case turns upon the construction of the ekrarnam. It states that in accordance with the decision of the panch, each of the three parties was to get a specific property: Musammatt Jago Kuar, the daughter, was to get the dwelling-house and the shop together with the stock of the shop, and she was to pay the debts due from the shop. It was provided that she would be competent to part with some of the property allotted to her and thus pay the debts to creditors, or she could pay the same with her own funds. Then dealing with the two daughters-in-law it stated that each would get property of the value of Rs. 782-8-0, so that "they may maintain themselves from the profits of their respective properties, one not having any concern with the other, whereby quarrels and animosities may be averted and the ancestral estate of Har Lal Bhagat alias Hassani Bhagat may not be ruined."

The object of the arrangement, therefore, was to provide maintenance for the parties and that the ancestral estate of Har Lal might be preserved.

There was, no doubt, the word "heirs" used with reference to all the three parties; but I think the word was used in the sense of "persons interested" in the estate left by the deceased. The daughters-in-law were entitled only to maintenance but they were living as members of the family and carrying on the shop. The panch, it is true, directed that the property should be divided into three equal shares, the two daughters-in-law and the daughter each getting a share.

That by itself does not show that the property allotted to plaintiff was given to her otherwise than by way of maintenance, because specific properties are sometimes given to persons entitled to maintenance to be enjoyed by them in lieu of cash payments. The parties had, no doubt, become separate possessors but that was the arrangement made in order to avoid disputes. The ekrar then says, "We the declarants have acquired full right and authority in respect of the property apportioned to us respectively, so that each may take whatever she thinks fit and proper with respect thereto, without consulting and without reference to another, wherewith any other of the parties or her heirs shall not have any sort of concern or have any lien." This clause should, I think, be read in connection with the passage which I have already set out, and which appears to me to be the object of the ekrar, namely, that the parties might maintain themselves from the profits of the property, and that the ancestral property might not be ruined. I think the clause must be limited to the purpose of the arrangement, which was that each party should have separate possession and enjoyment of the property allotted to her for maintenance. The word "heirs" was used, but it seems to me that the word was here used in the sense of "successors." Musammât Jago, the heiress of Har Lal, herself had no absolute right, and it is not disputed and cannot be disputed that she could not confer an absolute right. In construing the document we should bear in mind the position of the party making the grant and of the person taking it. If the expressions used in the deed, relied upon on behalf of the respondent, are capable of both constructions, that construction should be adopted which is consistent with the law to which the parties are subject. As I have said, a daughter herself has no absolute right, and a daughter-in-law has a right to maintenance only; and I do not think that we ought to construe the words in the document so as to hold that the daughter intended to give an absolute right to the daughters-in-law. In any case the plaintiff cannot be said to have obtained the property independent of her right to maintenance, and an absolute right in the sense of a right accruing to her not as widow of Kishen Ram, and not by way of maintenance, but independently of her position as such widow could not have been intended to be conferred on her.

It was contended before us on behalf of the plaintiff that the plaintiff's husband having predeceased his father, his interest in the estate passed by survivorship to the father and, therefore, was no longer the property of her husband which was liable for her maintenance: and that being so, she had no interest in her husband's estate which she would forfeit by her re-marriage. This contention is clearly erroneous. Her husband had an interest in the property (which was ancestral property), out of which she was entitled to be maintained during his life, and the obligation to maintain her out of that property continued after his death, whether it passed by inheritance or by survivorship. This being so, there is no doubt that the property that the plaintiff obtained under the document was by way of maintenance out of the property of her deceased husband in the hands of Musammât Jago.

The plaintiff, no doubt, paid Rs. 417-8-0 for equalizing the share in respect of the house which had been allotted to her, the value of which was Rs. 1,200. The parties agreed that each would get property valued at Rs. 782. To that extent the property must be taken to be the property given by way of maintenance, but the remaining portion of the property representing Rs. 471-8-0 which had been paid by the plaintiff did not constitute such property.

The question whether section 2 of Act XV of 1856 is inapplicable to this case, because, the plaintiff, according to the custom of the caste to which she belongs, could have re-married independently of the Act, is of no practical importance, as on the general principles of Hindu Law, a widow, whose re-marriage may be legal according to the custom of the caste to which she belongs, would forfeit any interest which she had in her husband's estate, on her re-marriage. I think, therefore, that the plaintiff forfeited her interest in the property to the extent to which she obtained it by way of maintenance.

MRS. ELKINS AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

REV. DR. CULLEN—RESPONDENT.

Will—Bequest to charity, construction of—Uncertainty—Cy-pres, doctrine of—Trusts Act (II of 1882), applicability of.

Where a disposition in a Will indicates an intention to benefit charities, or a class of charities generally, treating the particular named objects of gift as mere instruments for carrying out such general intention, the general purpose of charity will be executed according to the doctrine of cy-pres. [p. 795, col. 2.]

If a devise in a Will can be construed as a bequest to "charity", in the sense in which that word is understood in English Law, then the disposition is valid, and is governed by the Indian Trusts Act. If, however, it is a devise in the alternative for purposes which are not charitable, though benevolent or philanthropic, then the bequest is void. [p. 797, col. 2.]

Morice v. Bishop of Durham, (1804) 9 Ves. Jun. 399; 32 E. R. 656; 7 R. R. 332, relied upon.

In India the Courts will only recognise the validity of trusts which they can either themselves execute or can control when in process of being executed by trustees. [p. 798, col. 1.]

Case law discussed and reviewed.

A testatrix devised her estate to a trustee that "he of his own judgment (may) give as a donation or apply or invest the balance to or for any person or persons, for his, her or their use or benefit, or to or for any charitable or religious institution or object, as he may think proper".

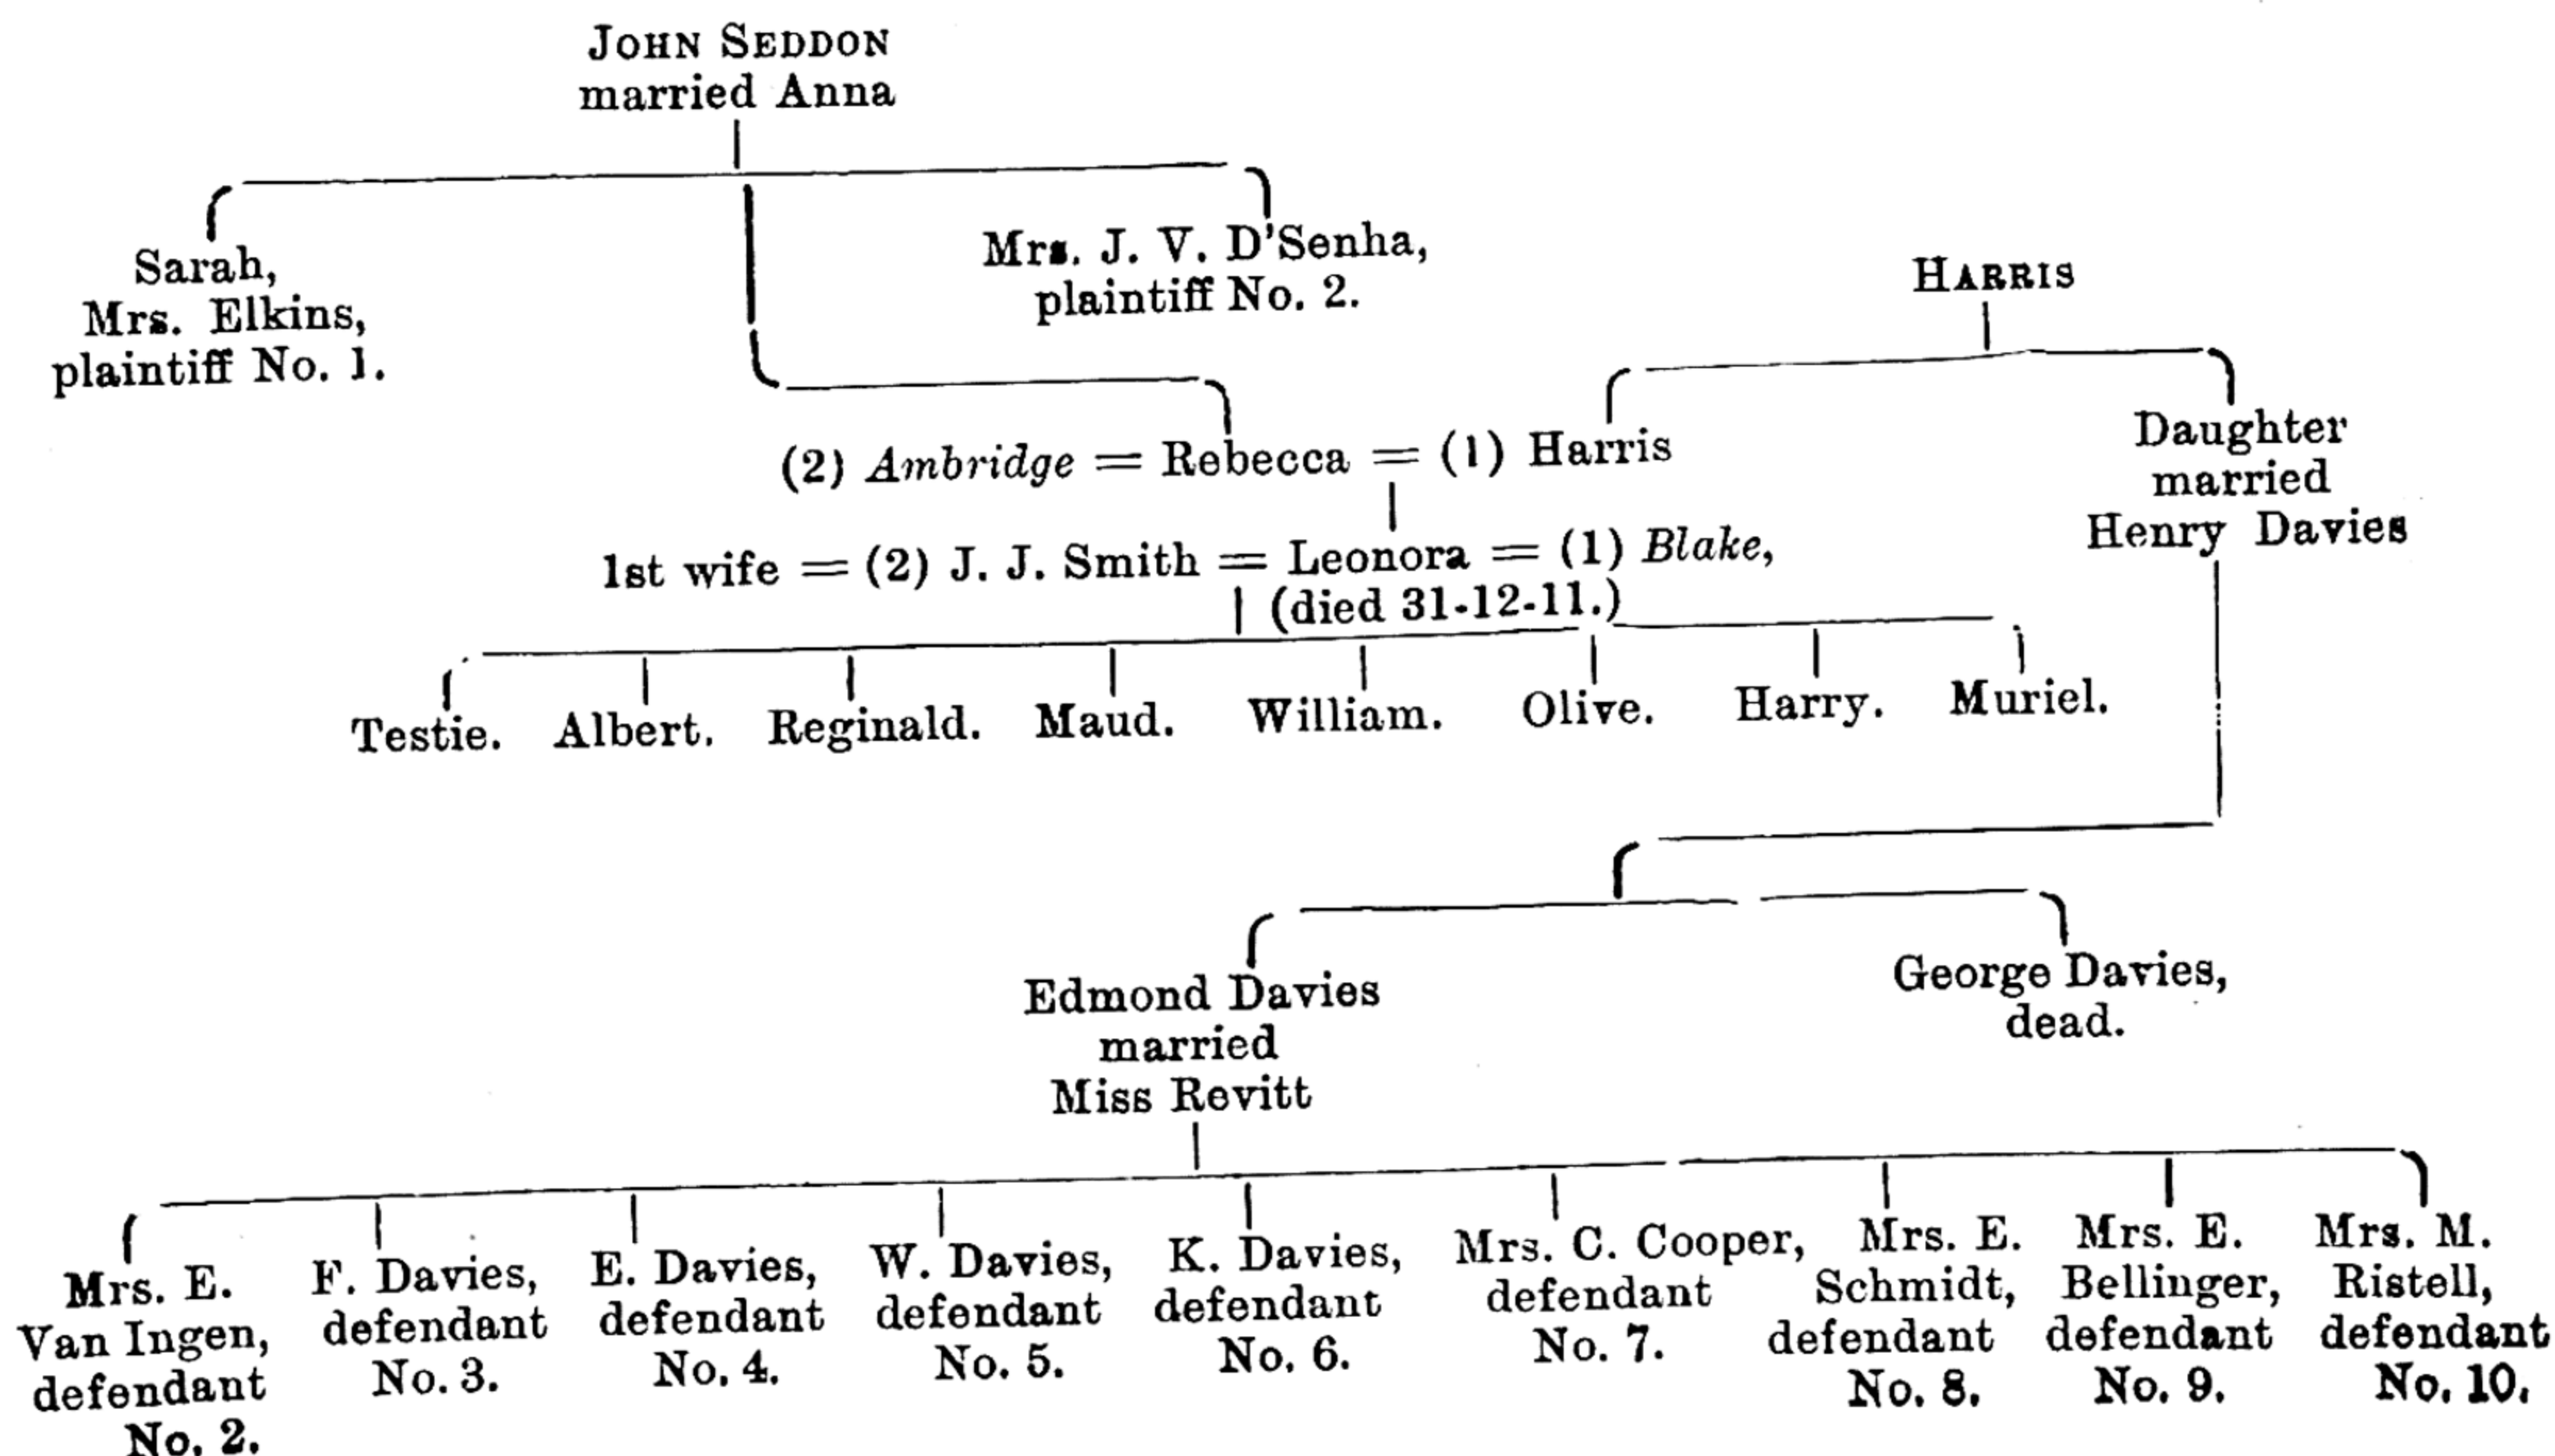

Held, that the bequest was void for uncertainty. [p. 799, col. 2.]

First appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated the 23rd December 1914.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. B. Dadabhoy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are few and simple, but the application of the law thereto presents some difficulty. The following genealogical tree, evolved from the record, will assist comprehension of the case:—

MRS. ELKINS v. REV. DR. CULLEN.

The above tree gives the defendants Nos. 2 to 10 as serially numbered in the proceedings, and not in the order of their births. The names of the children of J. J. Smith follow the order in which they appear in the Will of his widow Leonora Smith (nee Harris). In the course of this litigation the defendants Nos. 2 to 10 disputed the legitimacy of the plaintiff No. 1, but this plaintiff has proved the following facts to our satisfaction by the production of duly certified copies of extracts from Registers of Marriages and Baptisms maintained in the Diocese of Madras:—

1. John Seddon, a Trumpeter in the 2nd Regiment, N. L. Cavalry, a bachelor, was married to Anna, a native spinster, at Tripassore, Poonamallee, in the Madras Presidency, on the 18th November 1829, the marriage by banns being celebrated by the Reverend F. Spring, Chaplain.

2. Sarah, the plaintiff No. 1, apparently the first issue of the above marriage, was born at Arcot on the 27th July 1832, and baptized at Tripassore by the said Reverend F. Spring (Junior Presidency Chaplain) on the 15th September 1833.

3. Rebecca, the next issue of the above marriage, was born at Arcot on the 21st October 1834, and was baptized at St. George's Church, Madras, by the Reverend H. Harper, Senior Chaplain, on the 3rd March 1835.

The legitimacy of the plaintiff No. 1 and her relationship to her sister's daughter, Leonora, whose Will is in dispute in this case, is thus well established: and we are surprised to see that the District Judge recorded no finding on this point, and left her under the stigma of a doubtful paternity which a body of rival claimants to the estate of her niece cast upon her. All the other parts of the above genealogical tree are admitted, and the tree may be taken as correct for the purposes of this appeal.

Leonora Smith died at Jubbulpore on the 31st December 1911, being at the time a widow, for the second time, without any issue of her own. She had a power of appointment over certain property under the Will of her second husband, and certain other property was her own and at her absolute disposal. On the 11th September 1911 she executed a Will in the following words:—

"This is the last Will and Testament of me, Leonora Smith, widow of Joseph John Smith, who was a Guard on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. I give and bequeath all my moneys, Rs. (2,000) two thousand being lent on interest to the Methodist Mission at Jubbulpore (of which the Reverend Dr. Felt is Minister), or elsewhere lodged or invested, together with my house No. 58, situated in the Sadar Bazar, Cantonment of Jubbulpore, with all my furniture therein or elsewhere located, and such jewellery as I may have, and all my livestock of whatever kind, to the Reverend Dr. P. Cullen, Lieutenant-Colonel, Indian Medical Service, retired, as Trustee, and appoint him my sole executor of this my Will; that he, knowing my wishes, and those of my mother the late Mrs. Ambridge, he after my death let on rent or sell the house No. 58 above mentioned and furniture and other items of property and realize the money; and after all my just debts and funeral expenses have been paid, he of his own judgment give as a donation or apply or invest the balance to or for any person or persons, for his, her or their use or benefit, or to or for any charitable or religious institution or object, as he may think proper.

"Of the money left by my husband, viz., Rs. (4,000) four thousand for my life-time and after my death be divided equally among his children. Of this I have spent Rs. (1,500) one thousand five hundred in paying his debts, in obtaining Probate of his Will, in erecting a tomb-stone to his memory, and in other petty expenses and have yet to spend more on these. The balance that may remain my executor will divide equally between his eight children Testie Smith, Albert Smith, Reginald Smith, Mrs. Maud Smith, William Smith, Mrs. Olive Martin, Harry Smith, Miss Muriel Smith, and if any of these die before I do, his or her share shall be added to the total sum and divided equally among the living.

"And in case Dr. Cullen decease before me, I reserve my right to appoint another executor to carry out the provisions of this my Will with such instructions as any altered circumstances of time may have rendered necessary.

"In witness whereof I have hereto set my hand this eleventh day of September in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eleven."

This Will was duly signed by the testatrix and attested according to law by Mr. W. J. Bagley, an Extra Assistant Commissioner, and Mr. A. Smith, a Guard on the G. I. P. Railway.

The Reverend Dr. Cullen, who appears as the first defendant in this litigation, was formerly a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Indian Medical Service and a Civil Surgeon of Jubbulpore. He has since retired, and is now a Minister in Holy Orders of the Church of England. He was admittedly the medical adviser, and presumably also the spiritual preceptor, of the testatrix: but the language of the Will makes it manifest that he had no hand in drawing it up, and it is not alleged, or at any rate there is no proof, that he actively influenced the testatrix in making it. He applied to the District Court for Probate of the Will in due course, but Probate was refused, on a caveat filed by the plaintiff No. 1, the learned District Judge holding that the Will, so far as it purported to dispose of the estate of the testatrix for charitable purposes, was void for uncertainty. Caveats were also filed by the children of Edmond Davies who claimed to be the heirs of the deceased, repudiating the claim of the plaintiff No. 1, on grounds already referred to and decided. Dr. Cullen appealed to this Court [Cullen v. Mrs. Elkins (1)], and a Judge of this Court, following Gopaldas v. Musammatt Bandan (2), decided that a District Court, in its capacity as a Court of Probate, has no jurisdiction to determine any question of title regarding the property of which the Will purports to dispose, or to decide whether any of the bequests in the Will are void or valid, because of the nature of such bequests. The order of the District Court refusing Probate was, therefore, set aside and the case remanded for disposal on the merits. Subsequently an order for the grant of Probate was made by the District Court, but Dr. Cullen has wisely abstained from paying the necessary fees and taking out Probate pending the disposal of this litigation. Two suits resulted from the order granting Probate. One was brought by the plaintiffs Sarah Elkins and Mrs. I. V. D'Senha against Dr. Cullen and the children of Edmond Davies: the other was brought by the children of Edmond Davies against Dr. Cullen and Sarah Elkins. The two suits were consolidated, and the children of Edmond Davies admitted that if Sarah Elkins established the fact that the testatrix was her sister's daughter she would be the heir of the deceased in preference to them. They made common cause with her in opposing the Will. The learned District Judge upheld the Will and on that sole ground dismissed both suits. Sarah Elkins and Mrs. D'Senha have appealed, and though the District Judge failed to record a finding as to Mrs. Elkins' relationship with the deceased, her rival claimants are apparently satisfied by the evidence she was able to produce as to her paternity and legitimacy. They have neither appealed against the dismissal of their suit nor entered appearance as respondents in this appeal by Mrs. Elkins and Mrs. D'Senha in their suit. The Davies family may be left out of further consideration as they were given up by the learned Advocate for the appellant at that hearing. The grounds taken in appeal are as follow:—

(1) That the Court below has erred in law in holding that the bequest is not vague and that it is not void for uncertainty.

(2) That the Court below has erred in law in applying section 125 of the Succession Act to the terms of the bequest in the present case.

It was made clear in the course of the arguments that the plaintiffs-appellants only dispute so much of the Will of their niece as purports to dispose of her absolute estate, and that they do not contest the bequest made of the estate of J. J. Smith in which the testatrix had only a life interest. The main ground upon which this appeal is founded is that the property in dispute is not left to any ascertained beneficiary, but is practically at the absolute disposal of the trustee, and the bequest is, therefore, void for uncertainty. The particular words which we have to consider are these:—

"He of his own judgment (may) give as a donation or apply or invest the balance to or for any person or persons, for his, her or their use or benefit, or to or for any charitable or religious institution or object, as he may think proper."

(1) 21 Ind. Cas. 599; 9 N. L. R. 152.

It was urged on behalf of the respondent that these words are controlled by the words "he knowing my wishes and those of my mother the late Mrs. Ambridge." We are unable, however, to construe those words as evidence of any concealed communications as to the disposal of the estate. Neither in the pleadings nor in the witness box has any statement been made by or on behalf of Dr. Cullen to the effect that the testatrix left any verbal directions with him for the disposal of her estate. It may be that he knew that both Mrs. Ambridge and her daughter the testatrix did not wish the property to go to the plaintiffs as heirs, and that he was, therefore, entrusted to dispose of it in any other way that he deemed fit. The reference made to the wishes of her mother in conjunction with her own leads us to the conclusion that the testatrix did not mean to convey that she had given any oral directions to the respondent for the disposal of her estate. He was declared to know what she and her mother felt on the subject generally, and was, therefore, a fit person to carry out the trusts which the testatrix sought to create by her Will. We think that if any private instructions had been given to Dr. Cullen, amounting to a testamentary disposition of the property supplementary of the written Will, he would have said so in the pleadings. We, therefore, hold that the words—"he knowing my wishes and those of my mother Mrs. Ambridge"—do not control the words of disposal disputed by the appellant, even if we admitted, which we do not, that section 68 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, offers no barrier to the admission of evidence, had it been given, to prove what the testatrix orally confided to Dr. Cullen.

It is claimed for the respondent that the bequest is one made to charity generally, and, as such, is valid; while the interpretation put on the language on behalf of the appellants is this, that the bequest is not limited to charitable purposes only, but is one to any person or persons to whom the trustee may be pleased to give the money realized by the sale of the estate. The general doctrine governing the construction of Wills has been well laid down in a leading work on the subject in these words:—

"In the construction of Wills the most unbounded indulgence has been shown to the ignorance, unskilfulness, and negligence of testators: no degree of technical informality, or of grammatical or orthographical error, nor the most perplexing confusion in the collocation of words or sentences, will deter the judicial expositor from diligently entering upon the task of eliciting from the contents of the instrument the intention of its author, the faintest traces of which will be sought out from every part of the Will, and the whole carefully weighed together; but if, after every endeavour, he finds himself unable, in regard to any material fact, to penetrate through the obscurity in which the testator has involved his intention, the failure of the intended disposition is the inevitable consequence. Conjecture is not permitted to supply what the testator has failed to indicate; for as the law has provided a definite successor in the absence of disposition, it would be unjust to allow the right of this ascertained object to be superseded by the claim of any one not pointed out by the testator with equal distinctness. * * *

"To the validity of every disposition, as well of personal as of real estate, it is requisite that there be a definite subject and object; and uncertainty in either of these particulars is fatal." [See Jarman on Wills, 5th Edition, Volume I, pages 326 and 327.]

In the case before us there is no uncertainty in the subject of the devise. The subject is the whole estate of the testatrix, excepting a balance of Rs. 4,000 left for disposal under the Will of her second husband, J. J. Smith. This estate is to be converted into money so far as it is not already in that form, and is thereafter to be held and disposed of by the trustee according to the directions contained in the Will by which he is appointed trustee.

It is contended that there is uncertainty as to the object, and that is the question upon which our decision is invited.

It cannot be disputed that the language used favours the contention of the appellants. The bequest is made "to or for any person or persons, for his, her or their use or benefit, or to or for any charitable or religious institution or object," and it is uged that charity and religion are given as an alternative to something which is not under the category of either. On the other hand it is argued for the respondent that the alternative given is between charity to individuals and charity to institutions. The trustee may, at his discretion, apply the money to help a poor man or a poverty-stricken family, or he may subscribe to an orphanage or a church. But it is further contended on behalf of the appellants that even if this construction be admitted the bequest is void for uncertainty. It seems expedient to consider this alternative argument before deciding whether the devise was intended to cover objects outside the category of charity.

The English case-law on the subject is voluminous, and we can only deal with the general trend of it in this judgment. Dispositions made to charitable purposes are strongly favoured in point of construction, and have been upheld even where the bequest would, upon the ordinary principles which govern the construction of testamentary dispositions, be void for uncertainty. The purpose being charity, the Crown as parens patriæ, or the Court of Chancery, will execute it cy-pres: Thus bequests (a) to the poor in general; (b) to charitable uses generally; (c) for the advancement of religion expressed in the most vague and indefinite terms, (d) to such charitable uses as the testator's executor shall appoint; (e) in favour of a charitable object which has no existence, or which is void in law, or has become impossible, have been maintained and executed in accordance with the doctrine of cy-pres: (a) Attorney-General v. Mathews (3), Attorney-General v. Peacock (4); (b) Clifford v. Francis (5); Attorney-General v. Herrick (6); (c) Powerscourt v. Powerscourt (7); (d) White v. White (8); (e) Attorney-General v. City of London (9); Attorney-General v. Whorwood (10); Attorney-General v. Guise (11). Indeed in In re

White; White v. White (12) it was laid down that "a charitable bequest never fails for uncertainty." This means that if a general intention can be found to give to charity, the gift does not fail because the testator has not indicated the particular charity he wishes to benefit, or because the means he indicates for ascertaining the particular charity are inadequate. The general test at the present day in England seems to be whether the scope and terms of the Will, or that part of it which relates to charitable dispositions, indicates an intention to benefit charities, or a class of charities generally treating particular named objects of gift as mere instruments for carrying out such general intention. In all such cases the general purpose of charity will be executed according to the doctrine of cy-pres.

So far the case-law of England is plain and consistent: but difficulties arise as soon as we come to examine the cases which define what is and what is not a charitable purpose. 'Charity' has been defined to be a general public use. In order to ascertain what are charitable purposes recourse is usually had to the preamble of the Statute 43 Eliz. c. 4, which preamble has been reproduced in the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), though the latter enactment otherwise repeals the former. The preamble of 43 Eliz. c. 4 enumerated as charities the relief of the aged, impotent, and poor people; maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners, schools of learning, free schools and scholars in universities; repair of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, sea banks and highways; education and preferment of orphans; relief, stock or maintenance for houses of correction; marriages of poor maids; supportation and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and persons decayed; relief or redemption of prisoners or captives; aid or ease of any poor inhabitants, concerning payment of fifteens, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes. But it has been held that the word 'charity' is by no means limited to the exact forms of it enumerated in the Statute of Elizabeth: Income Tax Commissioners v. Pemsel (13). Numerous instances will be found in Jarman on

MRS. ELKINS v. REV. DR. CULLEN.

Wills, 5th Edition, Volume I, page 167, and in the cases there cited. In the case last above cited 'charity' in the legal sense (wherein it has a far wider meaning than the word conveys in its popular use) was said to comprise four principal divisions, namely.—

- (1) trusts for the relief of poverty;
- (2) trusts for the advancement of education;
- (3) trusts for the advancement of religion; and
- (4) trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the preceding heads.

Nevertheless it is impossible to reconcile all the case-law in respect of bequests to charitable uses or to evolve therefrom any satisfactory definition of 'charity'. On the one hand a gift for private charity has been held to be too confined to be a charity in the legal sense, and, therefore, void: Ommanney v. Butcher (14); on the other hand bequests for purposes of benevolence, or liberality, or general or public utility, or philanthropy, or for public purposes, in cases to which the preamble to 43 Eliz. c. 4 would not expressly have applied, are declared to be too wide to be charitable: James v. Allen (15); In re Jarman, Leavers v. Clayton (16); Morice v. Bishop of Durham (17); Kendall v. Granger (18); Langham v. Peterson (19); In re Macduff, Macduff v. Macduff (20); Vezey v. Jamson (21); and Blair v. Duncan (22). We need not pursue the subject any further. It will be found fully discussed in Jarman on Wills, already referred to, and in the Law of Wills by Theobald, 7th (1908) Edition. The decisions of the English Courts appear to have been mainly controlled by the statutory provisions governing charitable bequests, and cannot, therefore, be a complete or accurate guide in this country where those Statutes have no force, except so far as their provisions have been incorporated in British Indian enactments or, in the absence of enactment, been followed by the Indian Courts. In the Indian Succession Act, 1865, by which this case is governed, a great deal of English Law is incorporated, and in section 105 thereof we have a provision controlling bequests "to religious or charitable uses"; but neither in that Act, nor in the General Clauses Act, 1897, nor in any special enactment, are we able to find any definition of a charitable use or of a religious use. The Indian case-law is meagre, but, as far as it goes, it is largely based on analogies drawn from the English case-law. In Gangabai v. Thavar Mulla (23) it was held that in the Will of a Khoja Muhammadan, written in the English language and form, a gift of a fund "to be disposed in charity as my executor shall think right," is a valid charitable bequest, and it will be referred to the proper officer of the Court to settle a scheme for the application of the fund to charitable objects by analogy to 43 Eliz. c. 4. But where the Will is in the native language, and the word 'dharm' is used, the word was declared to be too vague and uncertain for the gift to be carried into effect by the Court, including as it does many objects not comprehended in the word 'charity' as understood in English Law. In a note which appears at page 76 of this ruling, reference is made to a decision of the same Court in 1859 in which the word dharm was interpreted as including a great number of objects which come within the meaning of the English word 'benevolent', as contradistinguished from 'charitable' in the sense in which the latter has been construed by English Courts since 43 Eliz. c. 4. The well-known case of Morice v. Bishop of Durham (17) was referred to as an authority for the proposition that a bequest to "charitable and benevolent purposes" is too vague an indication of the testator's intention for a valid gift to charity, and must be held void. In Jamnabai v. Khimji Vullubdass (24) bequests (a) for the continuance of an existing sadavarat, (b) for the establishment and maintenance of a second sadavarat, and (c) for the building of a well and cistern for public use were all held valid as charitable trusts. In Morari Cullianji v. Nenbai (25) Starling, J., felt bound, by the modern tendency towards upholding as much as possible where charity is concerned [following Hoare v. Osborne (26)], to hold that a bequest in favour of dharm and sadavarat was valid as to sadavarat (the distribution of alms) but invalid as to dharm: and, upon an entirely arbitrary conclusion, he sustained the bequest to the extent of one-half. This decision seems to be irreconcilable with the ratio decidendi in Morice v. Bishop of Durham (17) above quoted. In Devshankar Naranbhai v. Motiram Jageshwar (27), where most of the earlier Bombay decisions were reviewed, it was held that a bequest in favour of dharmada is void for uncertainty. In Runchordas Vandrandas v. Parvatibai (28) the English ruling last above cited was approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council, who ruled that a devise to dharm is void because the objects which can be considered to be meant by that word are too vague and uncertain for the administration of them to be under any control. In Trikumdas Damodhar v. Haridas (29) a bequest by a testatrix of the residue of her estate for use by six named executors "in such manner as they may unanimously think proper for purposes of public usefulness or for purposes of 'charity'" was held to be bad for uncertainty. In Dwarkanath Bysack v. Burroda Persaud Bysack (30) devises (1) to feed the poor and needy, (2) to make contributions towards the worship of the testator's ancestral goddess, (3) for annual shrads of the testator, his father, mother, and grandfather, and (4) for the performance of ceremonies and the feeding of Brahmins, were found to be valid testamentary bequests; and it was doubted, and not decided, whether bequests to learned men for holding tolls for learning at the time of the Doorgah Poojah, and for reading the Mahabharat and Pooran and for prayer to God, were valid. In Parbati Bibee v. Ram Barun Upadhya (31) a bequest of a residuary estate "to my executor in trust to spend and give away the whole thereof in charity in such manner and to such religious and charitable purposes as he may in his discretion think proper" was held valid by Henderson, J., who construed the devise as one made wholly to charity and, therefore, outside the purview of the dictum in Morice v. Bishop of Durham (17). In Rajendra Lal Agarwalla v. Raj Coomari Debi (32), Harington, J., held a direction to spend income in feeding poor indigent Hindus to be a valid charitable bequest under Hindu Law. In Administrator-General of Bengal v. Hughes (33) the English Law was closely followed, but no question of uncertainty was raised. The repair of certain graves was held not to be a charity. In In the matter of Hormusji Framji Warden (34) the Court held the cy-pres doctrine to be applicable in India. In Gurdit Singh v. Sher Singh (35) it was decided that a bequest for distribution of money on dharmath was void for uncertainty.

From a consideration of all these authorities it seems clear that if we can construe the devise in this case to be a bequest to "charity," as that word is understood in English Law, then the disposition will be valid, and be governed by the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. But if it is a devise in the alternative for purposes which are not charitable, though benevolent or philanthropic, then the bequest is void under the principles laid down in Morice v. Bishop of Durham (17) and the Indian cases relating to dharm. We have seen that in law charity has been defined to be a general public use, and that a devise for private charity has been held to be void, or at any rate not to be a charitable bequest in law. We have also seen that both in England and in India the Court will only recognize the validity of trusts which it can either itself execute or can control when in process of being executed by trustees: Morice v. Bishop of Durham (17); Runchordas Vandra-vandoss v. Parvatibai (28). That principle is now regarded as well established in England: Nash v. Morley (36). In a case already cited, Ommanney v. Butcher (14), the testatrix declared as to certain money that she wished it to be given in private charity. Sir T. Plumer, M. R., held that the words did not create a trust which could be carried into effect. Assisting individuals in distress was private charity, but such a purpose could not be executed by the Court or the Crown. So a gift to found a private museum, Thomson v. Shakespear (37), or in aid of a subscription library, Carne v. Long (38), or of a mechanics institute, In re Dutton, Ex parte Peak (39), or for the benefit of an orphan school kept by an individual substantially at his own expense, Clark v. Taylor (40), has been held not to be charitable. In Vezey v. Jamson (21) a testator gave the residue of his estate to his executors, upon trust to apply and dispose of the same in or towards such charitable uses or purposes, person or persons, or otherwise, as he might by any codicil, or by memorandum in his own handwriting appoint, and as the laws of the land would admit of; and, in default, upon trust to pay and apply the same in or towards such charitable or public purposes as the laws of the land would admit of; or to any person or persons, and in such shares, manner, and form as his (the testator's) executors, or the survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, should in their or his discretion, will and pleasure think fit, or as they should think would have been agreeable to him, if living, and as the laws of the land did not prohibit. Sir J. Leach, V. C., observed that the testator had not fixed upon any part of the property a trust for a charitable use, and the Court could not, therefore, devote any part of it to charity; he had given it to the trustees expressly on trust, and they could not, therefore, hold it for their own benefit; the purposes of the trust being so general and undefined, they must fail altogether and the next-of-kin become entitled. We have underlined (italicised) certain passages in our statement of the above case which seem to us to offer a close resemblance to the first part of the disputed devise in this case. In Kendall v. Granger (18), where the trustees were directed to dispose of the residue for the relief of domestic distress, assisting indigent but deserving individuals, or encouraging undertakings of general utility, in such mode and proportions as their own discretion might suggest, irresponsible to any person or persons whatsoever, Lord Langdale, M. R., decided that the gift was void for uncertainty. He said that to make the bequest valid it must be obligatory on the trustees to apply the whole of it in charity. In Ellis v. Selby (41) a bequest for "charitable or other purposes" and in Williams v. Kershaw (42) a devise for "benevolent, charitable, and religious purposes" were held invalid. Generally, where a discretion is left to trustees, which would empower them to apply the whole of the gift either to charitable or other indefinite purposes, the whole gift is void, as it does not appear that the chief object was charity; and, on the other hand, the other object is void for uncertainty: Theobald's Law of Wills, 7th Edition, page 369, and cases there cited.

In the present case a discretion is left to the trustee in the first instance, as he may think proper, to give the whole of the property forthwith to any individual he may select. There are absolutely no words of control over this power. It is not required that the person shall be indigent or deserving of the gift, or that the donation should be an act of charity in either the legal or the popular sense of that word, and we are not justified in reading into the Will words that are not there. In Dolan v. Macdermot (43), where the trust was to lay out "in such charities and other public purposes," it was held that the words, "other public purposes," meant purposes ejusdem generis, i.e., charitable, and that they were used to include purposes which, though charitable, under 43 Eliz. c. 4 might not be considered so in popular parlance. We think that the rule of ejusdem generis cannot be applied here, because the primary bequest is to a person or persons, and only as an alternative succeeding such beneficiaries are charitable purposes mentioned. But suppose we took the unusual course of applying that rule backwards, so as to construe the donation or investment in favour of a person or persons to be a form of the charitable purposes subsequently denoted in general terms, it would carry the devise no higher than one to private charity or public charity, and such a combination would make the bequest void for uncertainty. In Pocock v. Attorney-General (44) the bequest was to charitable institutions, and was, therefore, of a general public use and rightly held to be valid. The case is not in point here. In In re Sutton; Stone v. Attorney-General (45), where the bequest was for "charitable and deserving objects," in Wilkinson v. Lindgren (46), where it was to certain specified charitable institutions "or to any other religious institution or purpose" as the trustees might think proper, and in In re Douglas; Obert v. Barrow (47), where the gift was for "charities, societies, and institutions to be selected by A," the rule of ejusdem generis was applied, and the words "charitable" and "charities" were held to govern the whole sentence. But we are unable by any straining of language to bring the present case into the category of a bequest made wholly for charity in the legal sense of that term. It will further be observed that the words used are not "charitable and religious," but "charitable or religious." It is a nice question at the present day, chiefly owing to the decision of the House of Lords in Grimond v. Grimond (48), whether gifts for religious institutions or religious purposes generally are good charitable gifts: See Theobald's Law of Wills, 7th Edition, page 356 et seq., where the subject will be found fully discussed.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the contention on behalf of the appellants is sound, and that this appeal must prevail. It is accordingly affirmed and, the decree of the lower Court being reversed, the plaintiffs will be given a decree declaring that the provisions of the Will empowering the trustee to dispose of the estate of the testatrix to any person or persons or to any charitable or religious institution or object are void for uncertainty and of no effect. But the rest of the Will holds good, and the estate is liable for the payment of all funeral and testamentary expenses and the legacy to the eight children of J. J. Smith, the second husband of the testatrix. We are also of opinion that the estate of the testatrix should bear the whole costs of this litigation in both Courts, and the decree will direct accordingly. We allow Pleader's fees in both Courts taxed ad valorem of the property in dispute.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from the judgment of Greaves, J., whereby he gave judgment for the plaintiffs for Rs. 4,750 and costs.

The cases made by the plaintiffs and the defendants in the pleadings are fully set out in the learned Judge's judgment, and I need not refer to them in detail.

The case made at the trial for the plaintiffs was based upon the evidence of Bhuban Mohan Saha, who stated that he looked after the plaintiffs' business.

He alleged that the plaintiffs bought from Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co. 251 bags of Java Sugar, and that a delivery order for the same, signed by Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co., was brought to him by the broker of the plaintiff firm, viz., one M. L. Roy. The delivery order was as follows:—

Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co.

According to his story, on the 30th May 1913, he accompanied by M. L. Roy went to the defendants' guddee and handed the delivery order to S. N. Rakshit, the defendants' manager, and arranged with S. N. Rakshit to take delivery of the sugar and sell the same at a commission; the plaintiffs were to bear the costs and charges relating to the sugar, and after the sale the proceeds were either to be brought to the plaintiffs or intimation that the money was standing with the defendants to the plaintiffs' credit was to be sent to the plaintiffs. In cross-examination he stated that at the time he made over the delivery order, he told Surendra Nath Rakshit that Makhan Lal Roy would accompany the representative of the defendant firm to take delivery of the sugar from the docks, and that he (Makhan Lal Roy) would sign the dock delivery order after inspecting the bags. He stated that Makhan Lal Roy had authority to sign the firm's name and get delivery. I should also add that he stated in cross-examination that the transaction in suit was the first transaction that his firm had had with the defendants. He also stated that at most of his visits, I think in all his visits, to the defendants' guddee, with one exception, he saw Surendra.

The defendants' case on the other hand was that B. M. Shaha did not bring the delivery order to the defendants but that on the 2nd June M. L. Roy and Khitish came to Surendra Nath and stated they had lot of sugar which they wished him to sell on commission, and that the defendants agreed to this: that on the following day, the 3rd June, Khitish brought to the defendants the delivery order, that at the time the delivery order was brought, it bore the endorsement which now appears upon it. (In passing I may say that I think the learned Judge has in error fixed the first interview on the 3rd instead of the 2nd and the 2nd interview on the 4th instead of the 3rd: it is, however, a matter which makes no material difference.)

It is common ground that the proceeds of the sale were not paid to the plaintiffs in accordance with the agreement alleged by the plaintiffs; and that the plaintiffs have not in fact received the proceeds.

It is necessary, therefore, in the first instance to arrive at a conclusion as to which of these two stories relating to the inception of the transaction, is true in fact.

The learned Judge has said as follows:—

"Turning once more to the issues in this case, with regard to issue No. 1, that is to say: 'Did the plaintiff enter into any agreement with the defendant firm on the 30th of May as alleged in paragraph 3 of the plaint?' I feel some difficulty in deciding between the evidence called on behalf of the plaintiff and the evidence called on behalf of the defendant in this case, that is to say, as to whether the plaintiff's representative Bhuban Mohan Shaha, as he alleged, came on the 30th May to the defendant's guddee, or whether the story of the defendant is true that Bhuban Mohan Shaha never went there and that the whole business was transacted by Makhan Lal Roy and Khitish Chandra Pal. I do not think myself that it is really necessary to decide for the purpose of this case, which story in fact is true, but as the issue has been raised, I am bound to decide it, and so with some doubt I accept the story of the plaintiffs having regard to the corroboration afforded it by Khitish Chandra Pal that he had gone and entered into an agreement with the defendant firm on the 30th of May."

I am most unwilling to interfere with a finding of fact by the learned Judge who tried the case, and who has had the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witnesses; but in this case the learned Judge has expressed a doubt as to the correctness of his finding and has put on record the difficulty he has felt in coming to a decision. Although some weight must be given to the learned Judge's finding, even when it is given with doubt, as in this case, such a finding cannot be of such importance as a definite and decisive finding of fact, and it throws upon this Court the necessity of closely investigating the evidence and arriving at a conclusion for ourselves, if possible, on this question of fact.

After such investigation I have come to the conclusion that the learned Judge's finding of fact, that the plaintiffs' story should be accepted, should not be supported. First of all, the evidence of B. M. Shaha as to this ~~part of the case~~ is almost entirely uncorroborated. I do not think that the admission of Khitish that he knew of the dispute between the plaintiffs and defendants is much, if any, corroboration of the plaintiffs' story; for it appears from his evidence that he did not receive any payment from the defendant firm after hearing of the trouble, and the last payment he did receive was on the 30th June; so that if this be accepted as correct, he did not hear of the trouble until the end of June, or beginning of July, and not by the 23rd June, as the learned Judge seems to think. This may have made a material difference in the learned Judge's mind.

Further, there are some features of the plaintiffs' story which seem to me improbable. I do not understand why the plaintiffs' manager, if he took the delivery order to the defendants on the 30th May and left it with them for the purpose of collecting the goods and selling them as he alleged, should not have endorsed the delivery order then and there. I think the reason alleged by the plaintiffs is not a sufficient or satisfactory one. Further, it is hard to believe the plaintiffs' manager's story as to his visits after the 30th of May, when he alleges the defendants told him they had not been able to get delivery of the goods owing to the weather, when, as a matter of fact, they had not only got delivery but had sold them. This was a fact which the plaintiffs' manager could have discovered for himself by the most casual enquiry at the docks, and which, of course the defendants must have known. Again, if it be true that the defendants expressly agreed to take the proceeds of the sale to the plaintiffs, or that information that the money was standing with the defendants to the plaintiffs' credit should be sent to the plaintiffs, I do not understand why the defendants, who are experienced in business, and against whose honesty as regards the money no accusation is made, should have failed to carry out the arrangement, and should have paid the money to Khitish Chandra Pal and to Probodh—neither of whom, as far as the defendants were aware, were known to the plaintiffs.

On the other hand, the defendants' story as to this part of the transaction is, I think, the more probable, and it has the advantage of being corroborated in material respects by the entries in their books, and though criticism has been directed to some of the entries, it has not been sufficient to convince me that the entries relating to the receiving of the delivery order were made otherwise than in the ordinary course of business. These are some of the reasons for my coming to the conclusion that the defendants' story as to the inception of the business and the bringing of the delivery order should be accepted in preference to that of the plaintiffs.

The case, therefore, must be considered upon the assumption that M. L. Roy and Khitish had an interview with the defendants on the 2nd of June, and that on 3rd June Khitish brought the delivery order in pursuance of the arrangement made on the 2nd June, and that it then bore upon it the endorsement showing the name of the plaintiff firm by the pen of M. L. Roy.

It is clear that the goods belonged to the plaintiffs and that they have not received the money realised by the defendants by the sale of the (plaintiffs') goods. The defendants in the first instance sought to defend themselves on the ground that as the delivery order endorsed in blank had been handed to them by Khitish, from whom they had received instructions, they were entitled to pay over the proceeds to Khitish in accordance with the custom of the sugar trade, and that they had paid over the proceeds, Rs. 4,750, in three instalments, viz., two of Rs. 200 and Rs. 50 to Khitish, and one of Rs. 4,500 to Probodh Ch. Roy, son of M. L. Roy, at the request of Khitish. This was the case made at the beginning of the dispute; see the defendants' letter of 3rd July 1913 and the statement of defence, and it was, in my opinion, the real case made by Surendra Nath Rakshit in his evidence, although there were variations of it at different stages of the evidence.

The learned Judge decided against the existence of any such custom, and it was not seriously urged in the appeal that the payment to Khitish by itself would amount to a discharge of the defendants.

But it was argued (1) that in effect it was M. L. Roy and Khitish who handed over the delivery order and that, as far as the defendants knew, M. L. Roy and Khitish were owners of the sugar and principals in the transaction;

(2) in the alternative, that, as far as the defendants knew, M. L. Roy was the owner and principal and Khitish was the broker acting for him;

(3) that if neither was in fact a principal, the defendants were entitled to treat them as being in the position of factors entrusted with the delivery order by the owners of the goods; and

(4) that the defendants had paid Khitish and Probodh the proceeds of the sale, and that such proceeds had reached the pocket of M. L. Roy, and consequently they were discharged.

It is to be noticed that this case was not made at the trial, and section 108 of the Contract Act, upon which the learned Counsel for the defendants relied, was not mentioned to the learned Judge, though it was urged that the defendants could raise the question whether M. L. Roy was the agent to receive payment of the moneys in respect of the 25 tons of sugar sold.

As regards the payment, I think sufficient evidence has been given to justify us in coming to the conclusion that the moneys paid by the defendants to Khitish and Probodh, at the request of Khitish, were handed by them to M. L. Roy, that is, of course only for the purposes of this case. M. L. Roy has not been called as a witness and we have not heard his explanation, if he has any. The question, therefore, remains, can the defendants escape from liability to the plaintiffs by relying on this payment to M. L. Roy through Khitish and Probodh.

As regards this matter, it must be remembered that the delivery order was made in the name of the plaintiff firm: it was endorsed in the name of the plaintiff firm, though by the pen of M. L. Roy. The account was opened in the name of the plaintiff firm in the defendants' books in accordance with instructions from M. L. Roy or Khitish, as alleged by the defendants. M. L. Roy's name does not appear in the books, in the defendants' letter of 3rd July 1913 or in the statement of defence.

The defendants had known Khitish as a broker and M. L. Roy also as a broker, they had never heard the name of the plaintiffs' firm before this transaction.

No suggestion was ever made that the defendants regarded M. L. Roy as the owner of the goods until the trial of the case, and then what happened is described by the learned Judge as follows:—

"He stated in cross-examination that it was their custom to pay the persons who brought the delivery order signed, and that these persons received payment, and that with regard to the transaction in suit he understood it was the joint transaction of Khitish and Makhan, and that Khitish said, with reference to the transaction, that he was Makhan's underbroker, Makhan being the principal, and the witness said: 'My case is, that Makhan was the principal and Khitish the agent, and I had no concern with any one else.' I remark, with regard to this in passing, that no such case was made in the written statement, nor was it made until this suit had proceeded for sometime. I gather from Counsel for the defendants in this case that he does not rely on any such case, that is to say, that Makhan and Khitish were principals in the transaction."

Having regard to the evidence and the circumstances of this case, I cannot believe that the defendants ever regarded M. L. Roy as anything more than a broker, and Khitish as his underbroker; and I am convinced beyond all reasonable doubt that the only thing they cared about was that they had received the delivery order endorsed in blank from Khitish, and consequently they considered they were entitled to pay him and were fully discharged thereby.

The reliance on the payment to M. L. Roy was an afterthought; but in view of the evidence I think they had notice that the principals were the plaintiff firm and that M. L. Roy was broker, and if they wished to rely on the payment to M. L. Roy as a discharge, they should have proved either that the plaintiffs had given authority to M. L. Roy to receive the money or that the plaintiffs had so acted as to make the defendants believe that they had done so. This, in my opinion, they have failed to do.

I ought to mention that the learned Counsel for the appellants contended that if the plaintiffs' story as to the alleged contract was not accepted, the form of the action was wrong; but that he did not intend to take any technical objection on that ground.

The defendants had very considerable latitude in raising new points both in this Court and in the Court of First Instance, and I think that there are sufficient materials before us to enable us to come to a conclusion as to the rights of the parties upon the merits of the case, and in my judgment this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Muhammadan Law—Marriage—Divorce—Tafviz—Delegation of power of divorce to wife, validity of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 26, applicability of.

It is lawful for a Muhammadan husband to delegate to his wife power to divorce herself on certain conditions, e. g., on the husband marrying a second wife. [p. 804, col. 2; p. 805, col. 1.]

A provision in a dower-deed whereby a Muhammadan husband authorises his wife to divorce herself from him in the event of his marrying a second wife is not void under section 26 of the Contract Act. [p. 804, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether there would be any difference in the law according as the dower-deed was an anti-nuptial or post-nuptial contract.

Appeal against the following decree of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 4th January 1916, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2869 of 1914:—

This is an appeal against a decree dismissing a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The appellant is the husband. Shortly after his marriage he executed a kabinnamah. The case of the wife, which has been upheld by the decision of the lower Appellate Court, is that by the terms contained in this kabinnamah she had the right to divorce her husband on his marrying a second time and that she actually did divorce him by a registered deed. It was held in the case of Maharam Ali v. Ayesa Khatoon (1) by Woodroffe, J., and myself that a Muhammadan husband can lawfully delegate to his wife the power to divorce on the husband marrying a second wife. There is, therefore, nothing illegal in the terms of the kabinnamah in the present case, if it contains such a provision. The portions of the kabinnamah which are relevant on this point are paragraphs Nos 3, 9 and 10. The third paragraph provides that the husband shall not take any other wife. The ninth paragraph gives a general power of divorce; and the tenth paragraph states the circumstances under which that power of divorce can be exercised. After stating certain definite grounds such as insanity or impotence, the paragraph goes on to say: "if I break any one of the aforesaid conditions or a part of any such conditions, then you may on the strength of the authority given by me and referred to above release your body and take any other husband." It is contended that the expression "aforesaid conditions" means conditions specified in the first part of paragraph No. 10. To my mind there can be no doubt that the only reasonable interpretation that can be placed upon these words is the conditions mentioned in the previous paragraphs of the deed. It is contended that it was not the case of the wife when she executed the talaknamah that she was empowered to do so by anything mentioned in the tenth clause of the kabinnamah. The reference there is to the ninth clause. But, as I have stated, this ninth clause is one which gives the general power and it is not necessary to make any special reference to the tenth clause. It is clear from the talaknamah that the right to divorce is claimed under the general condition of the tenth clause read with the previous conditions of the kabinnamah. One of these conditions stated in the talaknamah is that mentioned in the third clause, namely, the taking of a second wife.

It is next urged on the authority of Sir A. Wilson's work on Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, at page 157, that as the wife did not exercise her right of divorce immediately she heard of the second marriage, her right to do so ceased to exist. It is evident that the passage relied on refers to a case in which the husband after marriage conferred on his wife the right to divorce him and it does not apply to the general permission to divorce given by a marriage contract. This was the view that was taken by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Ayatunnessa Beebee v. Karam Ali (2). The fact that in the present case the kabinnamah was actually executed a few months after the marriage does not make that ruling inapplicable. The kabinnamah formed the marriage contract, though it was actually reduced to writing and executed on a subsequent date. In my opinion, therefore, the lower Appellate Court is right in holding that the suit for restitution of conjugal rights must fail on the ground that there previously had been a valid divorce by the wife. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs."

Babu Manmatha Nath Mookerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould must be affirmed. We have been invited to hold that the right conferred on the wife by the dower-deed was not properly exercised, and considerable time elapsed between her knowledge of the second marriage of her husband and the institution of this suit. This point, however, was not taken in the Court of First Instance and there has consequently been no determination of two material questions of fact, viz., first, whether the dower-deed was an anti-nuptial or a post-nuptial contract; and secondly, when did the wife become aware of the second marriage of her husband. The sole question in controversy throughout has been whether valid authority to divorce was conferred upon the wife and whether she has exercised that authority in accordance with law. Upon that point, there can be no doubt that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge and confirmed by Mr. Justice Newbould is correct. The decision of this Court in the case of Maharam Ali v. Ayesa Khatoon (1) has not been challenged. That case is an authority for the proposition that a provision in a dower-deed whereby a Muhammadan husband authorises his wife to divorce herself from him in the event of his marrying a second wife, is not void under section 26 of the Contract Act; it is lawful for a Muhammadan husband to delegate to his wife power to divorce on certain conditions and the husband marrying a second wife is such a condition. It has been argued before us, however, that as in the deed of divorce the wife relied upon the ninth clause of the dower-deed, she is not now entitled to fall back upon the tenth clause. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. If she has authority conferred upon her under the dower-deed, it is really immaterial under which clause of the document she purports to act.

A refined argument was finally addressed to us as to the meaning and effect of the third clause which provides as follows:—"So long as you live I shall not and cannot take any other wife. If I take one, then to that wife (1, 2, 3 talaks) the divorce by three talaks would apply." It was argued that there could not be a breach of the condition not to take a second wife, as by virtue of this clause immediately upon the second marriage of the husband the second wife stood divorced. It is not necessary for us to decide whether this is the true effect of the second part of the clause or whether the second part merely emphasises the fact that the husband undertook not to take a second wife; for even if the interpretation put forward by the appellant be accepted as correct, it is clear that there could not be a divorce of the second wife till she had become a wife, and the moment she became a wife, there would be, on the part of the husband, breach of the condition not to take a second wife. We express no opinion upon the question whether such a covenant, according to the interpretation of the appellant, would be operative as against the second wife; nor do we decide the question raised before Mr. Justice Newbould, namely, whether there would be a difference in law in the relative positions of the parties according as the contract was post-nuptial or anti-nuptial.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Bombay Salt Act (II of 1890), s. 11—License to manufacture salt—Licensee taking partners to share in profits, legality of.

Where a licensee under section 11 of the Bombay Salt Act, who is prohibited, by the terms of his license, from sub-letting the whole or a part of the privilege, admits some members of his family and others as partners in the business to share the profits, the partners, however, not having any part in the manufacture of salt, the arrangement does not infringe the provisions either of the license or of section 11 of the Act. [p. 808, col. 1.]

The admission of partners to share in the profits cannot be considered as a sub-letting or alienation of a part of the privilege, unless there has been a document directly transferring to the partners or attempting to transfer to the partners a part of the right to manufacture or vend. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, J.—This suit was originally filed by four of the sons of Dossa Ebji against a fifth son and two other persons, praying that the defendants might be restrained by an injunction from excluding the plaintiffs from their share in the partnership in this suit, or, in the alternative, that the partnership might be dissolved from the date of the suit and the affairs thereof might be wound up under the directions of this Honourable Court.

The first plaintiff died after the suit was filed and his son has been added as the fourth defendant. The fourth plaintiff apparently had some disputes with his co-plaintiffs and his name was struck out from the record as plaintiff and added as the fifth defendant. The family to which the parties belong was joint and undivided, and for many years they had been carrying on business in salt. I need not go further back than 1909 when there was a family agreement, a part of which referred to a certain business in salt carried on at Bhaynder in which there were two outside partners, who are the second and the third defendants to this suit. The business was carried on in the name of Kessowji Dossa and the joint family had a share of eleven annas, the second defendant had a share of three annas and the third defendant two annas.

In 1911, Gordhandas, the son of Kessowji, separated from the family, and a fresh agreement was entered into by which it was arranged that out of the eleven-annas share of the joint family in the business of Kessowji Dossa, Gordhandas should have a four-annas share, and the other members who remained joint, a seven-annas share.

The business of manufacturing salt at Bhaynder was carried on under agreements with certain persons who held licenses from Government for long periods, and who are styled "Shilotries." Exhibit C is an example of one of these licenses, clause 5 of which is as follows:—

"That he, the licensee, shall not without the written permission of myself, i. e., (the Collector of Salt Revenue) or of my successor in office for the time being, sublet, sell, mortgage or otherwise alienate whole or in part the privilege granted by this license of manufacturing salt on the land within the aforesaid limits."

Whenever the licensee obtained permission to sublet, that was endorsed on the license in the following form:—

"The above-mentioned Shilotries have leased out the said salt works to Gordhandas Kessowji for five years from the date the 1st of June 1905 and, therefore, all the aforementioned conditions apply to him."

In the partnership agreements that I have referred to, executed in 1909 and 1911, nothing is said about the subletting or alienation of the rights which Gordhandas had obtained to manufacture salt; the only agreement is that the parties shall share in the profits of certain shops in certain proportions. It has now been argued by the first defendant's Counsel that these agreements of partnership were illegal and that, therefore, the plaintiffs cannot sue under them for a partnership account.

Under section 11 of Bombay Act II of 1890, no salt shall be manufactured and no natural salt and, except under the provisions of section 14, no salt-earth shall be excavated or collected or removed, otherwise than by the authority and subject to the terms and conditions of license to be granted by the Collector in this behalf. Section 47 provides a penalty for any one who, in contravention of the Act, or of any rule or order made under the Act, or of any license or permit obtained under the Act, manufactures, removes or transports salt, etc.

The only question is whether Gordhandas having admitted certain persons to share in the profits which he derived from the manufacture and sale of salt thereby sublet, sold, mortgaged or otherwise alienated whole or in part the privilege granted by the license for manufacturing salt on the land within the limits mentioned in the license.

In Gauri Shankar v. Mumtaz Ali Khan (1) the defendant had taken a lease for three years of a Government ferry and covenanted with the Magistrate, who granted the lease, not to underlet or assign the lease without the leave or license of the Magistrate and Mumtaz subsequently admitted another person as his partner to share with him the profits to be derived from the lease. It was held by the Full Bench that such partnership was not void by reason of the covenant not to underlet or assign the lease. Mr. Justice Oldfield, one of the referring Judges, was of opinion that the admission by the lessee of a partner to share the profits could not come within the meaning of the words "sub-lease" or "transfer" and Mr. Justice Pearson accepted this view in the final judgment.

It is not disputed that if Gordhandas had sublet or alienated the rights which he obtained from the Shilotries or had entered into any agreement with third parties, whereby he gave up entirely the management and control of the manufacture of salt under the license, that would have amounted to a breach of the condition.

CHAMPSEY DOSSA v. GORDHANDAS KESSOWJI.

In Ismailji Yusufali v. Raghunath Lachiram Marwadi (2) Yusufalli obtained from Government a lease of certain salt pans to manufacture salt under a license. One of the conditions of the lease was that the lessee should not sublet the salt pans without the written permission of the Collector. Without any such permission, however, Yusufalli sublet the salt pans to an outsider, who, as a security for the performance of the conditions of the sub-lease, deposited a sum of Rs. 1,000 with Yusufalli. On the expiration of the term, a suit was brought for the recovery of the deposit from the representative of Yusufalli, who denied the right to recover the deposit on the ground that it formed a consideration for an agreement which had been forbidden by law and was illegal. The defendant's plea prevailed and the suit was dismissed. The Court held that the real and necessary effect of the sub-lease was to enable the plaintiff to manufacture salt without a license in the guise of a sub-lease, although that was forbidden by law and by the terms of the license. The question was not discussed there whether the Court will distinguish between Acts relating to public policy and Acts passed for the protection only of the Revenue. Although under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act, the consideration or object of an agreement is unlawful, if it is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law, it must be noted that the Courts in India seem to recognise the distinction which has been drawn by the Courts in England between Acts the object of which is to impose conditions in order to maintain the public order or safety or the protection of the persons dealing with those on whom the conditions are imposed, and Acts in which conditions are imposed merely for administrative purposes, for example, the convenient collection of revenue: see Brown v. Duncan (3). But in the view I take of this case, it is not necessary to deal with that question.

In Karsan Sadashiv Patil v. Gatlu Shivaji Pctil (4) the first defendant had obtained a license under the Abkari Act to sell country liquor. One of the conditions of the license was that the licensee should not sell, transfer to another person, or sub let his right to sell country liquor obtained under the license and he should not enter into any kabuliyat for the exercise of the said right, which, in the opinion of the Collector, is in the nature of a sub-lease. After obtaining the license, the defendant admitted a partner into the business, who afterwards brought a suit for an account of what was due on the partnership. A question having arisen as to whether the contract for partnership was forbidden by law and opposed to the policy and general tenor of the Act and, therefore, not enforceable in a Court of Law, it was held that the omission in the license sanctioned by Government in the year 1903 of all reference to the question of sub-letting a part of the right to vend or of admitting persons into the business only pointed to the inference that the Abkari authorities had decided not to prohibit the taking up of other persons into partnership in the profits derived from the selling of liquor under an Abkari license.

There is no doubt that in the license in that case there seems to have been no prohibition against sub-letting a part of the right to vend; and by the conditions of the license in this case, the licensee is prohibited from sub-letting the whole or a part of the privilege, but I do not think that any importance ought to be attached to that condition. The admission of partners to share in the profits cannot be considered as a sub-letting or alienation of a part of the privilege, unless there has been a document directly transferring to the partners or attempting to transfer to the partners a part of the right to manufacture or vend.

Mr. Inverarity was prepared to call evidence to prove that the licensees for the manufacture of salt have almost invariably had partners who provided capital for the undertaking and shared in the profits, and that the salt authorities were perfectly aware of this practice and had never raised any objection to it. Certainly, as far as this family is concerned, they have been dealing in salt for a very large number of years and sharing in the profits, although the license was in the name of only one of their number. But even if the authorities did not object to that, it might still be said that that would not prevent the admission of partners being illegal if that was the law. In so far as I conceded that that would be a correct argument, no useful purpose would be served by calling this evidence, whatever the attitude of the authorities may be. I prefer to decide the case, as far as I am concerned, on what I consider a far better ground, that the agreements of 1909 and 1911 do not infringe the conditions imposed upon Gordhandas by the various licenses which he held for the manufacture of salt. The evidence shows, apart from that, that Gordhandas was the man who actually superintended the manufacture of salt; Dayabhai and Ranchhoddas lived at Bhaynder and worked at the shop, keeping the accounts, arranging for the weighing and the selling of salt, while the other partners were in Bombay receiving the sale proceeds from Bhaynder, mostly daily, paying the customs duties and doing other business necessitated by the work of the partnership. Therefore, none of the partners except Gordhandas had any part in the manufacture of salt and, therefore, it cannot be said that the effect of those agreements was to infringe the provisions either of the licenses or of section 11 of Act II of 1890. Therefore, the first defendant is not entitled to exclude, or rather was not entitled to exclude, his partners from sharing in the profits in the business, and there must be a dissolution of the partnership and accounts taken not, I think, from the date of the suit, but from the time the partnership came to an end in September 1915 under the agreement.

Certain issues were raised by the third defendant. The first was whether the suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. So far as the claim with regard to the six padavas is concerned, his contention was a good one and, therefore, it has been excluded from this suit. The first defendant admits that the six padavas belong to the plaintiffs, but he claims a lien on them until his share in some other property has been ascertained. However, I have nothing to do with that question now in this suit.

The other issue was whether this Court had jurisdiction to try the suit as regards the cause of action relating to the third defendant. The grounds for questioning the jurisdiction of the Court were that the third defendant did not sign the agreement, that he lived at Bhaynder and the business was carried on at Bhaynder. As a matter of fact, the agreement was signed in Bombay and the third defendant was present and attested it. As the agreement referred to other matters concerning the family, the outsider partners in the Bhaynder salt business did not execute it, but there is no doubt that the third defendant agreed to the terms in Bombay and that the agreement was made in Bombay and a part of the business was carried on in Bombay; and, therefore, with leave, this Court has jurisdiction to try the suit with regard to the third defendant.

On the issues Nos. 6 and 7, which were raised for the plaintiffs, and related to a certain lease obtained by Gordhandas, which was to run for five years from the 30th June 1915, it is admitted by the first defendant by his Counsel that if the partnership was a good one, the partners would be entitled to the benefits of that lease and, therefore, the profits derived under the lease must go into the partnership accounts.

There will be a reference to the Commissioner to take account for the partnership on the basis of my findings.

Costs.—Plaintiffs' costs will be paid out of the assets. The first defendant must pay the plaintiffs' costs of issue No. 1 and his own costs of that issue. The remainder of his costs will be paid out of the assets.

The third defendant must pay plaintiffs' costs of issue No. 5 and his own costs of that issue.

Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 will be paid one set of costs between them (out of the assets).

Mr. Setalvad asks for directions of the Court about one existing lease which will run up to 1920.

Mr. Inverarity replies no order can be made until the Shilotri and the Collector are communicated with.

Order.—I make an order for sale by the Commissioner of the interest of the defendant under the lease referred to. There is no doubt that the consent of the Shilotri and the Salt Collector will have to be obtained so that the purchaser can obtain a good title. I have no doubt that the Shilotri and the Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 23rd August 1915.

Mr. Ganesh Dutta Singh, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—These appeals are appeals by the plaintiff and defendant respectively in a suit brought upon the footing of a mortgage-bond dated the 27th of July 1893, the due date of payment being the 1st of Bhadra 1301 which corresponds to 15th September 1894. Limitation is claimed to be saved by payments made of Rs. 2,452 on the 6th August 1898 and of Rs. 800 on the 29th of May 1909. The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted the proofs given of these payments and has decreed the plaintiff's suit, but in decreeing the suit has refused to give interest at the bond rate beyond the date of re-payment and has confined the interest to six years' interest at 6 per cent. per annum, upon the ground that the bond is silent as to the interest to be paid after the date of re-payment.

On behalf of the defendant it is contended, firstly, that the learned Subordinate Judge was in error in accepting the payment of Rs. 800. The payment of Rs. 2,452 is not denied. And secondly, it is argued that if the payment of Rs. 800 was made, it was made by one Bacha Singh who was not the lawful guardian of the defendant, who was a minor at the time of the payment.

On the first point we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the evidence of this payment is overwhelming. There is no reason whatsoever for stigmatising the witness Deoki Nandan Singh as a perjurer. He is a respectable gentleman paying Rs. 157 income-tax and there can be no reason why he should lend himself first of all to the support of a deliberate forgery of the endorsement, and secondly to actual participation in the forgery of the letter Exhibit 7, which is an intimation to him that Rs. 800 out of the bond money has been paid. This letter is dated the 29th of May 1909, the day after the payment. We see no reason whatsoever for disagreeing with the learned Judge's finding of fact.

With regard to the position of Bacha Singh there is very little on the record. It is admitted that he was the nearest male cognate of the minor and that there were no male agnates living. It is shown that in another suit he was nominated by the Court to act as guardian of the minor and it is admitted that in all the mutation proceedings which were necessitated by the death of the minor's father Bacha Singh acted for him and it is proved that in the GITA PROSAD SINGH v. RAGHO SINGH.

Record of Rights prepared upon a Cadas-tral Survey, Bacha Singh was entered in the khewat as the guardian of the minor. He was undoubtedly the de facto guardian and there is nothing tangible on the record to show that he was not the lawful guardian. The payment made by him clearly avoided the immediate bringing of a suit against the minor and there is no reason to suppose that the payment was not made for the minor's benefit. We hold that the appellant was rightly made liable under the bond.

With regard to the contention that interest should have been given at the stipulated rate from the date of the bond up to the date of realisation, the decision of the Judicial Committee reported as Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1) has been quoted as authority for the proposition that the bond before us intended that interest should run after the date of re-payment. We have searched the document in vain for any such indication. Not one word anywhere is said with regard to payment of interest after the due date and the case seems to us to be indistinguishable from the case of Chajmal Das v. Birj Bhukan Lal (2) decided by the Judicial Committee in the defendant's favour. We hold that there being no stipulation for payment after due date, interest can be given only up to the date of payment and following the line of decisions beginning from the case of Golam Abbas v. Mahomed Jaffer (3) we must hold that the six years' rule of limitation applies and that interest can be given only as damages for recurring breaches of the contract to re-pay for the period of six years prior to the date of suit.

Mr. Pugh advances an ingenious argument that if under the Interest Act a Court is entitled to decree interest by way of damages the creditor, whenever a payment is to be made, is entitled to regard the sum which the Court would have decreed, as interest, and to take any part of the sum re-paid as such interest. We do not think that the Interest Act can be stretched to this point. Where a document is silent with regard to interest and where there is no special mention of interest at a particular rate or of a particular sum handed over to the creditor, we must take it that the intention of the parties was, in making re-payment, to pay only the interest actually due under the written instrument.

In this case the only interest due under the written instrument on the first date of payment, the 6th of August 1898, was Rs. 395-8-0 and there is nothing in the endorsement recording this re-payment to suggest that there was any intention to pay a larger sum of interest than this.

With regard to the second payment of Rs. 800 the position is more difficult, for there is a distinct statement made by the guardian when making the re-payment that the repayment was intended to be made as a payment of interest. Under the written instrument no interest was due between the 6th August 1898 and 25th September 1909; if, therefore, no interest was due, no interest could be paid, and if no interest could be paid the present suit would be barred by limitation. That it was the intention of the parties to pay this sum of Rs. 800 as interest is clear, otherwise the creditor's right to sue would have lapsed and the receipt of Rs. 800 would not be of such value to the creditor as to warrant his acceptance of it as part payment of principal. We must take it, therefore, that this Rs. 800 was intended to wipe out all interest equitably due from the 6th August 1898 up to 29th of May 1909. Interest under the Interest Act will accrue from the 25th of September 1909 up to the date of realisation, the payment of Rs. 800 on the 29th of May 1909 being within six years of the institution of the suit. Interest should also run during the prosecution of the suit up to the date of realisation.

The account, therefore, must be amended and a decree must be made for Rs. 1,831-12-0 due on the 29th of May 1909 plus interest at 6 per cent. from that date up to the date of realisation. Failing payment of that sum within three months of this Court's decree the mortgaged property will be put up for sale. The plaintiff is entitled to costs Rs. 1,831-12-0 plus interest to the date of suit in the lower Court. In appeal each side will bear its own costs.

Appeal accepted in part.

—COUNTER-PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Madras Court of Wards Act (I of 1902), ss. 37, 38, 41—Scope of s. 41—“Shall not be paid before other pecuniary claims”, meaning of—Omission to notify under s. 41, effect of—Notification by part owner of entire claim under s. 37, whether can be availed of by other part owner—Interpretation of Statute.

A person having pecuniary claims against an estate under the management of the Court of Wards must himself notify the same to the Collector and cannot rely upon a notification made by a person having an interest only in a part of that claim. [p. 812, col. 1.]

Section 37 of the Court of Wards Act does not recognize the notification of a claim by any person except the claimant or a person empowered by him. [p. 812, col. 1.]

The cessation of interest under section 41 continues even after the release of the estate to the ward, unless the same is subsequently revived by act of parties. [p. 815, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The language of section 41 of the Court of Wards Act, when interpreted with reference to other sections of the Act, makes it perfectly clear that the tenure of the Court of Wards Act is intended to affect the estate permanently, not only directly in respect of debts actually discharged, but in certain circumstances indirectly by reducing the amount of debts still due when the Court's tenure ends. [p. 812, col. 2.]

Depuru Kalappa Reddi v. Umade Rajha, 8 Ind. Cas. 392; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 75; 8 M. L. T. 297, followed.

Section 41 has the effect of postponing unnotified debts to those notified under section 38 (1) of the Act, even after the estate has been released from the Court of Wards and handed over to the zemindar. [p. 813, col. 2; p. 814, col. 1.]

A construction which makes a certain provision of an Act superfluous is not legitimate when another construction explaining the insertion of the provision is easily available. [p. 813, col. 1.]

Per Krishnan, J., (dissenting).—Section 41 of the Court of Wards Act cannot possibly continue to apply to an estate which has been freed from the control of the Court of Wards and to which the Act itself has ceased to apply. The question whether the disabilities once imposed on any particular creditor by the application of the section continue to have effect even after such application has ceased, depends upon the character of the disability, whether it is necessarily of a permanent character or is only of a temporary one. [p. 814, col. 2; p. 815, col. 1.]

The words “shall not be paid until after the discharge or satisfaction of the claims notified or admitted under section 38” in section 41 of the Act merely prescribe an order of priority to be followed in payment of certain debts but does not put an end to them; such an order can be availed of when the payment is made or demanded, only if it is in force at the time. It is worded in the form of an injunction not to pay until a certain thing is done and like other injunctions it can have effect only when it is in force, it has not any permanent effect. [p. 815, cols. 1 & 2.]

The term “ward”, wherever it occurs in the Court of Wards Act, is not applied to a person who was once a ward, but has ceased to be so. [p. 815, col. 2.]

A joint undivided Hindu family, one member of which was an insolvent, had as one of the assets of the family a mortgage-decree for a lakh of rupees against an estate under the management of the Court of Wards. One-twenty-fourth part of the decree debt passed to another person by assignment. He notified his claim to the Collector under section 41 of the Court of Wards Act but the holder of the mortgage-decree failed to notify his claim. The estate ceased to be under the management of the Court of Wards and the mortgaged villages were subsequently sold at the instance of a money-decree-holder and there were surplus sale-proceeds. The Official Assignee on behalf of the insolvent applied for execution of the mortgage-decree and for payment of the surplus sale-proceeds in execution of the mortgage-decree:

Held, (Krishnan, J., dissenting), that the omission to notify the mortgage-debt had not merely the effect of making the interest cease altogether, but also entirely postponed the payment of the debt until the other creditors who had notified their claims had been satisfied. [p. 813, col. 2; p. 814, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of North Arcot, dated the 4th December 1911, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 48 of 1911, in Execution Petition No. 132 of 1905, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1894.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—This appeal relates to the execution of a decree against respondent, a minor zemindar. Appellant, the Official Assignee, is executing as Receiver in a partition suit of the property of a family of which the decree forms part. The question is whether section 41, Act I of 1902, debars him from executing at present and including certain interest in the amount claimed, inasmuch as the respondent's estate came under the Court of Wards in 1907, and, a notification under section 37 (1) having been duly published, this claim was not notified to the Collector. It is not disputed that, if respondent can plead section 41, he must succeed.

Two answers to this plea have been attempted, which were not suggested in the lower Court. Firstly, it is alleged that Gopaul Row, 3rd defendant in the partition suit above referred to, duly notified his claim in respect of his decree and that appellant is entitled to rely on that notification. Its terms, however, are not before us and they may have covered only Gopaul Row's share. But, if they were comprehensive, it is still the case that section 37 does not recognise the notification of a claim by any person except the claimant or, of course, a person empowered by him; and it is not shown how Gopaul Row was so empowered. Secondly, it is urged that appellant was absolved from any obligation to notify because although he was known to the Collector to have a claim, the notice required by section 37 (2) was never sent to him. It is sufficient that, if the Collector can be presumed to have known of the claim, because (as appears from Exhibit II) it was made during a previous tenure by the Court of Wards of the same estate, he must be presumed to have complied with the law and sent notice in respect of it. The question whether he did so or not, one of fact, was not raised in the lower Court, and cannot be raised for the first time here.

Appellant, however, has relied mainly on the argument that section 41 cannot be applied to postpone or reduce the amount of respondent's liability, after the management by the Court of Wards has ceased. This is urged on the grounds that the contrary view is not supported by the language of the section, is inconsistent with the proviso to section 40, would render the ward's position, after he receives back the estate, anomalous, and is not entailed by the policy of the Act. It is further urged that Depuru Kalappa Reddi v. Umade Rajaha (1) on which the lower Court relied was decided wrongly. As the present case has been argued fully, I give my reasons for concurring in that decision at length.

The language of section 41 is, as observed by the learned Judges in the case just referred to, absolute, subject to one qualification to be specified later. The proviso to section 40 merely preserves the claimant's right to have recourse to the Civil Court to enforce notified claims, which the Court of Wards has allowed or disallowed, and does not affect the unnotified claims, to which alone section 41 applies. The anomalous result alleged to follow from the application of the latter section, as entailing a permanent deprivation of interest and postponement, is, that the ward on majority would be compellable to pay notified before unnotified creditors. But it has not been shown how it would be difficult for him to do so or for Courts to enforce his obligation, though the decision as to the form of remedy available to a notified creditor, who has been prejudiced by payments to postponed creditors, may be determined with regard to the circumstances of the case, when it arises. Lastly, it is urged that the policy of the Act is to ease the estate only during the tenure by the Court of Wards, not to reduce its debts permanently. But we have been shown no legitimate reason for holding that the latter was not the object of the Legislature; and the only method of interpretation clearly permissible in the circumstances, reference to the other provisions of the Act, shows that the tenure of the Court of Wards was intended to affect the estate permanently, not only directly in respect of debts actually discharged, but in certain circumstances indirectly, by reducing the amounts of debts still due, when the Court's tenure ended.

Section 37 (1) provides for the notification of all claims, both those which are and those which are not immediately enforceable without distinction as regards the latter between those which will and those which will not mature before the ward's majority in cases in which it will terminate the Court's tenure; and the wording of section 40 and, as has been already observed, section 41 includes nothing respecting its application to the former class. So also, as regards section 42, in which moreover the reference, not only to the ward but also to his representative, justifies affirmative argument. Sections 43 and 44 relate to the determination by the Collector on behalf of the Court of Wards of possession under mortgages and leases and provide for a right of suit in the Civil Courts and in the one case for discharge of the mortgage as though it were not one with possession, in the other, for revision of the terms of the lease. But it is noticeable that there is no such general provision, as the appellant's argument requires, for a revival of the original mortgage or for a return to the original rate of rent or a restoration to possession, when dispossession has taken place. Sections 43 and 44 are accordingly consistent with respondent's argument and sections 37 (1) and 42 support it affirmatively.

Section 55 is, it is argued, not directly applicable to the case of respondent; and it has accordingly been referred to only as supporting inferences regarding the meaning of other provisions. The material portion of it is clause 3, which negatives the application of sections 41, 42 to debts unpaid, when the estate is restored to the proprietor under this section. The appellant is constrained to represent this provision as actually superfluous and introduced only to meet possible doubts in the particular cases, with which the section deals. But such a construction is not legitimate, when, as here, another is easily available, by which the insertion of the clause can be explained; that is, as specifying an exception to the general rule. That an exception is intended is particularly clear from the mention in clause 2, not only of section 41, but also of section 42, the wording of which has already been referred to as inconsistent with appellant's argument. Clause 2 of section 55 affords another instance of special provision for cases covered by the section on a matter, regarding which a general provision could easily have been made, but, as already pointed out, has been omitted, the restoration to possession of encumbrancers dispossessed under section 43 and still unpaid; and here again the point is clear, since, if the termination of the Court of Wards' management involved, as appellant contends, the complete restoration of all creditors to their original rights, the clause would not have applied the same treatment to all cases, including those in which the mortgagee is paid off under section 43 (5) otherwise than in accordance with the terms of his mortgage. Reference to section 55, therefore, confirms the conclusion that, subject to one exception not material in this case, section 41 is intended to have general and permanent effect.

In conclusion, I refer shortly to the considerations, which, I understand, have impressed my learned brother. There is first the view that Chapter 5, in which section 41 occurs, deals exclusively with ascertainment and settlement of debts by the Collector, that the use of the word "Ward" in the section limits its application to the ascertainment of liabilities during the Court of Wards' tenure and that a distinction is to be drawn between the provisions for cessation of interest and for postponement, the one being of permanent, the other only of temporary effect. As regards the contents of Chapter 5, the heading, on which my learned brother relies and which runs "ascertainment and settlement of debts", is to my mind with all respect perfectly general; and the sections, particularly 37 (1) and 42, are as already shown irreconcilable with his conclusion. The word "Ward" in section 41 is appropriately used without qualification, because it is connected with claims unnotified and not admitted during the continuance of the guardianship. The distinction proposed between the two provisions in the section is not supported by anything in its wording and does not, in my opinion, follow necessarily from anything in the parties' position. It may be that, as my learned brother says, the zemindar's claim to postpone payment of a particular debt has no merits apart from the Act and that the object of section 41 is merely to induce creditors to come forward promptly. But, when it is conceded that the inducement has taken the form of a penal interference with the rights of those who delay, discussion of the policy of the Act and its effect in individual cases is irrelevant; and the assumption of a particular limit to such interference is, in the face of the general wording, inadmissible.

The other objection calling for notice is that, appellant's lien on the fund in Court being in no way affected by the Act, it can serve no useful purpose to put off payment to him from it, since he will be entitled to be paid from it eventually. But if, as I think, the foregoing represents the correct view of the effect of section 41 (and notice may be invited particularly to the words in it "notwithstanding any contract to the contrary"), appellant's lien is affected by the Act, and he can be paid only after the notified creditors, to whom he is postponed, have been satisfied. It is not alleged that they have been; and in fact no argument in this form seems to have been attempted before the lower Court.

In these circumstances, I would follow Depuru Kalappa Reddi v. Umade Rajaha (1) and confirm the lower Court's decision dismissing the appeal with costs.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—The facts of this case may be briefly stated as follows:—One V. Krishna-swami Rao became an insolvent and his estate vested in the Official Assignee of Madras. He was a member of a joint Hindu family of four persons. One of the assets of the family was a mortgage decree for a lakh of rupees against the zemindar of Karvetnagar, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1894. The Official Assignee brought a Civil Suit No. 116 of 1897 for partition and got himself appointed as Receiver to execute the mortgage decree. But before this was done, an one-twenty-fourth share in the decree had passed to a person not a party to the partition suit or the order in it. This share finally passed to one Srinivasaraghavachari. The Court of Wards had taken charge of the Karvetnagar Estate in 1899, the then zemindar having been declared a Ward. That management continued up to 1905 when the estate was released as the zemindar died. The Official Assignee filed Execution Petition No. 132 of 1905 for executing the mortgage-decree. The minor zemindar who had succeeded to the estate was also declared a Ward of the Court of Wards, who assumed management again in August 1907 before the execution was carried out. That management continued till January 1910, when the estate was released under the discretionary power given to do so under the first part of section 54. The usual notification was published by the Collector under section 37 (1) in February 1908 calling upon all creditors to notify their debts, and a special notice was apparently sent to the Official Assignee. For some reason not apparent, the Official Assignee failed to notify his mortgage decree debt. In December 1911 the District Court held that under section 41 of the Act the claim of the Official Assignee to execute his decree should be postponed until after discharge or satisfaction of the claims of creditors notified or admitted under section 38 and that interest should cease from August 1908, that is, at the expiry of six months from the date of notification under section 37 (1). Against this order the present appeal was filed in this Court by the Official Assignee and two others. It was once dismissed for default but, on good cause being shown, was restored.

In the meanwhile Srinivasaraghavachari above mentioned, assignee of one-twenty-fourth share in the decree, applied for execution. His application was allowed as he had properly notified his claim under section 38. In execution the mortgaged property was sold in April 1916, and purchased by one Mr. Muthia Chetty, a stranger, and we are informed that the money is in Court.

The decree in Original Suit No. 7 of 1894 having been fully executed, the prayer in the Execution Petition No. 132 of 1905 under appeal to sell the mortgaged properties can no longer be granted; but it is argued that the money in Court, the balance of sale-proceeds of the property available for the Official Assignee, if any, should be paid out.

The main argument addressed to us had reference to the meaning and applicability of section 41 of the Act. Two minor points were argued which are dealt with by my learned brother in his judgment in paragraph 2, and I entirely agree with his view. As regards section 41, the appellant contends that its application and effect cease as soon as the estate is released from the control of the Court of Wards under section 54 of the Act; the respondent maintains the contrary. The section cannot possibly continue to apply to an estate which has been freed from the control of the Court of Wards and to which the Act itself has ceased to apply. The real question for decision is, as I apprehend it, whether the disabilities imposed on any particular creditor by the application of the section once continue to have effect even after such application has ceased. This, to my mind, depends on the character of the disability imposed, that is, whether it is necessarily of a permanent character or is only of a temporary one. As regards the cessation of interest, I am prepared to agree that the language in the section makes interest cease altogether; and, therefore, unless such interest is revived after the section ceases to apply, either by law or by act of parties, its cessation continues in effect. I have said "by act of parties", as in my view there is nothing in the section or elsewhere to prevent the zemindar from entering into a fresh contract to pay interest for proper consideration after he is freed from the control of the Court of Wards. There is no law which has the effect of reviving interest except section 55 (3) which, however, does not apply to the present case as the estate was not released under clause 1; and no act of parties has been referred to as having that effect. I, therefore, agree that interest was rightly disallowed to the appellants from 28th August 1908 when the six months under section 37 expired.

With all respect to my learned brother I am unable to take the same view as he does, regarding the effect of the second part of section 41. It directs that unnotified pecuniary claims against the ward or his property shall not be paid till after the discharge or satisfaction of the notified claims. To adopt the view that has found favour with my learned brother leads in certain cases to the very drastic result of extinguishment of the security and the debt of a secured creditor. I find it difficult to persuade myself that the Legislature intended to attach such a serious penalty to the mere omission to notify a debt. Of course if the result is clear on the language of the section, we must accept it, but I do not think the words of the section necessitate or justify such a construction as penal sections should be strictly construed consistently with the language used. It seems to me the words above mentioned merely prescribe an order of priority to be followed in payment of certain debts but do not put an end to them; such an order, it seems to me, can be availed of, when payment is made or demanded, only if it is in force at the time. It is worded in the form of an injunction not to pay until a certain thing is done and like other injunctions it can have effect only when it is in force; it is difficult to see how it can have any after-effects. It does not, from its nature, appear to me to have a permanent effect. The fact that at one time a particular rule of priority applied to certain debts does not carry with it the result that the same rule should always be applied unless changed. It will, therefore, follow that this rule of priority unlike the rule as to cessation of interest ceases to have effect as soon as the section ceases to apply.

The wording of the section, instead of being against this view, rather supports it, as it refers to pecuniary claims against the ward or his property. It is difficult to contend that the debt due by a zemindar, after he has entirely ceased to be a ward, can be described as a claim against a ward. I think the use of the term "ward" in the section is very significant and is a clue to its construction; and that it shows that the last portion of the section only applied to debts due by persons who are wards. A reference to the various sections where the term 'ward' is used shows that it is not applied to a person who was once a ward but has ceased to be so.

I am inclined to think that the section, while it imposes certain disqualifications on unnotified creditors for the purpose of inducing all creditors to notify their claims to the Collector in time, really prescribes a rule to be followed by the Collector when he pays the debts according to section 32, clause 2. The wording of the section seems to imply that unnotified debts will also be paid though only after the notified ones; that would indicate that the rule is connected with some method of payment and the only method provided is the one under section 32 of the Act. There is no method provided by which an unnotified creditor can compel the zemindar after release of his estate to pay all the notified debts so that he may claim payment of his debt in turn; thus if the latter part of section 41 is to have the effect after the estate is released, a zemindar can effectively prevent the unnotified creditors from realising their debts at all by simply keeping undischarged a single notified debt; this is a result that can hardly be looked upon as reasonable.

It may also be pointed out, though perhaps much stress cannot be laid on it, that the section occurs in a chapter which deals, according to its head-note, with "ascertainment and settlement of debts" under the Act; i. e., by the Collector. Section 41 would seem to come under the description "settlement of debts" and it would thus be by the Collector.

I shall now examine the arguments against the view set forth above. It is first urged that the question is covered by the authority of the case of Depuru Kalappa Reddi v. Umad Rajaha (1). That decision states that the provisions of section 41 are absolute. Though the weight of its authority is great as the learned Chief Justice was a party to it, it is difficult to understand what exactly the learned Judges meant by the statement above mentioned and why they said it, as there is no discussion of the question of the meaning of section 41 in their judgment. The District Judge had held, in the order appealed against, that the section did not apply at all to decrees which were being executed in Civil Courts and that was the view that was reversed. It is not clear whether the question of postponement of payment even after the release of the estate was really argued or considered by their Lordships. The argument based on section 55, clause 3, that the reference in it to section 41 would become superfluous in the view I have taken is not valid, as it is quite necessary to revive the agreement as to interest which is abrogated by that section, as I have pointed out above.

It is also quite true, as my learned brother has pointed out, that the tenure of an estate under the Court of Wards thus permanently affects it in many ways and that the creditors are not restored to all their original rights on the termination of that management. But with all respect, it seems to me that the question at issue cannot be decided on such considerations but must depend on the language of section 41 and its meaning.

I think it is legitimate to examine the result of a particular construction of a section to see whether it should be adopted where the meaning is not clear. If we look at the result of holding that the prohibition in section 41 continues even when the estate is in the hands of the zemindar, we will find that no advantage accrues to any one but merely injury is caused to secured creditors like the appellants by loss of interest. It is quite clear to my mind that section 41 cannot be construed to extinguish any security or any debt; a penal section cannot be given such an extended meaning by implication. There is no provision in the Act pointed out which affects the appellants' lien on the money in Court and it must, therefore, be paid out to them sooner or later. So far as I can see, neither the zemindar nor any of the other creditors who have no lien on that money can touch it. The property mortgaged having been already sold, the mere postponement of payment to appellants is thus, as I said, utterly purposeless except to harm them. I think we should be slow to pass an order which has this effect. I am entirely unable to agree that section 41 has itself the effect of destroying the lien of secured creditors when there are no words in it to that effect.

I hold that it is not open to the zemindar to plead, now that he and his estate have been released from the control of the Court of Wards, that the appellants' claim should be postponed till after his notified creditors have been paid. I do so, however, with hesitation as my learned brother takes a different view, but I feel we should not extend the penal character of section 41 too much by our construction. I would reverse the order of the lower Court and remand the execution petition for a fresh disposal and direct costs to abide and follow the result. But as my learned brother agrees with the order of the lower Court, his judgment must prevail.

An attachment before judgment is not an injunction or order staying execution within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act, no matter whether the subject-matter of the attachment is a decree or any other property. [p. 818, col. 2.]

The form of execution by setting off cross-decrees is given in the Code of Civil Procedure and no equitable considerations can add to or detract from the provisions of the Statute. Therefore, a Statute-barred decree in favour of the judgment-debtor cannot be set off against a decree sought to be executed against him. [p. 818, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 24th July 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Satkania, dated the 16th January 1915.

FACTS.—The only question involved in Appeal No. 507 was whether the execution of the decree was barred by limitation. The respondent to this appeal objected to the execution on the ground that it was time-barred. The decree in question was dated the 13th February 1909 and the application for execution was made on the 12th August 1914. The decree-holder's case was that as the decree could not be executed for its having been attached by three separate orders, he was entitled to the benefit of section 15 of the Limitation Act. The Munsif held that section 15 of the Limitation Act applied to the case and saved the decree from being time-barred; and he accordingly disallowed the objection of the judgment-debtor. On an appeal preferred by the judgment-debtor the District Judge held that as Order XXI, rule 53, clause 2, Civil Procedure Code, permits the execution of an attached decree, the attachment of the decree in question was not an injunction or order within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act, and he allowed the appeal holding that the decree was barred by limitation. Against this decision of the District Judge the present appeal was preferred to the High Court.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant in No. 507 of 1915.—The application for execution is not time-barred as the facts of the case show. The decree sought to be executed was already attached by three separate orders. One of the attachment orders was withdrawn on 29th June 1914, and the decree-holder applied for execution on the 12th August 1914. The attachment prevented the decree-holder from proceeding to execute the decree. So it operated as an injunction within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act. It was impossible for the decree-holder to execute the decree when it was under attachment. The case reported as Beti Maharani v. Collector of Etawah (1) is not applicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case.

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen, for the Respondent, in No. 507 of 1915.—Section 15 of the Limitation Act does not cover a case like this. The order of attachment of the decree cannot operate as an injunction or order staying execution within the meaning of section 15 of the Act. This is now well established as the cases reported as Shib Singh v. Sita Ram (2) and Beti Maharani v. Collector of Etawah (1) show. An order of attachment of a decree does not prevent the decree-holder or judgment-debtor from executing the decree. Order XXI, rule 53 (b) (ii), allows the holder of a decree or the judgment-debtor to apply for execution of the attached decree. The words "or his judgment-debtor" in Order XXI, rule 53 (b) (ii), did not occur in the old Code and they are inserted in the new Code to give effect to the observations of Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., in the case reported as Adhar Chandra Dass v. Lal Mohun Das (3). I rely upon those words. The decree-holder-appellant who was the judgment-debtor of the decree

JUDGMENT.

IN No. 443 of 1915.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Noakhali, reversing the order of the Munsif of the 2nd Court at Sudharam. The admitted facts are as follows:—The respondent to this appeal on the 5th of November 1908 obtained a decree absolute for Rs. 847 in a mortgage suit against the appellant. The appellant having instituted a suit against the respondent attached this decree before judgment on the 7th of April 1909. On the 30th September 1909, the appellant obtained a decree against the respondent for Rs. 851. On the 7th of September 1910, the appellant applied that both decrees should be set off one against the other but this application was on the 26th of January 1911 rejected as premature. The appellant applied on the 20th November 1913 for execution of his decree.

The learned District Judge held that the decree of the respondent was barred by limitation but it was equitable to allow the respondent to set off his Statute-barred decree against the appellant's decree. Two points were urged on the appeal before us, first, was the execution of the respondent's decree stayed by an injunction or order within the meaning of section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act and secondly, if not, is the respondent entitled to set off his Statute-barred decree against the decree of the appellant.

(4) 4 C. 877; 3 C. L. R. 161; 4 Ind. Jur. 236; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 555.

(5) 6 C. W. N. 735.

It is well established that an attachment before judgment is not an injunction or order within the meaning of section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act [Beti Maharani v. Collector of Etawah (1)].

It is said, however, that different considerations arise when the subject-matter of the attachment is a decree. But this is clearly not so as Order XXI, rule 53 (1) (b) (ii), clearly authorises the creditor who has attached the decree or his judgment-debtor to proceed to execute the attached decree. It is said that the forms in the Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure support a different view. But even if that were so, the forms cannot control the clear words of the Statute itself. The respondent then argued that the fact of the attachment being before judgment made a difference but the terms of the rules of Order XXXVIII do not support the argument.

On the second point, reliance was placed on decisions of this Court where on equitable grounds a defendant in a suit has been allowed to set off a Statute-barred debt against the claim of a plaintiff. Those considerations cannot, I think, apply in execution of cross-decrees. This form of execution is given by the Code of Civil Procedure and no equitable considerations can add to or detract from the provisions of the Statute. In my opinion the order of the learned District Judge should be set aside and the order of the Munsif restored with costs both here and in the Courts below. We assess the hearing fee at Rs. 25.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

IN No. 507 of 1915.

The same points are involved in this appeal as in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 448 of 1915 which has just now been disposed of by us, except that the learned District Judge did not allow the barred decree to be set off against the decree for which execution was applied for.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at Rs. 25.

AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Rent payable partly in money and partly in paddy—Tenant, right of, to pay price of paddy—Construction of kabuliyat—Speculation, whether permissible.

Where a tenant agreed by a kabuliyat to pay rent partly in money and partly in paddy and on his failure to deliver the paddy, to pay a certain sum as the price thereof:

Held, that the kabuliyat gave a right to the tenant to pay rent partly in money and partly in paddy if he liked and if he did not like to deliver paddy, he could pay the rent altogether in money by paying the amount mentioned as its price; but that he was not liable, in default of delivering the paddy, to pay its market-value at the time of the default. [p. 820, col. 1.]

In such a case the right and liability of the tenant must depend upon the construction of the contract and the construction of the contract only, and a Court has no right to make any speculation as to whether the amount mentioned in the kabuliyat as the price of the paddy has been put in for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and the registration fee. [p. 820, col. 1.]

Appeal against the following order of Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea, dated the 13th January 1913, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1643 of 1910:—

"This appeal arises out of a suit for rent, and the question involved in the appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to get the price of the paddy rent at the market rate, or at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat. The defendant agreed by the kabuliyat to pay Rs. 8 in cash and 29½ maunds of paddy as rent, but there is a provision in it, that if he could not deliver the paddy, he was to pay cash at the rate of 1 maund 10 seers per rupee. Both the Courts below have held that plaintiff is entitled to get the price of the paddy at the market rate, and the defendant has appealed to this Court.

I am of opinion that the construction put upon the kabuliyat by the Courts below is correct. There can be no doubt upon the terms of the document that a portion of the rent is to be paid in kind, viz., 29½ maunds a year, on failure to pay the paddy at the time stated in the schedule or instalments interest at the rate of 10 seers per maund is to be paid, and the schedule of instalment expressly provides that the paddy is to be delivered in the month of Magh of each year.

It is true a money value is mentioned in the kabuliyat for the paddy and the question is whether that in any way modifies the contract to deliver the paddy. In the body of the document it is stated that on failure to deliver paddy, its price at the rate of 1 maund 10 seers per rupee is to be paid. The price of the paddy at that rate would be Rs. 23.9.2. In the schedule of instalments, however, the cash to be paid in lieu of paddy is Rs. 24. Now, what was the tenant to pay in cash on failure to deliver the paddy, Rs. 23.9.2 according to the rate mentioned in the body of the document or Rs. 24 as stated in the schedule? If the parties really agreed that a particular fixed sum was to be paid in lieu of the paddy, there would not have been this difference between the amount stated in the body of the document and the schedule. They, therefore, seem to have been stated in the kabuliyat only for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and registration fee. The paddy rent provided by the kabuliyat is no doubt a fixed one, but having regard to the terms of the kabuliyat I do not think it was left to the tenant at his option either to deliver the paddy or to pay what might at a particular time be a very inadequate sum as the value of it.

The learned Pleader for the appellant relied on the case of Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) and on behalf of the respondent reliance was placed on the cases of Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra (2), Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (3) and Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (4). Each kabuliyat, however, must be construed according to the particular terms contained therein, and upon the terms of the kabuliyat before us, I think the Courts below have arrived at a proper construction. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs."

Babu Probodh Kumar Bose, for the Respondent.
JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case the appeal is by one of the defendants, defendant No. 2, and the action was brought for rent; and the sole matter in dispute is whether the rent in respect of the paddy is payable at the price which is mentioned in the contract or whether the plaintiff is entitled to get that rent at the market rate at the time the suit was instituted.

Now, but for the fact that three learned Judges have decided this matter in a way contrary to the one in which I am going to decide it, I really should not have wished to say anything except that this appeal ought to be allowed. But out of deference to the learned Judges, I think it is necessary for me to say one or two words.

In my opinion this matter must depend upon the construction of the contract, and the construction of the contract only; we have no right to make any speculation as to whether certain passages were entered in the contract for some motive which is not apparent on the contract itself; for instance, it has been said that this power to substitute a money payment for the delivery of paddy and the mention of the Rs. 24 have been put in for the purpose of registration. There is not a word about it in the contract and, if we were to act upon an assumption of this kind, we would simply enter upon speculation. The contract, in my opinion, is too plain to need any explanation. It gives a right to the defendant to pay to the plaintiff rent partly in money and partly in paddy if he likes. On the other hand, if he does not like to deliver paddy, he can pay the rent altogether in money, and the contract provides the rate in that case. As I have said, if it were not for the fact that there has been a decision of no less than three learned Judges, I should have said that the matter is too plain for argument.

This appeal, in my opinion, should succeed and the judgment of the three Courts should be set aside and the decree will be altered in accordance with our judgment, upon the basis that the annual rental payable is Rs. 24 instead of Rs. 59.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I entirely agree.

Abdul Latiff Sahib v. Bathula Bibi Ammal, 23 Ind. Cas. 530; (1914) M. W. N. 346; 15 M. L. T. 338, followed.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—An agreement varying the terms of a decree between parties who are minors, which is not sanctioned by the Court under Order XXXII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, can be avoided by each of the parties as against the other. A party who is barred by limitation from actively avoiding it as plaintiff can, however, defend a suit brought against him on that agreement by pleading the voidability of the transaction as against him. [p. 824, col. 1.]

If an agreement between the parties to reserve partition of certain properties of which partition has been decreed by Court cannot be recognized under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, or Order XXXII, rule 7, or its enforcement has become barred under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, the only remedy of the parties to obtain a partition of such properties by metes and bounds is to proceed in execution of that decree and not by separate suit, provided a final decree was not passed in the first partition suit. If a Court construes a decree as a final decree in any contested execution proceeding between the parties, that construction will operate as res judicata. [p. 824, col. 2; p. 825, col. 1.]

The cause of action for partition is one and the same and once it has merged into a preliminary decree and into a final decree which effects partition by metes and bounds and awards possession of particular shares to the parties, the plaintiff cannot have a second suit for partition as if the tenancy-in-common gave rise every day (even after the final decree) to a new cause of action. [p. 824, col. 2.]

So long as a preliminary partition decree has not been completed by a final decree, the Court is bound, on the application of either party to proceed with the suit to pass a final decree and such an application is not an application in execution. [p. 825, col. 1.]

Per Napier, J.—A suit for partition of reserved items should be treated as one for recovery of possession of the share from which the plaintiff has been ousted, by a partition by metes and bounds, and the Appellate Court should treat all necessary amendments as having been made. JUDGMENT.

SAD. SIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant is the appellant. The suit was brought for partition of a few of the properties left undivided between the plaintiff and the defendant, though a decree for partition of the plaintiff properties and several other properties had been passed so long ago as on 7th March 1896 (see decree Exhibit C), and for partition of one property (item No. 4) not included in the former suit. The plaintiff and the defendant were two of the parties to the suit (Original Suit No. 36 of 1895) in which that decree (Exhibit C) was passed, they having been "plaintiff" and "second defendant" respectively in that suit. The third defendant in that suit was the Secretary of State for India represented by the Collector of Tanjore, who was in possession of some of the moveables belonging to Sakharam Sahib (connected with the Tanjore Royal Family) whose properties were in dispute in that suit.

The lower Court has dismissed the suit as regards items Nos. 4 and 5 of the plaintiff A Schedule and has passed a preliminary decree for partition of the other items Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8 and 9 in Schedule A. This appeal by the defendant ought, therefore, to have been confined to those items, but I find it includes (probably by mistake) all the nine items.

Forty-two grounds have been mentioned in the appeal memorandum, but many of the grounds are either too vague to require notice or are mere repetitions in other words of other grounds and most of them were not argued separately. I shall mention only the contentions pressed before us by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar for the appellant and give my conclusions shortly upon each of them after setting out a few more necessary facts.

As I said, the razinama decree (Exhibit C) was passed on the 7th March 1896. Both the plaintiff and the defendant were then minors represented by their respective guardians. The relevant portions of that decree are: "This Court doth order and decree that plaintiff do recover from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 one moiety with reference to good and bad soil of the immoveable properties described in Schedule A of the plaint, except the house item No. 8 that has been given to first defendant and that the second defendant" (present defendant) "do take the other moiety...that plaintiff do further get from second defendant mesne profits from this date to date of delivery in respect of the moiety in Schedule A aforementioned." On the 11th October 1897, the plaintiff's guardian granted a receipt to the defendant's agent and it is marked Exhibit III in this case. That receipt acknowledges that the plaintiff's claim as established under the decree (Exhibit C) had been satisfied by granting possession and otherwise to the plaintiff's guardian of his share in all the properties mentioned in that decree (Exhibit C), except one of the nine properties now in dispute and except the moveables in the Collector's hands. (Item No. 4 of the present suit was, as I said before, not included in Original Suit No. 36 of 1895. Paragraph 10 of the plaint in the present suit says: "In regard to the properties annexed to the Schedule A hereto, it was found that a division by metes and bounds was not then convenient," (that is at the time of Exhibit III in October 1897). "It was, therefore, agreed that the properties should be enjoyed in common by plaintiff and defendant without dividing them by metes and bounds, that the income thereof should be divided by the plaintiff and the defendant in equal shares and that the properties themselves should be divided by metes and bounds between the plaintiff and the defendant whenever the parties should desire to have such division effected." The 15th paragraph of the plaint is as follows: "Plaintiff finds it inconvenient to have the properties described in Schedule A in an undivided condition and is desirous of having them divided by metes and bounds. Plaintiff, therefore, sent a notice through his Vakil to the defendant on the 29th December 1910 calling upon him to consent to a fair division of the properties described in Schedule A by metes and bounds. The defendant has not replied to the same." The present suit was brought on 14th December 1912, the plaintiff and the defendant both having then attained majority. One other fact might be mentioned, namely, that between 1898 and 1903 four petitions for execution of the decree Exhibit C were filed on behalf of the plaintiff (see Exhibits IV, VI, VII and VIII) and one on behalf of the defendant (Exhibit V) but the prayer in these execution petitions related, so far as I could see, to the moveable properties belonging to the late Sakharam Sahib which were in the custody of the Tanjore Collector (the third defendant in the suit) and afterwards of the Tanjore Palace Receiver. These have been since divided amicably between the parties.

SETHURAMA SAHIB v. CHOTTA RAJA SAHIB.

In the year 1899, Original Suit No. 68 of 1899 was filed by the present defendant against the present plaintiff for the recovery of a sum of money due on a bond executed by the plaintiff's next friend to the defendant's agent in connection with the settlement of some other suit brought by a third person against both of them. Exhibit 42 is the judgment in that case. One of the defences raised in that suit was that the bond was not enforceable till the plaintiff (then first defendant) had been put in possession of his share in all the properties. The 8th and the 10th issues in that suit were as follows:—"8. Whether plaintiff's agent Veeraraghava Aiyangar granted time to Kasoba Sahib" (present plaintiff's and then 1st defendant's guardian) "for paying up the amount of the bond till he should get possession of the 1st defendant's share of all the properties (moveable and immovable) of Sakharam Sahib?" "10. Whether the first defendant has been put into possession of his share in all the moveable and immovable properties of Sakharam Sahib, and if not, whether the suit is premature?"

The Court found that time was so granted and that that suit was premature, as the plaintiff had not been put into possession of his share of all properties mentioned in Exhibit C. The plaintiff in that suit (defendant in this suit) seems to have set up during the course of the trial of that suit, that even if his agent had agreed to give time for payment of the bond till the present plaintiff (then first defendant) was put in possession, there was an agreement about October 1897 by which the properties were to be enjoyed in common and hence, the present plaintiff must be deemed to have been put in possession of his half share and accordingly that that suit of defendant was not premature. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment (Exhibit 42) says: "Besides, the alleged agreement was not put forward by plaintiff at the time of the settlement of the issues nor any reference made to the agreement in the plaint." The Judge, therefore, found against the agreement, though no issue was directly raised about it and though it does not appear that the guardian of the present plaintiff (then first defendant) denied that agreement. The defendant now contends that by reason of the finding in Exhibit 42 against that agreement, the question whether there was such an agreement in October 1897 between the plaintiff's guardian and the defendant's guardian to hold these plaint properties in common is res judicata against the present plaintiff, who has set up that same agreement in paragraph 10 of the present plaint.

I think the above are the only facts which are necessary to be set out for the decision of this appeal. On these facts, several technical objections to the suit were advanced on behalf of the defendant (appellant). As regards the facts themselves they are fully established by the oral and documentary evidence in the case notwithstanding that the truth of one of these facts, namely, the agreement between the plaintiff's guardian and the defendant's guardian to hold the plaint properties (except item No. 4) in common, was found against in the suit of 1899 (Exhibit 42).

I shall first deal with the question whether the finding in Exhibit 42 as to the truth of the agreement is a res judicata in this suit. It would be so (see section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code) if the fact of this agreement was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, if, according to explanation 3, the matter was alleged by one party and either denied or admitted expressly or impliedly by the other and if it was heard and finally decided in that suit. Having considered the judgment (Exhibit 42) carefully, I agree with the lower Court that there is nothing to show that this agreement which was put forward by the present defendant (plaintiff in the older suit of 1899) during the course of the examination of witnesses in that case was ever denied by the present plaintiff (then first defendant). The Subordinate Judge who decided that suit seems of his own accord to have thought that the agreement, if true, might be fatal to the defence in that suit, namely, that that suit was premature and as that agreement was put forward at a late stage of the litigation, he pronounced an opinion in his judgment against the truth thereof. There is nothing to show that the present plaintiff's guardian or his Vakil considered the truth of the agreement as fatal to the defence in that suit and invited the opinion of the Court on the truth or falsehood of that agreement. I would, therefore, hold, though after some hesitation, that the opinion expressed in that judgment (Exhibit 42) about the truth of the agreement is not res judicata in this suit.

Even if I am wrong in the above opinion and even if that agreement is wholly left out of consideration as not available to the plaintiff, I think the plaintiff is entitled to succeed in this suit in the view I take of the real nature of this litigation. Before mentioning that view, I shall just say a few words on the other technical objections raised in the case as they were elaborately argued, though a decision on these objections also is unnecessary in my opinion. These questions can only arise if the decree of 1896 (Exhibit C) is treated as a final decree for partition.

Assuming that it is such a final decree, can the agreement to hold certain properties in common, whereas the decree contemplates division by metes and bounds and the award of a definite half share to the plaintiff, can that agreement be allowed to vary the decree? In Kelu Nair v. Meenakshi (1), Spencer, J., and myself held that Order XXI, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to the relief of possession of immoveables given by a decree. We relied on Sankaran Nambiar v. Kanara Kurup (2), which was decided on the language of section 258 of the old Civil Procedure Code. We thought that the slight change in the language introduced by Order XXI, rule 2, of the new Code, though it set at rest the difference of opinion whether mortgage decrees are decrees for money (and whether payments made in satisfaction of mortgage decrees should be certified), did not affect the decision in Sankaran Nambiar v. Kanara Kurup (2) which related to a decree for possession of immoveables. But I find in a more recent case decided by the learned Chief Justice and Ayling, J., in Abdul Latiff Sahib v. Bothula Bibi Ammal (3), that it has been held that as the first sentence in Order XXI, rule 2, clause 1, refers to "a decree of any kind", the words "the decree" in the second sentence of that rule meant "a decree of any kind under which money is payable", including a complex decree under which possession of immoveables is also awarded and that as regards execution of that portion also of the decree which relates to the possession of immoveables, an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognised. (The headnote to the report in Madras Weekly Notes is very misleading). There is a still more recent case (Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 11 of 1915) (Oldfield and Krishnan, JJ.) which, however, follows Kelu Nair v. Meenakshi (1). After full consideration, I recede from the opinion expressed by me in Kelu Nair v. Meenakshi (1) and adopt that found in the judgment in Abdul Latiff Sahib v.

SETHURAMA SAHIB v. CHOTTA RAJA SAHIB.

Bathula Bibi Ammal (3). I am not even sure that "the decree" in the second sentence should be one under some part at least of which money should be payable. However, this does not help the defendant in this case as clause 3 of Order XXI, rule 2, prevents only the Court executing the decree from recognising the adjustment and not any other Court. The Court which decided the present suit is not executing the decree in the suit of 1896 and hence it seems to me that the agreement can be recognised by it if the question of its truth is not res judicata.

The next objection is that as that agreement varies the terms of the decree in the suit of 1896, it is invalid under Order XXII, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure corresponding to section 462 of the old Code, as not having been sanctioned by the Court. Order XXXII, rule 7, clause 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure makes such an agreement voidable against all the parties other than the minor. Each of the parties to the suit (who were both minors at the time of the agreement which took place at the end of 1897) could, therefore, avoid it as against the other. Now, I take it the defendant wishes to avoid it while the plaintiff does not wish to avoid it. It was not denied that more than three years had elapsed since the defendant attained majority when this suit was instituted. But the Privy Council has held in Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiri (4) that though a defendant might be barred from instituting a suit to avoid a transaction voidable against him, he could defend a suit brought against him by pleading the voidability of that transaction as against him. I am, therefore, of opinion that Exhibit C can be avoided by the defendant in defence to this suit. If the agreement has thus become avoided and if the decree of 1896 was a final decree for partition, I think the only remedy for the plaintiff to obtain a partition by metes and bounds was to proceed in execution of that decree, and not by a separate suit. No doubt it has been held in Madan Mohan Mondul v. Baikunta Nath Mondul (5) and T. C. Mukerji v. Afzal Beg (6) that even if a decree for partition was not executed and was allowed to be barred, a second suit for partition could be brought so long as the relationship of tenants-in-common continued between the parties. It was also held in Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baldeo Das (7) that where, by mistake, the Court decreed the final partition of only a portion of the property belonging to the parties in common, though the suit was for partition of all the properties held in common, a subsequent suit for the portion left undivided might be brought. I, however, respectfully dissent from those decisions and hold that the cause of action for partition is one and the same and once it has merged into a preliminary decree and into a final decree which effected partition by metes and bounds and awarded possession of particular shares to the parties, the plaintiff cannot have a second suit for partition as if the tenancy-in-common gave rise every day (even after the final decree) to a new cause of action. If the decree of 1896 was a final decree, I am clear that execution of that decree is barred by the twelve years' period of limitation under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If, however, there is a new cause of action on the agreement of 1897, assuming it to be valid, it is clear on the facts that the possession of the defendant after 1899 continued to be that of a tenant-in-common with the plaintiff. There was no assertion of adverse possession as against the plaintiff and, on the other hand, out of the common profits the defendant seems to have spent moneys on a purpose common to the plaintiff and the defendant, namely, the maintenance of a cow, calf and elephant dedicated to the idol in the famous Kamatchiamman temple at Tanjore in accordance with the agreement of 1897.

I shall now state briefly the true legal view which, I think, ought to be taken of this suit. I think that the decree of 1896 was only a preliminary decree so far as the partition of the plaintiff properties (except of course item No. 4) is concerned. I do not think that the execution petitions of 1898 and 1903 already referred to can change the character and construction of a decree. If such a construction had been made by the Court in an order passed on a contested execution proceeding that construction may, no doubt, be res judicata between the parties. But so far as the decree for partition of immoveables is concerned, no such construction seems to have been placed by the Court in any order passed on any execution petition. [See also the judgments of Oldfield, J., and myself reported as Srinivasa Madali v. Ramasamy Mudali (8).] So long as a preliminary partition decree has not been completed by a final decree, the Court is bound, on the application of any parties, to proceed with the suit to pass a final decree and such an application is not an application in execution. See the same case of Srinivasa Mudali v. Ramasamy Mudali (8). I think this suit might be treated as such an application to pass a final decree and the decree passed in this suit appointing a Commissioner to divide the properties Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6 to 9 and other appurtenant as orders passed in the suit of 1895 (in furtherance of the preliminary decree), that is, to obtain the necessary report, etc., from the Commissioner in view to prepare the final decree to be passed in that suit. Viewed in this manner, the lower Court's decision is right. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed. The memorandum of objections was not pressed as regards item No. 4. As regards item No. 5, the lower Court has given good grounds for its view that its partition has been already effected by metes and bounds between the parties and it is not necessary to pass a decree for its fresh division. The memorandum of objections is, therefore, also dismissed. Costs on both sides of this appeal to come out of the estate.

NAPIER, J.—My learned brother has mentioned at sufficient length the material facts on which this appeal is founded and I will not recapitulate them.

A number of contentions were raised before us on behalf of the appellant, some of which I do not think it necessary to express any opinion on. The point of res judicata was pressed by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, but I agree with my learned brother that the existence of the agreement relied on was not a point substantially in issue in the previous case. On the facts, I am satisfied that the razinama decree was executed by the plaintiff and defendant taking joint possession of the house in question. This is, to my mind, established by Exhibit G series. It, therefore, becomes immaterial whether the subsequent agreement relied on was void as not having been sanctioned by the Court, or whether it is voidable only as contended by the learned Advocate-General; nor do I think it necessary to express any opinion on the very difficult question of the construction of Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. I have little doubt that rules 1 and 2 were intended by the Legislature to apply to what are known as money-decrees. But on the language used, it seems difficult to hold that the word "decree" in rule 2, clause (1), can apply only to money-decrees or can be read as meaning a "decree to the extent of any money payable under it." In the view I take of the facts the suit will not be barred under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, by reason of more than twelve years having elapsed since the date of the original decree, i. e., 7th March 1896, as in my mind a fresh cause of action has arisen from the ouster in 1909. I cannot accept the contention that the cessation of occupation by the agent for the plaintiff and defendant in 1899 and the subsequent failure to pay any portion of the proceeds of the rent of the house from that date amounts to a clear and unambiguous assertion of a right to sole ownership by the defendant, in view of the fact that there was an original and continuing liability of the plaintiff to pay his share of the expenses of upkeep of the animals for whose maintenance the rent was, in fact, applied, although the agreement under which it was done might have been void. I would, therefore, treat this suit as one for recovery of possession of the half share from which the plaintiff has been ousted, by a partition by metes and bounds, treating all necessary amendments in the plaint as made. In this view I would dismiss the appeal with costs to come out of the estate.

With regard to the memorandum of objections, I see no reason to think that the house was not properly divided originally and in that view the memorandum of objections fails and should be dismissed with costs to come out of the estate.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1736 OF 1914

November 23, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Phillips.

MANJESHWARA KRISHNAYA—

DEFENDANT NO. 3—APPELLANT

versus

VASUDEVA MALLYA AND OTHERS—

PLAINTIFFS NOS. 1 TO 5, DEFENDANT NO. 1 AND HIS LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE—

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata as between co-defendants—Finding on issue not in active controversy between defendants inter se, effect of—Vendor and purchaser—Mortgage by vendee, declaration of validity of, in action by vendor against vendee and his mortgagee—Transfer pending suit—Lis pendens—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52.

M. sold certain properties to 1st defendant, who mortgaged them to plaintiff's father after purchase. M. brought a suit against 1st defendant and plaintiff for a declaration that both the said sale and mortgage were colourable transactions. The Court held that they were both valid. During the pendency of that litigation 1st defendant sold the property to 2nd defendant, who, in turn, transferred it to 3rd defendant. In a suit by the plaintiff to enforce the mortgage security:

Held, per Curiam, that the previous decree in favour of M., wherein the validity of the mortgage was admitted by both 1st defendant and the plaintiff's predecessor and which was not in active controversy between them, did not operate as res judicata in the present suit. [p. 827, col. 2; p. 829, col. 1.]

Held, by Phillips, J. (whose opinion prevailed under section 98, Civil Procedure Code), Oldfield, J., dissenting, that under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, the transfer to 2nd defendant could not affect the plaintiff's right to a valid mortgage over the property, a right which he obtained as the result of the suit during which the property was transferred. [p. 830, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The wording of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act no doubt is general and is not restricted explicitly to the protection of those parties only who have been in active controversy with the transferor. But it cannot be read as a general prohibition against the subsequent agitation of every question, which arose in the litigation, between whomsoever it was decided. That reading would refuse full effect to the words "the rights of any other party," for the right protected cannot be treated as existing, like an obligation running with the property, independently of the party in whose favour it was decreed. [p. 828, col. 1.]

The doctrine of lis pendens operates only in favour of a plaintiff and cannot be invoked by a defendant. [p. 828, col. 2.]

Per Phillips, J.—There is no authority for the proposition that the scope of the doctrine of lis pendens must be limited to cases in which the doctrine of res judicata would apply to the transferor. [p. 829, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Canara in Appeal Suit No. 45 of 1913, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge, South Canara, in Original Suit No. 60 of 1911 (Original Suit No. 63 of 1906 on the file of the District Court of South Canara).

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Sreenivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 13th November 1916, and having stood over till this day for consideration, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—Plaintiffs sue to recover on a mortgage on the suit property, admittedly executed by 1st defendant in favour of their predecessor-in-interest. Third defendant, the appellant, is a transferee of the property from 2nd defendant, who is a transferee from 1st defendant in virtue of transactions to be detailed later. Third defendant's contention is that the mortgage is invalid, because it was entirely without consideration. The lower Appellate Court decided against this on the ground that 3rd defendant was concluded by the decision in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902; it modified the decree of the Subordinate Judge only on another point, regarding which there is no dispute before us.

For the understanding of the effect of the decree in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902 the necessary facts are that 1st defendant bought the property from one Manjunatha, leaving rupees one thousand and five hundred of the consideration outstanding, rupees one thousand on a promissory note and rupees five hundred, which had not been paid, when it should have been, at registration. This rupees one thousand five hundred and another sum of rupees five hundred, which does not affect the present argument, were raised by 1st defendant by the suit hypothecation of the property to plaintiffs' predecessor; 2nd defendant, holding a decree against Manjunatha, attached the debt due to him by 1st defendant and, proceeding against the latter, obtained a decree and bought in the property, thus becoming the mortgagee of plaintiffs' predecessor. Manjunatha, apparently apprehensive of competition between his right to a charge for unpaid purchase money and the mortgage, brought Original Suit No. 114 of 1898 to have the mortgage and also the previous sale to 1st defendant declared invalid on the grounds that they were colourable and without consideration. The High Court in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902 held that the sale was valid and that the mortgage was valid subject to Manjunatha's claim to his unpaid purchase money, the principal of which it found to be rupees one thousand, the amount above referred to as due on a promissory note. This judgment is the basis of the lower Appellate Court's decision against 2nd defendant and 3rd defendant. The parties to it were Manjunatha as plaintiff and 1st defendant, his wife and plaintiffs' predecessor as defendants. In the second appeal, the last mentioned was appellant and the legal representatives of Manjunatha, 1st defendant and his wife were respondents. Throughout the proceedings plaintiffs' predecessor and 1st defendant upheld the validity of the mortgage.

Contrary to 1st defendant's previous pleading his successors, 2nd and 3rd defendants, have contended in the present suit that the mortgage was without consideration and is not binding on them or the property in the latter's hands. And accordingly the case has been argued first on the ground that they are estopped by 1st defendant's conduct in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902. That can be dismissed shortly, because no such plea of estoppel was advanced, put in issue or considered in the lower Courts. Next it is said that the decree in the second appeal is res judicata between plaintiffs and 3rd defendant; and to this two answers have been given. It is argued firstly that, although the decree declared the validity of the mortgage, subject only to Manjunatha's prior right to rupees one thousand, the judgment, which modified the decision in first appeal by adding to it a reference to that right, statedly made that reference only as between Manjunatha and plaintiffs' predecessor, thus leaving the question of the validity of the mortgage and the amount recoverable on it open as between the latter and 1st defendant. This restriction of the effect of the decision regarding the rupees one thousand is intelligible, because (as the records show) the original judgment had recognised Manjunatha's object as not so much to have the mortgage "set aside as to have it rendered of no effect, so far as it affected his property; it was not his interest whether 1st defendant owed any money or not to 3rd defendant;" and the main ground of second appeal against the decisions declaring the mortgage invalid was that Manjunatha had no right to ask for that relief. But, whatever the reason for it, the making of the restriction in the judgment cannot assist 3rd defendant, because it was not mentioned in the decree, to which 1st defendant submitted and which must be looked to, rather than the judgment, as determining the parties' rights. The second argument relied on, however, affords a clear reason for holding that the decree in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902 is not res judicata. Plaintiffs' predecessor and 1st defendant were co-defendants and were so far from being in active contest that their pleas as to the validity of the mortgage and Manjunatha's right to dispute it were substantially the same; and in these circumstances there is no res judicata between them. Ramchandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev (1), Venkayya v. Narasamma (2).

It is, therefore, necessary to consider the third ground of decision proposed by plaintiffs, that adopted by the lower Appellate Court and based on the principle of lis pendens. The difficulty in the way of its application is not due to any doubt as to the contentious character of Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902 or the fact that the transfer to 2nd defendant was made during the litigation. It is that the principle, as contended for, involves that the decision relied on shall be binding on the transferee, not only as it would have been on the transferor, but also to the extent to which there was an adjudication on the rights of any other party, whether that adjudication affected those of the transferor or not; in short that in the present case, although there was no binding decision between 1st defendant and plaintiff's predecessor as to the invalidity of the mortgage, 3rd defendant is to be affected by one between Manjunatha and each of them separately.

To test this contention with reference to section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act the wording no doubt is general and is not restricted explicitly to the protection of those parties only, who have been in active controversy with the transferor. But it cannot, in my opinion, be read, as plaintiffs claim, as a general prohibition against the subsequent agitation of every question, which arose in the litigation, between whomsoever it was decided. That reading would refuse full effect to the words "the rights of any other party". For it would involve the fallacy of treating the right protected as existing, like an obligation running with the property, independently of the party in whose favour it was decreed; and, so much conceded, it would, as is pointed out in the first case to be referred to, be hard to permit other parties to the litigation to profit by its recognition, though (as in the present case) they had obtained no binding adjudication regarding it, and at the same time to refuse permission to strangers to do so.

Authority supports this view; and, though it is mostly English, it does not appear inapplicable in this country owing to the English procedure of registration of lis pendens or on other grounds. Bellamy v. Sabine (3) contains a general statement of the doctrine, which has often been approved by Indian Courts. It is also directly in point, because it dealt with the competition between one of two co-defendants and the other's transferee, the former claiming unpaid purchase money and the latter under a mortgage made during the litigation. The decision was in favour of the transferee, the matter being put most clearly in the judgment of Turner,

(3) (1857) 1 Dc. G. & J. 566; 26 L. J. Ch. 797; 3 Jur. (N. s.) 943; 6 W. R. 1; 44 E. R. 842; 118 R. R. 228.

L. J., "Laying out of consideration the cases (which are rare), in which decrees can be made between co-defendants," (and also presumably those in which there is an adjudication between them after active contest) "upon what ground is the case of a co-defendant to stand in a different position from that of a stranger? and, if the doctrine of lis pendens is to be carried so far as to affect a purchaser with notice in favour of a stranger, I hardly know what title would be safe, independently of the late Acts requiring registration." In the next case, Tyler v. Thomas (4), the doctrine was applied; but the decisive factor in favour of its application was that, though there was no adjudication between the co-defendants concerned, an issue was raised between them and reserved for subsequent trial, Bellamy v. Sabine (3) being distinguished on that ground. In Bull v. Hutchens (5) it was held that "a lis pendens is merely notice of some claim, made in respect of the property which is the subject of the suit, but that it does not, of itself, create an incumbrance, apart from the equity on which the litigation is founded." Only one Indian case need be mentioned. In Shivlal Bhagvan v. Shambhuprasad (6) a Full Bench decision, the Court, though it based its conclusion on another ground, referred to Bellamy v. Sabine (3), apparently with approval, as deciding that the doctrine of lis pendens operated only in favour of a plaintiff and could not be invoked by defendants.

Plaintiff's construction of the section failing on its merits and with reference to authority, I would allow the second appeal, set aside the lower Appellate Court's decision and remand the case for disposal on the other points raised in the appeal memorandum before it.

PHILLIPS, J.—The properties mortgaged to the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 by 1st defendant had been sold to 1st defendant by one Manjunatha Bhandari, who brought a suit in 1898 (Original Suit No. 114 of 1898, Sub-Court, Mangalore) for a declaration that the sale-deed to 1st defendant and the hypothecation-deed executed by him to the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 (3rd defendant in that suit) were invalid. In Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902 it was held that the sale-deed and mortgage were both valid. During the pendency of the litigation 2nd defendant purchased the property from 1st defendant and 3rd defendant is 2nd defendant's transferee, and it has been held by the lower Appellate Court that the doctrine of lis pendens is applicable and that, therefore, 3rd defendant cannot now question the validity of the mortgage to 1st and 2nd plaintiffs' father.

As between Manjunatha Bhandari and plaintiffs the validity of the mortgage is undoubtedly res judicata, and also as between Manjunatha Bhandari and 1st defendant. But it is contended now that as 1st defendant and plaintiffs' father were co-defendants in the suit of 1898 the validity of the mortgage is not res judicata as between them, for no question of res judicata can arise between co-defendants when there was no matter actively in contest between them, the decision of which was necessary for the determination of the suit. This would appear to be the case, and I am not prepared to say that the prior decision in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902 would operate as res judicata between 1st defendant and plaintiffs, although the former might be estopped from questioning the validity of a mortgage, the validity of which he had himself set up in that litigation. It is then contended for respondents that even though the doctrine of res judicata may not apply to 3rd defendant, he is precluded from disputing the validity of the mortgage by reason of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, under which during the active prosecution of a contentious suit the property concerned cannot be transferred by any party to the suit so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree made therein.

This contention, if upheld, would in this case possibly have the effect of disabling a purchaser even more effectively than his transferor to whom the doctrine of res judicata would apply, but cannot be rejected on this ground alone. Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act embodies the English doctrine of lis pendens as applicable in Courts in India, and the principle on which that doctrine rests is that no alienation by either party to a pending litigation is to be allowed to prejudice the interests of the parties thereto. In the words of the Lord Chancellor in Bellamy v. Sabine (3), "The law does not allow litigant parties to give to others, pending the litigation, rights to the property in dispute, so as to prejudice the opposite party." We have not been referred to any cases in which the question now in issue has been specifically decided, and consequently, I think that the provisions of section 52 must be relied upon for the answer. The decree in Second Appeal No. 323 of 1902 held that the mortgage to plaintiffs' father was valid, subject to a claim for unpaid purchase money, and that decree was binding on 1st defendant who was a party to it. No doubt it is remarked in the judgment that the decree of the lower Courts will be modified as between the plaintiff and 3rd defendant (plaintiffs' father), but that remark appears to be due to the fact that 3rd defendant alone appealed to this Court, and 1st defendant was ex parte and it is clear from the decree itself that the mortgage was held to be valid and not merely as between plaintiff and 3rd defendant. The effect of the decree, therefore, was to establish the right of plaintiffs' father to a valid mortgage was on the suit property, and under section 52 no transfer effected during the suit can affect that right. First defendant as a party is bound by that decree and does not now seek to impeach its validity. To allow 3rd defendant in this suit to contend and possibly to prove that that right does not exist would certainly affect plaintiffs' right, established by the decree, and although the declaration as to the right might not be conclusive as between 1st defendant and plaintiffs as res judicata, yet it is a declaration binding on 1st defendant until he seeks to impeach it. He does not impeach it now, and consequently its impeachment by his alienee does seriously affect plaintiffs' rights and, therefore, in my opinion cannot be allowed. I can find no authority for the proposition that the scope of the doctrine of lis pendens must be limited to cases in which the doctrine of res judicata would apply to the transferor, and if the Legislature had meant to enunciate that proposition, it could have done so in terms instead of enacting section 52 in its present form. According to the language of section 52, the transfer to 2nd defendant cannot affect plaintiffs' right to a valid mortgage over the property, a right which he obtained as the result of the suit during which the property was transferred. The transfer to 2nd defendant must, therefore, be deemed to have been made subject to that right and 3rd defendant cannot now impeach the validity of the mortgage.

In this view it is unnecessary to discuss the question of estoppel. The question was not raised in the lower Courts and cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal, although it is quite possible that, if 1st defendant had in this suit impeached the validity of plaintiff's mortgage, the plea of estoppel would have been raised and proved successfully.

By THE COURT.—The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Sudras—Illegitimate son, rights of—Share, claim for, after partition between father and legitimate sons, maintainability of.

An illegitimate son of a Sudra can, under Hindu Law, take a share equal to that of a legitimate son at his father's choice, and, after his father's death, can demand of the legitimate sons a share equal to half that of a legitimate son. [p. 831, col. 2]

Where, however, a partition has already been effected between the father and his legitimate sons, in which nothing is reserved for the illegitimate son, the latter cannot claim his share. [p. 832, col. 1.]

Ram Saran Garain v. Tek Chand Garain, 28 C. 194, followed.

An illegitimate son does not take a share in his father's estate at birth. [p. 832, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 45 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Poonamallee, in Original Suit No. 247 of 1911.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar (with him Mr. A. Sivarama Menon), for the Appellant.—(1) The general rule of Hindu Law is that an illegitimate son can get a share in the family property at his father's choice. It is nowhere laid down that he can bring a suit to compel a partition to get a share. Mayne says that the right is a strange right and has not been raised anywhere hitherto. Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Sing (1) and Soundarajam v. Arunachalam Chetty (2), Karuppanan Chetti v. Bulokam Chetti (3).

(2) Again in this case there was a previous suit for partition in which the present plaintiff was allotted no share, and when the family became divided there was nothing on which his right could operate. This point was laid down in a series of cases. Krishnayyan v. Muttusami (4), Ranoji v. Kandoji (5), Parvathi v. Thirumalai (6), Sadu v. Baiza (7), Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Sing (1), Karuppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (8) and Visvanathaswamy Naicker v. Kamu Ammal (9).

There are also recent cases of Mandaram Nammaya Chetty v. Mandaram Thiruvengadathan Chetty (10) and Meenakshi v. Muniandi Panikkan (11).

(3) The text of Mitakshara is clear and explicit that an illegitimate son takes a share only at his father's choice, and there is no ground for extending the rule beyond it. That is the law laid down for very many years and if his right to partition is now recognized, it will be ignoring it altogether and the doctrine of stare decisis should be applied to such cases.

Mr. V. S. Govindachariar, (with him Messrs. V. S. Kallabhram Aiyangar and T. M. Vedantachariar), for the Respondents.—(1) In the former suit the father's written statement was to the effect that the illegitimate son must be given a share; that amounts to a choice by the father.

[NAPIER, J.—But there the allegation was that all of them were legitimate and there could be no question of choice in that case; besides the father had in that case no right to raise that question.]

The statement expresses a desire that he should get a share and the text of Mitakshara should be understood in that light. An illegitimate son has got a right to a share by birth but what that share is, is left to his father's choice. Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Sing (1).

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, in reply.—The general principle of Hindu Law is that none but the members of a co-parcenary are entitled to a share on partition. The illegitimate son is recognized nowhere as a co-parcener, and his right is an exceptional right under the Hindu Law. The ordinary rules of inheritance and co-parcenary do not apply to him.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Chingleput on appeal from the decision of the District Munsif of Poonamallee, in a suit brought by an illegitimate son against the legitimate sons of his father, making the father also a defendant, claiming a share of the family property on partition. The lower Appellate Court has given him a decree on the footing that the father tacitly consented to his having a share and that, therefore, he is entitled to a half share with his legitimate brothers. The legitimate sons appeal to this Court relying on the fact, which has not been disputed before us, that a prior suit had been instituted by one of the legitimate sons to which the present claimant was not made a party, and in which the plaintiff sought for partition against his father, that in that suit the father pleaded that he had other legitimate sons of whom the present plaintiff was one, and that, therefore, they were necessary parties to the suit. It appears that that suit was compromised and partition made, in which the claimant was given no share.

Mr. Muthukrishnier on their behalf now contends that whatever are the rights of an illegitimate son against his father and whatever they are against his father's legitimate sons after his father's death, once there has been a partition there remained no right to him to claim a share against the sons. We have been taken through a long series of authorities beginning with Krishnayyan v. Muttusami (4), which have decided the true position of the illegitimate son of a sudra by a permanently kept concubine under Hindu Law. The broad result of these cases is that an illegitimate son can, under the text in the Mitakshara, take a share equal to that of a legitimate son at his father's choice, and after his father's death can demand of the legitimate sons a share equal to half that of a legitimate son. This power of the father and right of the illegitimate son is treated by the eminent Judges who have considered these cases as being an exception to the strict rule of Hindu Law, under which no person other than a co-parcener is entitled to a share. It is explained in some of the cases as being really only a sort of capitalised maintenance and that this is the true view of it, whether the share is given by the father at his choice or whether under the latter text, it is claimed against the legitimate sons after the father's death. We do not think it necessary to discuss the principle behind this right. It is sufficient for us that it is definitely and clearly laid down in the Mitakshara and has been fully recognized by eminent Judges like the late Mr. Justice Muthuswami Aiyar. We take it, therefore, that where a father and his sons are in possession of a family property and there are no other co-parceners of the same degree with the father, then, as to that joint family property, the right to a full share or possibly less can be given by the father. And it seems to us to follow from this that where the father and his sons have separated, there is no longer the material on which this claim can operate, and that, therefore, the sons' share of the property after partition cannot be made liable to this claim. For this latter proposition, there is direct authority of the High Court of Calcutta in a case reported as Ram Saran Garain v. Tek Chand Garain (12) and we can only say that judging the matter in the light of what we regard as the true inferences to be drawn from the decisions of this Court, we entirely agree with the view taken by the High Court, Calcutta.

For the respondent, three points have been taken. First of all, it has been urged that the written statement of the father in the previous suit amounts to a choice within the meaning of the text in the Mitakshara. We have allowed this statement to be filed in this Court and marked as Exhibit B and have examined it carefully. It is in fact an allegation that the sons are legitimate and that they are, therefore, necessary parties to the suit; and does not purport to make any choice, because the conditions for a choice were not before the father; secondly, it could not operate as a choice because the father had no right to raise any question in that suit other than the question whether there were other persons entitled to be made parties. That suit, as we have pointed out, ended in a compromise in which the illegitimate sons were ignored. We cannot, therefore, treat anything in the written statement in that suit as indicating a choice by the father. The next point taken is that the language of the text of the Mitakshara must be read as meaning that wherever the father wishes that his sons, whether legitimate or illegitimate, should be given a share, they shall be entitled to that share. Bearing in mind that this right to a share is admittedly an exception to the principles of Hindu Law, we do not feel at liberty to do anything more than construe this text strictly and we have the authority of Judges of this Court for saying that that is the proper manner in which to approach the text. We must, therefore, confine it to the exact conditions which are stated in the text itself, and, in that view, it is impossible to say that a consent of the father given in circumstances where the choice does not arise and where he has no power to dissent can come within the language of the text. The last point taken is that an illegitimate son has a right under Hindu Law to a share, which right arises to him at birth, and that the father's choice is only limited to this, namely, that the father can say whether he shall take a whole share or something less. It is conceded by the respondent that this view has never even been considered as possible by any of the Benches of this Court that have had this matter under careful scrutiny since the time of Krishnayyan v. Muttusami (4). The sole basis for this argument is the decision of the Privy Council in the case reported as Jogindro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Sing (1), in which the Privy Council held that where the property was in the hands of a legitimate and an illegitimate son and the legitimate son died the illegitimate son could take the legitimate son's share by survivorship, the estate being impartible. This decision has been considered in two cases, Karuppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (8) and Visvanathaswamy Naicker v. Ramu Annal (9), and it cannot be denied that this Court has found some difficulty in ascertaining the principle on which that decision was founded. It must of course be loyally followed wherever that position has to be dealt with. But this Court has steadily refused to extend its application beyond that position or to deduce from it propositions which are at variance with the decisions of this Court. We are asked to say that that decision can only be founded on the proposition that an illegitimate son takes his share at birth. Not only do their Lordships not say that, but they definitely negative that proposition, the language being "it cannot be said that at his birth he acquired any right to share in the estate in the same way as a legitimate son would do." So that whatever be the principle which their Lordships apply for the purpose of their decision in that case, it was not the principle of the illegitimate son being a co-parcener at birth.

(12) 28 C. 194.

It follows, therefore, that so far from assisting the respondent in his argument, this dictum is a direct authority against him. The respondent wished to invite our attention to the text of the Mitakshara and found some arguments on the position in which this text is found. Both my learned brother and myself feel that we are not at liberty to re-open this question. It has, as I have said, been exhaustively considered by eminent Hindu Judges of this Court for 40 years and we do not feel in the slightest degree entitled and, I may say speaking for myself, competent to review their decisions. We must, therefore, accept the law as laid down in those cases and, as it necessarily follows from those decisions and from the view which we take, following the case of Ram Saran Garain v. Tek Chand Garain (12), that the claim must fail, this appeal will be allowed, and the decree of the District Judge will be reversed and that of the District Munsif restored with costs throughout.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs..

RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Barga kabuliyat, construction of—Tenant, whether bound to pay stipulated sum as value of crops or their market-value—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Construction of document—Motive of parties, how far relevant.

A Court cannot ignore the plain terms of a contract merely because they appear to be unreasonable. If the terms are clear and unambiguous, the Court is bound to give effect to them without stopping to consider how far they may be reasonable or otherwise. [p. 836, col. 1.]

In construing a contract a Court is not permitted to speculate about the possible intention and motive of the parties, it is concerned only with their intention as expressed by the words they have deliberately used. [p. 836, col. 1.]

Where a barga kabuliyat (which was headed "value of the crops mentioned in the barga kabuliyat is Rs. 25") provided that a half share of the crops raised on the land shall be made over to the landlord and the tenant shall cultivate, sow and weed and do other things for cultivating and if he does not cultivate, the landlord's share of the crops will be determined by reference to the crops raised on the neighbouring fields and if the tenant fails to deliver the said crops to the landlord, he shall pay Rs. 25 per annum to the landlord on account of, the value of the crops and if he does not do so the landlord shall be entitled to realise the same by instituting a suit in Court:

Held, (1) that under the terms of the kabuliyat, the tenant, if he neglected to deliver to his landlord crops according to the terms of the instrument, became liable to pay Rs. 25 per annum on account of the value thereof and not their market-value; [p. 835, col. 2.]

(2) that under section 92 of the Evidence Act, no oral evidence was admissible to show that the clause about the payment of Rs. 25 was inserted solely for the purposes of registration of the document, as it was not so stated on the face of the instrument itself. [p. 835, col. 2.]

Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 27th March 1916, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 3530 of 1913:—

"In this appeal the only question to be decided is whether the defendant-appellant is liable to pay the plaintiff a cash rent of Rs. 25 yearly or to give her the value of half the crops grown on the land for the years for which rent is claimed.

The defendant executed a barga kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff, dated 28th Magh 1298 (February 1892). This kabuliyat is headed "value of the crops mentioned in the barga kabuliyat is Rs. 25." It contains the ordinary conditions of a barga kabuliyat that the executant will cultivate the lands and make over half the crops raised on the lands to his lessor. It also contains the following stipulation which has been translated in the paper-book as follows: "If I neglect to deliver crops, etc., I shall pay you Rs. 25 per annum on account of the value of the crops; if I fail to deliver the same you will be competent to realise the same by instituting suit in Court, any objection to the same taken by me shall not be entertained." This is a free translation of this part of the kabuliyat. The following is a mere literal translation, "If I fail" (i.e., to cultivate and give the crops) "I shall give (dib) you Rs. 25 a year on account of the value of the crops; if I do not give (na dib) you will be competent to realise the same by instituting a suit." The same Bengali verb has been expressed by the translator by the English verb pay and deliver and it has been argued that the words na dib mean "if I do not pay Rs. 25." It is contended on behalf of the respondent that there is a clear covenant in the deed to pay Rs. 25 if the crops are not delivered and that the lessor's only remedy for a breach of the contract is to sue for this amount. The Munsif who tried the suit accepted this plea and relying on the decision of the Court in the case of Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) granted the plaintiff a decree at the rate of Rs. 25 yearly; on an appeal by the plaintiff the lower Appellate Court held that the construction put on the terms of the kabuliyat by the Munsif was erroneous and allowed the appeal and remanded the case to the Munsif for a fresh decision after ascertainment of the quantity and price of the crop grown on the disputed land during the year in suit.

I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in thinking that the decision in the case Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) is not applicable to the facts of the present case. There the amount of paddy to be paid was fixed. In the present case as the tenancy is barga the amount is variable. In that case it was not disputed that upon a true construction of the case the plaintiffs were entitled, upon failure of the defendants to deliver the paddy, to realise only the amount stated in the lease as its value. What was decided as a point of law in that case was that when the rights and liabilities of the parties were explicitly set out in the lease, oral evidence was not admissible to prove an agreement substantially varying the terms of the instrument. Here the whole question is, how is the kabuliyat to be construed. On such a question decided cases are of little assistance as the words of documents usually vary on material points. In the present case all the reported cases to which my attention has been drawn can have no application, as they all refer to the payment of a fixed amount of rent in kind and not to a barga tenancy in which the rent is a share of the actual crop. These cases are Sohobut Ali v. Abdool Ali (2), Ananda Chandra Roy v. Makram Ali (3), Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (4), Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), already referred to, and Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra (5).

It appears to me that on a proper construction of the kabuliyat the landlord has not given up his right to sue for the value of half the crop in the case of non-delivery by the tenant. The description of the kabuliyat as a barga kabuliyat is inconsistent with a tenancy which gave the tenant the option of paying a final money rent. The heading of the kabuliyat supports the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge that "Rs. 25 must have been mentioned for the purposes of registration." Also if the kabuliyat is correctly translated, this sum appears to be payable on failure to cultivate the land as well as for failure to deliver the crops and it seems to me more reasonable that this sum should have been paid to provide for the former default than the latter. Also the clause relating to the landlord's right to institute a suit can be read to mean that he can sue for the value of the crops as well as that he can sue for the fixed amount of compensation. On a proper construction of the lease there is nothing in it to deprive the landlord of the right, which the landlord of a barga tenant ordinarily has, to sue for the value of the landlord's share of the crop.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs "

Babu Abinash Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.—There is absolutely nothing in the kabuliyat to show that the sum of Rs. 25 mentioned therein was inserted for the purposes of registration. And under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act oral evidence is not admissible to show that that sum was inserted in the kabuliyat for any such purpose. Cites Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1). Distinguishes Baneswar Mukherji's case (5) on the grounds that in that case there was no alternative covenant for the payment of a fixed sum in cash in lieu of the crops and that the effect of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act is not considered there.

Babu Prakas Chandra Mazoomdar for the Respondent.—The kabuliyat is a barga kabuliyat and in the first portion of it there is a clear stipulation for the delivery of half share of all crops grown on the land, the value of which must necessarily vary from year to year. Having regard to this stipulation the last clause, which provides that in case the tenant fails to deliver this share or neglects to cultivate the land he shall pay Rs. 25 for the value thereof must be construed to mean that the landlord respondent has an option in the matter and he may either sue for the sum fixed or for the actual value of the crops in his share. Otherwise the two stipulations would be inconsistent and no prudent man can be expected to limit his right under the first stipulation in the way provided by the second. The amount of Rs. 25 should be taken as the estimated value of a year's profit at the time when the document was executed and inserted for purposes of registration, as was held in the cases of Sohobut Ali v. Abdool Ali (2), Ananda Chandra Roy v. Makram Ali (3), Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (4), Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra (5). The insertion of the figure cannot limit the right of the landlord to that amount only, as was held in the aforesaid cases.

This construction of the kabuliyat does not depend upon extraneous oral evidence which may come within the provisions of section 92, Evidence Act. Hence the decision of Newbould, J., is quite right.

JUDGMENT—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Newbould in a suit for arrears of rent. The terms of the contract of tenancy are embodied in a document dated the 10th February 1892, and called a barga kabuliyat; the value of the crops mentioned therein is stated to be Rs. 25 at the commencement of the instrument. The tenant undertook to cultivate the land and raise crops thereon, and covenanted as follows: "The crops that will be raised at any time on the said land shall be taken to your house, and after making over to you to your entire satisfaction half share thereof, as proprietor's share, I shall take the remaining half share. I shall cultivate, sow and weed and do other things. If I do not cultivate, the amount of crops in your share will be determined by a reference to the crops raised on neighbouring fields. I shall deliver to you the crops. If I neglect to deliver the said crops, I shall pay you Rs. 25 per annum on account of the value of the crops. If I fail to deliver the same you will be competent to realise the same by instituting suit in Court; any objection to the same taken by me shall not be entertained." The landlord has instituted this suit for recovery of the value of the crops for the Bengali year 1318, and seeks a decree according to the market price. The Court of First Instance held that the landlord was entitled to a decree at the rate of Rs. 25 per year as the value of the crops according to the terms of the contract. The Subordinate Judge took a contrary view, held that the plaintiff was entitled to the value of the crops according to the market rate, and remanded the case for a fresh investigation. On appeal to this Court the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been affirmed by Mr. Justice Newbould.

We are of opinion that upon a plain reading of the terms of the contract the tenant, if he neglects to deliver to his landlord, crops according to the terms of the instrument, becomes bound to pay Rs. 25 per annum on account of the value thereof. But on behalf of the plaintiff the argument has been advanced that this clause was inserted solely for purposes of registration of the document. This is, however, not so stated on the face of the instrument itself, and it has been pointed out repeatedly [Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal Mahapatra (6)] decided by Sanderson, C. J. and Mookerjee, J., on the 4th May 1916], that oral evidence is not admissible under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act to vary the terms of the contract contained in the document. The landlord has pressed upon the Court the consideration that if the construction put by the tenant be accepted the contract becomes obviously unreasonable. He argues that the value of the crops will vary from year to year according to their quality and quantity and that it is inconceivable that a reasonably prudent man would have accepted a contract of this character which entitles the landlord to a fixed sum of Rs. 25 only regardless of the quantity and quality of the crops actually raised in a particular year. It is well settled, however, that we cannot ignore the plain terms of the contract because they appear to us to be unreasonable; as Cockburn, C. J., observed in Stadhard v. Lee (?), if the terms are clear and unambiguous, the Court is bound to give effect to them without stopping to consider how far they may be reasonable or not. In the present case, however, there may have been good reasons why the parties should have entered into a contract of this nature; they may well have been anxious to avoid elaborate and expensive investigations as to the quality and quantity of crops raised in a particular year and the market-value thereof. But we are really not permitted to speculate about the possible intention and motive of the parties, we are concerned only with their intention as expressed by the words they have deliberately used, and it would be most dangerous to conjecture or guess at what might have been the intention of a man of average prudence. There can, in our opinion, be no doubt as to the meaning of this contract; when that has been ascertained, the landlord and the tenants are equally bound thereby.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the decree of the Court of First Instance restored with costs in all the Courts.

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Construction of document—Kabuliyat—Agreement to deliver half produce or pay fixed sum—Landlord's right to insist upon half produce.

A barga kabuliyat executed by the tenant-defendant provided that the tenant shall deliver every year at the house of the plaintiff at the proper time a moiety share, after measurement, of whatever crops are grown on the land and if the tenant does not deliver the same, then the landlord will be competent to realise a sum of Rs. 40 on account of value thereof by filing a law suit; and it further provided that if through default of the tenant in properly carrying on the cultivation, good crops are not grown, then the tenant shall deliver without objection such quantity of crops as would be in proportion to the output of the neighbouring lands:

Held, that the landlord was entitled to recover the value of half the crops raised on the land and was not bound to accept the sum of Rs. 40 as its equivalent. [p. 837, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 7th April 1194, modifying that of the Munsif, Madaripur, dated the 27th September 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerberty (with him Babus Rajendra Chandra Guha and Troilokhya Nath Ghose), for the Appellants, contended that upon a proper construction of the kabuliyat the plaintiff was entitled to the present market price of the crops. The kabuliyat being a barga kabuliyat, it should be held that the parties intended that the plaintiff should get half of the produce or its market-value.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.—The plaintiff could not go behind the clear terms of the contract. The Court could not proceed upon speculation. The fact that the kabuliyat was a barga kabuliyat did not make any difference at all. There was nothing to prevent the parties from agreeing that a fixed sum should be recovered by the plaintiff in case of failure of the defendants to deliver the crops. See Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), Atul Chandra Dutt v. Eson Ali (2), Sasi Bhusan Dey v. Umakanto Dey (3) and Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal Mahapatra (4) decided by Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., on 4th May 1916.

Babu Dwarkanath Chukerberty, in reply.—None of the reported cases is a case of a barga kabuliyat and in all of them the rent was a fixed quantity of paddy. This being a barga case the amount is variable.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of half the crops of the land in suit or only a money rent of Rs. 40 yearly from the defendant under a barga kabuliyat. The kabuliyat provides that the defendant shall, carrying on cultivation, deliver every year "at the house of the plaintiff at the proper time a moiety share after measurement of whatever crops are grown" on the land; and that if the defendant does not deliver the same, then the plaintiff will be "competent to realise a sum of Rs. 40 on account of value thereof by filing law suits." It further provides: "If through default of carrying on the tillage and cultivation ourselves or of maintenance and preservation thereof good crops are not grown, we shall deliver without objection such quantity of crops as would be in proportion to the output of the neighbouring lands. And if you so desire you shall be competent to wrest away the entire or portions of the land (from us) and let out the same to others." We think that the contract was to pay half the crops grown on the land, and not a sum of Rs. 40 a year. We have been referred to a number of cases, but none of them had to deal with a barga contract. In the cases cited before us, the quantity of paddy was fixed and a certain sum was agreed upon to be paid on default of payment of the produce rent, and it was held in some of the cases that upon the failure of the defendant to deliver the paddy, the landlord was entitled to realise only the amount stated in the lease as its price. Here the land was cultivated under a barga contract and the quantity of crops deliverable would vary in different years according to the crops raised. Moreover, the kabuliyat provides for payment of "such quantity of crops as would be in proportion to the output of the neighbouring lands," if good crops are not grown owing to the failure of the defendant in properly carrying on the cultivation. We may point out that the defendant, while denying the kabuliyat, pleaded that, in respect of lands cultivated under the barga system in the neighbourhood, the practice was to pay only a third share of jute and other fibre crops and a moiety share of other crops only. That shows how the barga system was understood by the defendants themselves.

There is no doubt that there was a stipulation that the plaintiff would be competent to realise Rs. 40 in case of non-payment of half the crops. But the subsequent clause provides for the payment of paddy in proportion to the produce of neighbouring lands if good crops are not grown owing to the failure of the defendants in properly carrying on the cultivation, and the construction that the parties intended the payment of a fixed sum of money is not consistent with the above clause or the other provisions of the document mentioned above. The question is one of construction of the document; and having regard to the nature of the barga contract and all the terms of the document, we are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of half the crops raised on the land. A similar view was taken in an unreported case, Basiruddi Chowdhuri v. Afsarannessa Bibi decided on 27th March 1916 by one of the members of this Bench.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that the value of half the crops may be determined and a decree passed accordingly. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Appeals from the decision of the District Judge, Shahabad.

Messrs. Purnenda Nath Sinha and Ram Persad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—These second appeals come before us from a decision of Mr. Rowland, sitting as District Judge of Shahabad, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Buxar, granting a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in these two appeals. The second appeals are Nos. 1362 and 1363 of 1916.

It appears that the villages of Kazipura and Dubouli adjoin. Dubouli and Narayanpur originally constituted one mahal and Kazipura another; and the main question for decision in this litigation is, what is the boundary existing between these two estates. A map has been produced and shown to us by the appellant. According to that map the appellant's contention is, that the northern boundary, as indicated upon the map, is the true boundary of Mauza Kazipura. For the respondents it is alleged that the southern boundary demarcated is the true boundary of Kazipura; and that, therefore the lands in suit falling outside the southern boundary form part of the holdings belonging to the respondents; and that they do not form part of the holdings claimed by the appellants. The appellants seek to recover in the case of Second Appeal No. 1362 of 1916 the plot marked upon the map Nos. 361, which appears to be a continuation of plot No. 34, which admittedly falls within Mauza Kazipura, and in Second Appeal No. 1363 of 1916 the plaintiff on behalf of himself and the other members of the joint family seeks to recover plots Nos. 357 to 360 and these plots apparently form the continuation of plots No. 3 which is admittedly within Mauza Kazipura. The plaintiffs say that they have been dispossessed by the defendants wrongfully from these plots; that these plot in dispute form part of their original holdings in Mauza Kazipura, and that they are not within the boundary nor do they form part of the village known as Dunouli.

The issue in this case was a simple one for decision. In support of the plaintiff's case certain judgments were referred to, which were the result of the litigation which had taken place between certain tenants on the one hand, and some proprietors upon the other, or between the tenants and tenants on these estates relative to what was the boundary of these two villages. These judgments supported the view that the northern boundary was the true boundary of Mauza Kazipura. These judgments were sought to be relied upon by the plaintiffs in support of their contention that the boundary they alleged was the true boundary of the village of Kazipura; and that these plots in suit fell within that boundary and consequently were a part of their property.

The learned Judge held, as I gather from his decision, that these judgments were not admissible in evidence and were not binding upon the defendants inasmuch as the defendants were not parties to the previous proceedings in which these judgments had been pronounced. We think that the learned Judge was wrong in so ruling; because, in our opinion, these judgments were admissible in evidence under the provisions of section 13 of the Evidence Act, inasmuch as they were pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction and contained a declaration that the same right as is now in dispute had been asserted and recognized in a Court of Law, and that, therefore, as between the plaintiffs in these suits and the defendants, they were evidence under the provisions of section 13. Authority for this proposition is contained in the ruling cited as Raja Ranjit Sinha Bahadur v. Basanta Kumar Ghose (1). Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in that case clearly recognised and laid down the law on facts very similar to the facts of the present appeals. Therefore in that view of the case it appears to us that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in point of law in excluding these judgments from its consideration as part of the evidence proper for the Court to consider.

Another matter which also leads us to the conclusion that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was unsatisfactory, is that the learned Munsif very carefully considered the documents of title which had been produced by the defendants and given in evidence for the purpose of showing that the southern boundary demarcated on the map was not the true boundary of Mauza Kazipura. The learned Munsif in a very exhaustive and careful judgment showed, that these documents of title, relied upon by the defendants, did not refer to the lands in dispute. The learned Judge on appeal in a very summary and unsatisfactory way disregarded the careful finding arrived at by the learned Munsif, without giving any intelligent reason for doing so. He simply says: "I do not agree with the lower Court that the documents relied upon by the defendants do not refer to the lands to which they are said to refer". Well the learned Judge should have expressly found whether the deeds in question did or did not refer to the lands in suit; to find that they merely did not refer is ambiguous, uncertain and unsatisfactory and not such a judgment as the law required that an Appellate Court should pronounce after due consideration of the whole evidence. It is true that the learned Judge says in his judgment that he can find no evidence on the record sufficient to enable him to hold that the entry in the Record of Rights has been rebutted. The Record of Rights does record the southern boundary indicated upon the map as the true boundary between these two estates; but the learned Judge has arrived at that finding disregarding the evidence of the judgments which I have already referred to. If he had carefully considered these judgments and weighed them, he might have found that there was sufficient evidence before him to enable him to hold that the Record of Rights was not conclusive and binding between the parties. Therefore we consider that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is so unsatisfactory that in the interests of all parties it is desirable that these appeals should be allowed, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and that we should remand the case for re-hearing by the District Judge. The appellants who have appeared before us have succeeded. Consequently they will be entitled to their costs of these appeals. The respondents Nos. 6 and 7 in Second Appeal No. 1362 of 1916 and Nos. 16 and 17 in Second Appeal No. 1363 of 1916 appear. As against them the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the action; and it is very hard to know why they came here at all. But inasmuch as it may be possible on this remand that they will be found to be liable jointly with the other defendants, we direct that their costs of these appeals will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XLVII, r. 1—Application falling within s. 47 purporting to be under O. XLVII, r. 1—Form of application—Appeal.

On an application purporting to be made by the decree-holder certifying satisfaction of the decretal amount and asking for the dismissal of the execution case, the Munsif dismissed the case. Thereafter the decree-holder put in two other petitions questioning the genuineness of the application certifying satisfaction of the decree, and asking that the order passed thereon should be cancelled and the execution case allowed to proceed. The Munsif on an enquiry dismissed both the petitions on the finding that the decretal money had really been paid:

Held, that although the words "Order XLVII, rule 1" were to be found in the decree-holder's petitions and in the order sheet, yet having regard to their substance they must be treated as applications under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, so that an appeal did lie to the District Judge from the Munsif's order of dismissal. [p. 841, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the District Judge, Khulna, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 41 of 1916.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee (with him Babu Lal Mohan Ghose), for the Petitioners.—The appeal to the District Judge was directed against the order of the Munsif on an application which was one for review under Order XLVII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code. I submit that no appeal lay against an order dismissing an application for review. Refers to Order XLVII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge was wrong in allowing the appeal holding that the order appealed against was an order on an application made in execution of the decree under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The order appealed against was in fact an order of dismissal on an application under Order XLVII, rule 1.

Then on the merits also the opposite party has no case. The judgment of reversal passed by the District Judge is based on surmises, theories and probabilities of the case. It does not proceed on the evidence on the record, evidence which has been thoroughly discussed by the learned Munsif who disposed of the application on a due consideration of all the evidence on the record. On the merits also there has been a gross miscarriage of justice, so I can ask your Lordships to interfere in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Banku Behary Mullick Chowdhury), for the Opposite Party.—The question raised on behalf of the petitioner is rather a question of form than one of substance. The application appealed against was rightly treated by the learned Judge as an application in execution of a decree within the meaning of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The application was obviously not one under Order XLVII, rule 1. There is no substance in this objection on the technical point.

Then on the merits, the learned District Judge was quite competent to alter the findings arrived at by the First Court and he was quite right in doing so. This is not a fit case for your Lordships' interference in revision.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The opposite party obtained a rent decree against the petitioners, and applied for execution by sale of the holding. The holding was advertised for sale on July 19, 1915. On July 16, 1915, however, a petition was filed purporting to be made by the decree-holder, certifying that he had received payment in full and asking for the execution case to be dismissed. On July 19, 1915, the learned Munsif dismissed the case on full satisfaction. On July 24, 1915, the decree-holder put in a petition saying that he had not received the money, that the certificate was a forgery, and asking for sanction to be granted under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, or a prosecution ordered under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. Again on August 6, 1915, the decree-holder put in two petitions asking that the order passed on July 19 should be cancelled and that the execution case should be allowed to proceed. On these petitions the Court held an enquiry into the circumstances, and on February 19, 1916, both petitions were dismissed, on the finding that the money had really been paid. The decree-holder appealed, and the learned District Judge reversed the finding of the Munsif and ordered execution to proceed.

The judgment-debtors obtained this Rule calling on the decree-holder to show cause why the order of the District Judge should not be set aside.

On behalf of the petitioners it is urged that the applications of August 6, 1915, must have been made under Order XLVII and that no appeal lay against an order rejecting them. It is also said that the only remedies open to the decree-holder were an application for review of judgment, and an appeal against the order dismissing the application for execution on full satisfaction.

The decree-holder did not take the latter alternative, and I cannot understand how it would have been possible for him to appeal against an order which prima facie was made with his full consent, with no material on the record by which he could challenge its correctness. It seems to me clear that it was his duty to ask the Court of First Instance for an enquiry about the genuineness of the petition filed on July 15, and that is the step he took. No doubt the words "Order XLVII, rule 1" are to be found in his application and in the order sheet, but that is of no moment: We have to look at the substance of his applications. Now he did not allege that the Munsif had made a mistake, he did not offer new and important evidence to be considered with the other materials on which the order was passed, but he went to the root of the matter, and attacked the petition of satisfaction which formed the sole basis of the order. I fail to see how an application of this nature can be regarded as an application for a review of judgment. It is one which would have taken the form of a suit but for the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and I regard it as an application under that section. It follows that an appeal did lie to the District Judge.

The learned Vakil has conceded, very properly, that having regard to the findings of fact recorded by the learned Judge he cannot press the petition on the merits.

The Rule, therefore, is discharged with costs, five gold mohurs.

BEACHECROFT, J.—I agree.

Landlord and tenant—Mortgagee of lease-hold interest, liability of, for rent to lessor—Privity of estate—Privity of contract—Sub-lessees, rights and liabilities of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 57, 65 (d) and 108 (j).

A mortgagee with possession of a lease-hold interest is not liable to the lessor for rent on the English doctrine of privity of estate. [p. 842, col. 1.]

It was not the intention of the Legislature by enacting section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act to bring the sub-lessee and the mortgagee from the lessee into direct relations with the lessor. Mere possession, in the absence of privity of estate, will not make the mortgagee liable to the lessor. [p. 844, col. 1.]

Monica Kitheria Saldanha v. Subraya Hebbara, 10 M. 410; 17 M. L. J. 258; 2 M. L. T. 363; Kannye Loll Sett v. Nistoriny Dossee, 10 C. 443; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 298, distinguished.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Privity of estate is a technical term of English Law and, under that law, no such privity arises unless the whole of the lessee's interest is assigned over. Where a subsidiary interest is carved out of the lessee's interest, no fresh privity arises. For instance, there is no privity of estate between a lessor and a sub-lessee. In India under section 57 of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgage of a lease-hold interest is not an out and out transfer of the mortgagor's interest, and, therefore, on the English doctrine no privity of estate can arise. [p. 842, col. 1.]

One effect of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act is that the lessee does not cease to be liable on the lease by reason only of an out and out assignment, but he will, as in England, cease to be liable if the lessor accepts rent from the assignee and thereby creates a privity of contract between himself and the assignee. The liabilities of the transferee arise in India, as in England, on and by reason of the transfer, and do not depend on the question whether the transferee has obtained possession. [p. 842, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—Section 65 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act deals only with the rights and liabilities of the mortgagor and the mortgagee as between themselves. The rights and liabilities as between the mortgagor and his lessor are regulated by section 108 (j). [p. 844, col. 2.]

Privity of contract is personal privity and extends only to the person of the lessor and the person of the lessee, and the mere creation of a mortgage by the latter does not create a personal privity between the lessor and the mortgagee. [p. 844, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat, in Appeal Suit No. 211 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1912.

Mr. K. R. Subramania Sastri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyangar and T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The question raised in this appeal is whether mortgagees with possession from lessees are liable to the lessor for rent. The Subordinate Judge has held that they are liable on the ground that privity of estate exists between them. In this I think he is clearly wrong. Privity of estate is a technical term of English Law, and it is clear that under that law no such privity arises unless the whole of the lessee's interest is assigned over. Where a subsidiary interest is carved out of the lessee's interest, no fresh privity arises. For instance, there is no privity of estate between a lessor and a sub-lessee. Where the lessee mortgages his whole lease-hold interest, privity arises in English Law, because there the mortgage is by conveyance with a right to a reconveyance, and, therefore, the whole interest of the lessee is assigned to his mortgagee; but, as this is not considered a desirable state of things, conveyancers prevent such privity of estate from arising by making the mortgage by way of sub-lease of something less than the whole interest of the lessee. In India a mortgage such as this is not an out and out transfer of the mortgagor's interest (section 58, Transfer of Property Act) and, therefore, on the English doctrine, no privity of estate can arise.

We have, however, to consider the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as to leases which should be followed in India in preference to English decisions, even where it does not in terms apply, as to agricultural leases. Section 108 (j) provides: "The lessee may transfer absolutely or by way of mortgage or sub-lease the whole or any part of his interest in the property The lessee shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease." One effect of this provision is, that the lessee does not cease to be liable on the lease by reason only of an out and out assignment, but he will, as in England, cease to be liable if the lessor accepts rent from the assignee and thereby creates a privity of contract between them. It is also to be noted that the liabilities of the transferee arise, as in England, on and by reason of the transfer, and do not depend on the question whether the transferee has obtained possession. Monica Kitheria Saldanha v. Subraya Hebbara (1), Randipurazil Kunhisow v. Alukandiyil Parkum Mulloli Chathu (2). If the transfer is absolute, it has been held that the transferee becomes liable to the lessor, Kunhanujan v. Anjelu (3), as in that case, privity of estate arises under the English decisions. The section, however, says nothing about privity of estate, and the question really is, what is the intention of the Legislature as regards transfers by the lessee by way of mortgage in the Indian form or by sub-lease, in which cases there would clearly according to the English decisions be no privity of estate on which the liability could be rested. The case of Kunhanujan v. Anjelu (3) does not afford much assistance, for that was a case of an assignment or absolute transfer of the lease, and all that was held was that there was nothing in the section to prevent the transferee being liable on the doctrine of privity of estate as in England. It is quite another thing to hold that in the case of a mortgage or sub-lease by the lessee the transferee becomes liable directly to the lessor, as such liability cannot be based on any recognized doctrine of privity of estate. The decision in Kannye Loll Sett v. Nistoring Dossee (4) appears to have proceeded on the footing that the mortgage in that case amounted to an assignment or transfer of the lease-hold interest in which case privity of estate would arise, and is of no assistance in the present case, where the transfer by mortgage did not amount to an assignment or out and out transfer. This is clearly pointed out by Farrar, C. J., in Timmappa

Kuppaya v. Rama Venkanna Naik (5), where, however, as has been pointed out in Vithal Narayan v. Shriram Savant (6), the word contract both in the head-note and the judgment is a slip, what was meant being not privity of contract but privity of estate. "A sub-lease differs from the assignment of a lease in that it creates no privity of contract (read, estate) between the sub-tenant and the landlord. The landlord has to deal with his lessee and not with the sub-tenants of the latter. The English authorities show conclusively that a landlord putting an end by a proper notice to the tenancy of his tenant thereby determines the estate of the under-tenants of the latter. This is undoubted law". Later on the learned Judge observes: "An assignee of a lease is of course in a different position, for he is brought by his assignment into direct relations with the landlord" that is to say, in the language of the English Law, that privity of estate arises between them. It appears clear that the learned Chief Justice did not consider that, in India, sub-lessees could be sued for rent by the lessor under section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act or for any other reason. To so hold, would be a very serious innovation. We cannot hold that in India the mortgagee in possession is to be directly liable to the lessor for rent without applying the same doctrine to the sub-lessee. Both are governed by the same section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act, and, if actual possession of the land is to make the one liable for rent, it must also be the case with the other. It was no doubt held in Vithal Narayan v. Shriram Savant (6) that a mortgagee of a lease-hold interest if in possession is liable for rent to the mortgagor; and one reason given is that the distinction between legal and equitable estates does not exist in India. As already pointed out, it is owing to that distinction that in England a legal mortgagee of lease is held liable for rent to the lessor where the mortgage is an assignment creating privity of estate, but an equitable mortgagee is not so liable; and to avoid this untoward consequence, it is usual to create a legal mortgage by way not of an assignment having this effect, but by way of sub-lease of something less than the lessee's interest so that no privity of estate and no liability on the part of the mortgagee arises. This is the invariable practice as stated in the standard works of Coote, Fisher and Robbins. The decision in Kannye Loll Sett v. Nistoriny Dossee (4) proceeded, as already pointed out, on the view that the mortgage was an out and out assignment of the lease, which it is not in the present case or ordinarily in India. The judgment of Lord Mansfield in Eaton v. Jaques (7) which was also referred to is, if anything, an authority the other way. What Lord Mansfield held was, that the mortgagee of a lease-hold interest, even when the mortgage was by way of assignment of the whole term, was not liable for rent by virtue of privity of estate, unless he obtained possession as well, a point on which he was overruled by ten Judges in Williams v. Bosanquet (8). Both cases, however, proceed upon the view that the mortgagee is not liable at all to the lessor unless the mortgage be by way of assignment of the term. "All this", Lord Mansfield observed, "arises from a mere slip in the attorney, in making the conveyance; for if he had made it an under-lease, by leaving a reversion of a day in the mortgagor, the landlord would have had no pretext to call upon the mortgagee". It is thus clear that what Lord Mansfield was arguing against was the mortgagee being held liable unless there were both privity of estate and possession, and that his judgment is no authority for the position that possession in the absence of privity of estate will make the mortgagee liable. See also Cox v. Bishop (9) and Ananda Chandra Roy v. Syed Abdulla Hossein (10). I am, therefore, of opinion with great respect that the authorities referred to in Vithal Narayan v. Shriram Savant (6) do not support the decision. No such liability is imposed by English Law on sub-lessees or on mortgagees from lessees either, except as pointed out by Lord Mansfield owing to the mere slip of an attorney, and if it is to be imposed in India, it must be by virtue of section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act and not by virtue of possession. The latter part of the section shows that sub-leases and mortgages created by the lessee do not affect the rights of the lessor against the lessee, still less do they affect the rights of lessee against his sub-lessee or mortgagee. There appears to be no sufficient reason for supposing that it was the intention of the Legislature by this section to bring the sub-lessee and the mortgagee from the lessee into direct relations with the lessor. I read the judgment of Farran, C. J., in Timmappa Kuppaya v. Rama Venkanna Naik (5) as holding that it had no such effect as regards sub-lessees, and can see no reason for applying a different rule to mortgagees from the lessee. To hold otherwise would, it need hardly be pointed out, introduce all sorts of complications as to apportionment, notice to quit, etc. For these reasons I think the lower Courts were wrong and would modify the decree by dismissing the suit as against the appellant and defendants Nos. 8 and 9 with costs throughout.

SPENCER, J.—I concur. The only case in which a mortgagee of a lease-hold interest in India becomes after entering into possession liable to pay the rent, appears to be where his possession is attributable to his having obtained a decree for foreclosure, the reason being that in such a case the lessee parts with the whole of his interest, and the entire interests both of the lessee and of the mortgagee become by operation of law merged in the person of the latter, vide Macnaghten v. Bheekaree Singh (11) and Ananda Chandra Roy v. Syed Abdulla Hossein (10).

Here the defendants Nos. 7 to 9, who are mere transferees of a kanom interest, are clearly possessed of something less than the anubhavam interest under the lease in favour of 1 to 6 defendants' predecessors. Consequently, the agreement in Exhibits III, IV and VII between the lessees and the mortgagees and their assignees inter se, that the mortgagees should pay the michavaram or rent, will not affect the right of the lessor to look to his lessees for the recovery of his rent, and to them alone. Even if the mortgage document were silent as to the rent, section 65 (d), Transfer of Property Act, provides that the mortgagor shall pay the rent reserved by the lease so long as the mortgagee is out of possession of the mortgaged property, which may be read as implying that the mortgagee should pay it if he gets into possession. But this section deals only with the rights and liabilities of the mortgagor and the mortgagee as between themselves. The rights and liabilities as between the mortgagor and his lessor are regulated by section 108 (j).

The Subordinate Judge who heard the first appeal observed that there was not only privity of estate but privity of contract also. He has given no reasons for his opinion, but simply states that plaintiff can enforce the provision in his favour in Exhibit VII though he was not a party to it. Privity of contract is personal privity and extends only to the person of the lessor and to the person of the lessee [vide Walker's case (12)].

It has not been suggested that there is any foundation in the records of this case for a personal privity existing between the lessor and the mortgagees.

The appellant is entitled to succeed in his appeal with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

On an application made for a decree absolute in a suit to enforce a mortgage security by way of sale, the Court cannot take cognizance of the payment to the mortgagee out of Court of the amount awarded by the preliminary decree, which has not been certified to the Court under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 18th May 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, Barham-pore, dated the 22nd September 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Anilendra Nath Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellants.—There is no bar in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 which prevented the Court, to which the application for decree absolute was made, from taking cognizance of the plea of payment raised by the defendant-appellant. Under Order XXI, rule 2 of Act V of 1908, it is only the executing Court which cannot recognize the fact of payment. But in this case the Court to which the application for decree absolute was made was not an executing Court. Having regard to the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, the Court ought to have taken cognizance of the fact of payment. Moreover, under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, at least for the ends of justice, the Court should have taken into consideration the plea of payment made out of Court. It would be a great hardship to the mortgagor judgment-debtors if they be not allowed to raise any such plea.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against a judgment of the learned District Judge of Murshidabad, dated the 18th May 1914, reversing the decision of the Munsif at Barhampore. The appeal is preferred in the main against a decree absolute made in a suit to enforce a mortgage security by way of sale. The defendants are now in the shoes of the mortgagors who were their predecessors-in-title. The plaintiffs are the sons of the original mortgagee. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs to enforce the mortgage and, on the 10th August 1908, a preliminary decree for Rs. 130 was made by the First Court. An application was then made on the 8th April 1911 for a decree absolute and the decree was made absolute ex parte on the 6th May 1911. Subsequently, that ex parte decree was set aside and the case was brought on for re-hearing. The case set up by the defendants who are now the mortgagors was that more than three years ago they had paid the whole of the amount awarded by the preliminary decree out of Court to the plaintiffs. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that, as the payment had not been certified to the Court, under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, the Court could not recognize it. Against that the present appeal has been brought.

Under the terms of Order XXXIV, Code of Civil Procedure, the scheme stated generally is that, in a suit to enforce a mortgage, the money payable to the mortgagee under a decree for foreclosure or sale or redemption should, in the first instance, be paid into Court and the method of payment to the mortgagee as is authorised by the Transfer of Property Act has been abolished. In a suit for sale, as appears from Order XXXIV, rule 5, when on the day fixed the defendant pays the amount into Court, the Court shall pass a decree as mentioned in that rule; but when such payment is not made into Court on or before the day fixed, the Court shall, on an application made by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold. Therefore, in passing the final decree, the Court has no discretion except to follow the statutory form of the decree when no payment has been made into Court as mentioned in Order XXXIV, rule 5, and the only other matter that there can be is that the Court may hold that the suit has been adjusted under Order XXI, rule 2, Code of Civil Procedure. It is said that any other Court not being an executing Court can recognize an uncertified payment made out of Court. I am not prepared to agree with that. It seems to me that the whole of the provisions of the law providing a certification either by the decree-holder or by the judgment-debtor within the period within which the certification is to be made would be rendered nugatory, if a defendant in a suit years after, when the evidence would neither be fresh nor perhaps available, is allowed to come forward and say that he has satisfied this preliminary decree out of Court three years ago by paying the money to the plaintiff. It seems to me that it will be opposed both to the terms of the Civil Procedure Code and also to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act. The view that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court took was, I think, correct. I am not prepared to disagree with the reasons that have been given and are to be found in a judgment of my own in another case. That was a case under the Transfer of Property Act and the procedure under the provisions of Order XXXIV is essentially different from the procedure in a mortgage suit under the terms of the repealed sections of the Transfer of Property Act. I think the learned District Judge was clearly right in the conclusion he arrived at, that the Court could not recognize this payment which is said to have been made out of Court. The appeal, therefore, in my opinion, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SMITHER, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 160

OF 1916.

February 22, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and

SUBBA PILLAI—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

*versus*RANGASAMI alias THIRUMALASAMY

MUDALI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 107 (2), 146, O. XXII, rr. 10, 11, O. XLIII, r. 1 (1)—Devolution of interest pending suit—Application under O. XXII, r. 10, after decree, maintainability of—Appeal, right of, by person acquiring interest who was no party to decree appealed against—Merits of appeal—Court, duty of—Mortgage—Title of mortgagor decreed against in suit wherein mortgagee not impleaded—Appeal, right of, by mortgagee who purchased in Court auction.

Order XXII, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to cases wherein the new party alleging acquisition of an interest takes action after the decree and before the appeal against it is begun. The discretion of the Court to allow or refuse the substitution of a new party under the rule should be exercised only in connection with pending proceedings in which the material considerations of immediate convenience are within its knowledge. The new party cannot apply, under the rule, to be impleaded only for the purpose of preferring an appeal against a concluded decree. [p. 847, col. 1.]

The appeal can, however, be entertained under section 146, Civil Procedure Code, if the merits are in favour of the appellant, so that substantial justice may not be defeated. [p. 847, col. 2.]

Where the title of a mortgagor to the mortgaged property is negatived by a decree in a suit to which the mortgagee is not a party and the mortgagee, who purchases the property in execution of a decree for enforcement of the security, is resisted in taking possession and driven to instituting a fresh suit to establish his mortgage, he can be permitted to appeal against the decree as representing the mortgagor or his representatives against whom the decree was passed. [p. 847, col. 2.]

The High Court can, to meet substantial justice, treat an appeal presented to it as a revision petition where technical objections as to adequacy of Court-fees etc., prevent its entertaining the appeal. [p. 847, col. 2.]

Mr. N. Rajagopalachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this appeal is of some difficulty. But the answer is not of much importance because it is clear on which side justice lies, and our powers will enable us to secure it.

Appellant purchased certain property at a sale held in execution of his own decree on a mortgage. But, when he attempted to take possession, he was obstructed by the present respondents Nos. 3, 4 and 5 and was referred to a suit under Order XXI, rule 103, of the Code of Civil Procedure. That suit he has brought. But respondents Nos. 3, 4 and 5 are also defendants in Original Suit No. 27 of 1914. It was brought only by the present 1st and 2nd respondents, alleged by plaintiff to be the successors-in-title of his mortgagor, and was dismissed whilst appellant's possession proceedings were pending. Against this dismissal he presented an appeal and with it an application purporting to be under section 107 (2) and Order XXII, rules 10, 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, asking for the addition of his name as a plaintiff in Original Suit No. 27 of 1914 and for permission to appeal against the decree therein. The lower Court dismissed the appeal, because it also passed an order against appellant on the petition. He now appeals against that order.

The appeal is opposed, first, on the ground that the lower Court's order cannot be regarded as passed under Order XXII, rule 10, and, therefore, is not appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (l). This is supported by the wording of the former rule "during the pendency of the suit" and "suit", which must for the present purpose be read with reference to rule 11 as "during the pendency of the appeal" and "appeal," the inference being that the procedure is inapplicable to cases of devolution, in which the new party takes action after the decree and before the appeal was begun. This view was expressed obiter in Collector of Muzaffarnagar v. Husaini Begam (1), and the differences between the relevant provisions of this and the former Codes are not sufficient to deprive that and other cases to be referred to of authority. The fact that the wording of Order XXII, rule 10, excludes its application to cases such as the present, may be explained on the ground that the investiture of the Court with discretion to allow or refuse the substitution of a new party is necessary only in connection with pending proceedings in which the material considerations of immediate convenience are within its knowledge. We hold that Order XXII, rule 10, and Order XLIII, rule 1 (L), are inapplicable.

The question is next whether the appeal is altogether incompetent and, if it is so, whether we can interfere on appellant's behalf, if the merits of his case would justify our doing so. As the order against him was not passed under Order XXII, rule 10, it was not one which he was bound to ask for under that provision; and, if he was entitled to prosecute the appeal at all, he could do so only by presenting it, stating the character in which he did so, and submitting his right to do so to adjudication at the hearing. This right to carry on the proceedings, if he could establish his position, was entailed by section 146; and Order XXII, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure being inapplicable, no method by which he could do so, other than that specified, has been suggested.
(1) 18 A. 86; A. W. N. (1895) 232; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 763.

The objection then relied on is, however, that appellant, not having appealed against the dismissal of his substantive appeal, cannot have it displaced in these proceedings. But to this there are two answers. His mistake as to his remedy was not pointed out by the lower Court or respondents before it; and the foregoing expression of our opinion would probably enable him to apply successfully for a review of the dismissal. Or more directly (and this is the course we take) we can adopt the principle of the decisions in Indo Mati v. Gaya Prasad (2) and Motiram v. Kundan Lal (3) and treat the order rejecting the application as one finally determining appellant's rights and as including the dismissal of the appeal, which it entailed. The absence of any formal prayer for the grant of relief against the dismissal and of a properly stamped appeal memorandum have been relied on; but the circumstances would, in our opinion, justify the use of our powers of revision and it would be futile to insist on payment of additional duty, refund of which would be obligatory on our order of remand being passed. We, therefore, consider, next, whether such an order would be justified on the merits.

It is not denied that appellant was the purchaser at Court sale of the property, which is in dispute in Original Suit No. 27 of 1914 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly, against the decree in which he desires to appeal. His right to it is contested in two distinct ways. Firstly, as 3rd, 4th and 5th respondents' counter-statement in the lower Court shows, they deny that the mortgage sued on by appellant, his decree or his purchase is valid against them. Secondly, they deny that his mortgagor or 1st and 2nd respondents' legal representatives had any right in the mortgaged property. The latter contention was adjudicated on in Original Suit No. 27. The former is in issue for the first time in the suit lately filed by appellant, Original Suit No. 28 of 1916; and he must, no doubt, secure its rejection, if he is to be allowed to represent respondents Nos. 1 and 2. As to his prospects of doing so, no assumption is at present permissible. It is clear only that his doing so would entail his right to appeal as respondents Nos. 1 and 2 could have done, and that, apart from the possibility of the decision against them becoming res judicata against him, the question whether he can establish his right must be considered.

Taking this view, we set aside the lower Court's orders dismissing appellant's petition and appeal and remand them for re-admission and disposal in the light of the foregoing. The lower Court will pass a formal order of dismissal on the petition, since its presentation was unnecessary. It will admit the appeal and, if respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 4 desire it to do so, will consider whether appellant has a right to present it, either itself enquiring into his right or, as may be more convenient, postponing its decision regarding it, until the result of Original Suit No. 28 of 1916 is known. Costs to date will be costs in the case.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 126, 108 (8)— Joint estate—Each co-sharer realising rent from each tenant according to his share—Ejectment—Notice.

The mere fact that each of the co-sharers in an estate, which is joint within the meaning of section 126 (1) of the Oudh Rent Act, collects from each tenant his quota of rent according to his share does not authorise any of the co-sharers alone to eject a tenant by notice, unless a custom is established to that effect.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated the 8th January 1916, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Rae Bareli, dated the 31st May 1915.

The Hon'ble Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for the Appellant.

Babu Gaya Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is not a very easy case. The estate is a joint one under section 126 (1) of the Oudh Rent Act, and section 126 (2) is not applicable. The defendant, Muhammad Yakub, has a two-annas share, his brother has another two-annas share, one Musammât Azizunnissa has four annas, and the Court of Wards has eight annas. It is admitted that each of the co-sharers collects from each tenant his quota of the rent according to his share. No local custom is established, although we find that in one particular case the Court of Wards sued for the resumption of half of a rent-free holding and Muhammad Yakub and the remaining co-sharers sued for resumption of the other half. The Court deciding that suit very wisely treated the two suits together and assessed rent on the rent-free holding, declaring that each of the plaintiffs was entitled to half the rent. This does not help very much, save that it shows that Muhammad Yakub in that particular case did not set up a claim to act on behalf of the sixteen-annas co-sharers as he does in the present case. The unreported decision of the Board on Petition No. 5 of 1905-06, Gajraj Singh v. Maharaj Udai Partab Narain Singh relates to rather a different set of circumstances. In that case also the co-shares collected their quota of rent from each tenant, but the Maharaja as lambardar granted leases to and ejected tenants. The other unreported case, Petition No. 112 of 1914-15, referred to by the respondent does not help, because there was a village custom proved in that case. On the whole I am not satisfied that the lower Courts took a wrong view of the law and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The plaintiff in this suit was a creditor of the defendant. He obtained a decree for Rs. 5,000 against the defendant on the 2nd July 1915. On the 27th September 1915 the plaintiff applied for leave to issue execution on foot of the decree which he had already obtained. The defendant was possessed of two denominations of property lot No. 1. being a 5-annas 4-pies share of Mouza Kurmawan and lot No. 2 being a 2-annas 8-pies share of Mouza Hasanpur. The decree-holder valued lot No. 1 at Rs. 2,000 and lot No. 2 at Rs. 500. Matters proceeded, and sometime prior to January 1916, the sale proclamation had issued. On the 21st January 1916 the judgment-debtor filed a petition alleging that the valuation stated in the sale proclamation was erroneous; that it was far too low, and the property was of greater value. The judgment-debtor suggested that the value of lot No. 1 was Rs. 40,000 and the value of lot No. 2 was Rs. 3,000. In that petition no suggestion was made by the defendant directly or indirectly that the sale proclamation which had been issued had not been properly served; and, as far as I can trace, no attempt was made at any time to suggest any defect in the service of the sale proclamation, prior to the application that was made under Order XXI, rule 90, to set aside the sale that took place on the 18th July 1916. The learned Subordinate Judge disposed of the defendant's application with regard to the question of valuation, and directed that the value of the property specified by the decree-holder and by the judgment-debtor should be set forth in the proclamation, and this was done and by consent of the parties no fresh sale proclamation was issued. On the 15th May 1916 the judgment-debtor prayed for two weeks' time, waiving, as he stated in his petition, "any objection as to irregularity and inadequacy of price," and asking that the sale might not take place until the 31st May 1916. Accordingly that application was granted, and the date of sale was fixed for the 31st May 1916. On this date the defendant in his petition again recognised the validity of the sale proclamation; and raised no objection as to service and waived all objection as to any irregularity that might exist as to the manner in which the valuation was stated in the proclamation. The defendant further applied on the 1st June under Order XXI, rule 83, for further time to enable him to pay off the decretal sum that was due to the plaintiff. This application was also granted; and time was given up to the 26th June 1916. On the 26th June 1916 a further application for time was made by the judgment-debtor asking that the sale might again be postponed and the defendant might be granted time to enable him to pay off the decretal sum. This application the learned Judge also granted, and the sale was finally postponed to the 18th July 1916. On that date the judgment-debtor-defendant was unable to find or raise the money to pay off the plaintiff's decree, and accordingly the sale took place, and the plaintiff-decree-holder became the purchaser at the sum of Rs. 5,000 for lot No. 1 and Rs. 980 for lot No. 2. Each application for adjournment was granted and in consideration of the adjournment being granted, the defendant averred that he would raise no objection as to any irregularity in connection with the issue of a fresh sale proclamation after the valuation had been revised, in the manner which I have stated, in March 1916. It would be quite impossible to hold that the defendant had not completely waived and abandoned his right to have a fresh sale proclamation issued. His conduct was only inconsistent with his waiving the necessity of a fresh sale proclamation after the 11th of March 1916. Therefore, so far as that matter is relied upon as an irregularity for impeaching the sale that was effected it is utterly without substance or foundation. The only other irregularity which is suggested is, that the notice of the proclamation was not duly served. This point, as I have already stated, was not taken at any time prior to the application which was made before the learned Judge to set aside the sale on the 16th August 1916; and it appears to us from the evidence and the admission contained in the judgment-debtor's first petition that the proclamation was duly served in the ordinary way prescribed by the rules; and in respect of that contention the defendant has no ground for objection. The present application was made on the 16th August 1916 to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity which caused the defendant-judgment-debtor substantial injury; and the two grounds alleged to support his application are, firstly, the material irregularity in setting forth the valuation of the property, and secondly, the non-service of the notice of the proclamation. The learned Judge considered the matter very carefully and he came to the conclusion that the defendant had no ground for complaint whatsoever; that he was shown every consideration; that he had waived expressly the necessity of any fresh sale proclamation being issued in March, and that in point of fact notice had been duly served. In the view that the learned Subordinate Judge took and the decision at which he arrived, I think he was perfectly correct. We are satisfied that the sale proclamation was duly served and that no irregularity can be relied upon in respect of the non-issue of a fresh sale proclamation. It is stated that it was wrong in effect to have stated two separate valuations in the proclamation, the decree-holder's valuation and the judgment-debtor's valuation. I do not think that it was wrong. Mr. Krishna Sahai relies upon it as an irregularity, having regard to the recent decision of this Court in the Full Bench case reported as Raghunath Singh v. Hazari Sahu (1), but at the time that the learned Judge did enter the two valuations in the proclamation it appears that it was thought to be the practice recognised for some time in this province and occasionally acted upon by some and not by others. Therefore, I do not think that there was any irregularity at all; but in this respect apart from that, assuming that there was an irregularity, in my opinion the judgment-debtor has completely waived this point as a valid ground of objection. It is essential for the judgment-debtor, in order to succeed in an application under Order XXI, to show that the inadequacy of the prices stated in the sale proclamation was caused in consequence of the irregularity. There is not a scintilla of evidence on the record to suggest that the failure to issue a fresh sale proclamation in any way caused an inadequacy of bidding at the sale, or that the judgment-debtor was prejudiced in any way whatsoever by any material irregularity in the publishing and conduct of the sale. In my opinion there was no irregularity and this application must, therefore, be dismissed with costs, measured at three gold mohurs.

Defendants, agents of a German firm, contracted on 25th August 1914 to deliver to plaintiff at Madura certain casks of dye in 3 instalments of 2 casks each 'to be delivered on arrival of the steamers, one lot of two casks to be delivered each time at Rs. 501-4-0 for each cask.' The defendants were not to be responsible if the steamers did not come to Madras or Tuticorin, the port for Madura, where the goods were to be consigned. One of the steamers, Barenfels, left Hamburg and Antwerp before the outbreak of war but before it could arrive, war had broken out and the Commercial Intercourse with Enemies Ordinance was in force. The Barenfels and her cargo were captured in October 1914 and condemned by the Prize Court. She was, however, subsequently released and allowed to proceed on her voyage to Colombo. The defendants were precluded from taking delivery of the goods, unless they deposited a sum amounting to twice the invoice value of the goods. In an action for damages for breach of contract against the defendants:

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell in the exercise of the Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in Civil Suit No. 229 of 1915.

Messrs. Grant and Greateorex, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Short, Bewes & Co., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for breach of contract entered into between the plaintiffs who are merchants at Ambur and the defendants who were importers of German dyes to Madras and Tuticorin, entered into on the 25th August 1914 after the outbreak of the war, by which the defendants undertook to deliver certain casks of dye from the lot to arrive per SS. Steinturn and certain other casks from what is described as the "Bombay lot" meaning the lot imported by the defendants at Bombay. The contract went on to stipulate for three deliveries of two casks, each of the weight and description mentioned, "to be delivered on arrival of other steamers, one lot of two casks to be delivered each time at the above-mentioned rate, i.e., Rs. 501-4-0 for each cask. We are not responsible for the supply of goods if steamers do not come to Madras or Madura."

The evidence shows that the defendants had arranged for consignments by successive steamers, and having regard to this we have no doubt that what the defendants understood to deliver was two casks of the required description arriving in the ordinary course in successive steamers consigned to the defendants at Madras or Tuticorin, the port for Madura. In the case of Tuticorin, the ship either touched at Tuticorin or landed the goods at Colombo for transhipment. One of the steamers, Barenfels, had left Hamburg and Antwerp before the outbreak of war and, according to the evidence, should have arrived in Madras about the 17th August in the ordinary course. On the date of the contract she was overdue, and the defendant says he did not know what had happened to her. She did arrive ultimately in May 1916, and the first contention of the learned Advocate-General was, that under the contract on the arrival of the Barenfels the defendants became bound to make delivery even if the goods were not on board, citing Hale v. Rawson (1). In that case which was an action for failure to deliver tallow on the arrival of a certain steamship, it was held that they were not relieved for their obligation because it turned out the ship had no tallow on board. Here, we think, it is clear from the language of Exhibit A and having regard to the course of business and the stipulation as to the non-arrival of the steamers, that the defendants were only bound to make deliveries out of the lots consigned to the defendants in the ordinary course of business by the steamers referred to and arriving therein, and that they were not bound to make any such delivery on the arrival of the steamer without having on board any such goods consigned to the defendants. This being the interpretation of the contract, as the goods had not arrived before the coming into force of the proclamation of the 9th September 1914 against trading with the enemy, the effect of that proclamation was to render the further performance of the contract illegal, as it would admittedly have been impossible for the defendants to take up the goods and pay for them, and to put an end to the contract, Karberg (Arnhold) & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jaurdain & Co. (2).

The case may also be disposed of on another ground. The Barenfels and her cargo were captured in October 1914 as prize of war and taken into Alexandria for condemnation, and they were subsequently condemned as prize of war in September 1915, a condemnation which related back and divested the owners of the goods as from the date of seizure. The Odessa (3), The Zamora (4). Under the contract, as already stated, the defendants were not to be responsible for the supply of goods if steamers did not come to Madras or Madura, and these steamers clearly were the "other steamers", already mentioned, by which the three consignments were coming out. In these circumstances, the capture of the Barenfels, which must have been one of the possibilities contemplated, in our opinion relieved the defendants of liability under this clause and put an end to the contract so far as this particular consignment was concerned: And it seems to us immaterial that some six months later the ship and cargo were sent out to Colombo, Madras and Calcutta by bailees from the Prize Court who landed the goods in question, which were consigned to Tuticorin at Colombo, and did not forward them by transshipment to the defendants, the consignees at Tuticorin. There was no certificate of release from the Prize Court in respect of these goods which at the time were being proceeded against for condemnation, and the only terms on which the defendants were able to obtain delivery of them was by depositing a sum amounting to twice their invoice value and by agreeing that, if the goods were condemned, as happened, this sum should be treated as the sale price paid to the Prize authorities as vendors. It cannot be said that the defendants were under any obligation to purchase these goods at a greatly enhanced price from the Prize authorities and make them over to the plaintiff, and we think the plaintiff's claim in respect of these casks fails.

The case as regards the plaintiff's other ground of claim on account of the consignment on the SS. Frimley is even clearer. The evidence, for there is nothing explicit in the plaint, is that kegs of 16 per cent. strength arrived by that ship. The contract being for delivery of kegs of 40 per cent. strength, it was for the plaintiff to show that the defendants were in a position to deliver dye such as that described in the contract. We think it is clear that the plaintiffs have not done so and that the description of the dye on the Frimley differs in toto from the description stipulated for. We may add that on the evidence the plaintiffs failed entirely to establish that the dye on the Frimley could be accepted as equivalent to that referred to in the contract, the only witness who had any practical knowledge of dyeing deposing that dye of 16 per cent. strength could not produce the same quality of colour as that of 40 per cent. strength after admixture.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1, s. 11—Appeal—Withdrawal of suit—Res judicata.

Once a case is taken on appeal it cannot be said to have been finally determined until the Appellate Court has adjudicated upon the question in issue between the parties, and by reason of the Court allowing the suit to be withdrawn by the plaintiff it cannot be said that its order possesses that necessary degree of finality so as to operate as res judicata relative to the rights of the parties to the antecedent litigation. Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gya.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the year 1316 F. S. purchased the interest of one Rajnath Singh in 5-annas 9-pies share in Mouza Rajpore. Prior to this purchase by the plaintiffs, the defendants, with some of their relations, obtained a thicca of one anna 3 dams share comprised within the 5 annas 9 pies share purchased by the plaintiffs. The one anna 3 dams share which was leased to the defendants represented lands which were in the possession of the defendants and other members of their family together with 19 bighas which the defendants in this suit had purchased from one Chhatu Singh. The total area of the land which was in the possession of the defendants and their relations and which was termed their ancestral kasht property was 57 bighas. This area of land together with the 19 bighas which was the property of Chhatu Singh was leased to the defendants at an annual cash rent of Rs. 178 for the years 1304 to 1310 inclusive. It does not appear clearly if after the expiration of the lease in 1310 the defendants continued to pay to Rajnath Singh a cash rent or a bhauli rent. The plaintiffs, however, allege in paragraph 6 of their plaint that a bhauli rent was paid by the defendants to Rajnath Singh after the lease had expired, but this is denied by the defendants. Of the total area of 57 bighas of kasht land the defendants acquired 24 bighas and the residue 33 bighas remained with the defendants' other relations. Subsequently the defendants purchased Chhatu Singh's interest of 19 bighas; and thereby the defendants in this suit became entitled to, and were in possession of, 44 bighas in round figures of the original lands comprised in the thicca of 1304. Thus the reserve rent of Rs. 178 ought to be apportioned between the defendants in this suit and the relations of the defendants who are still in possession of the 33 bighas odd of the original kasht lands.

The plaintiffs bring this suit to recover bhauli rent for the years 1317 to 1320. The plaintiffs brought a suit originally in the year 1909 claiming a bhauli rent against these defendants and the number of that suit was 253 of 1909. That suit was dismissed by the Munsif who tried it. On appeal it was also dismissed by the learned District Judge. The case then went in second appeal before the High Court at Calcutta, and the High Court was pleased to allow the plaintiffs to withdraw the suit and gave them liberty to institute a fresh suit provided that they paid the costs of the defendants in that suit within two months of the date of the record reaching the lower Court. The plaintiffs paid the costs of the High Court and also the costs of the District Judge's Court but omitted to pay the costs incurred in the Munsif's Court. The Munsif, however, allowed a fortnight's time to the plaintiffs to make a further deposit of the costs which were due for the Munsif's Court. The plaintiffs made a deposit within the time allowed by the Munsif and the money deposited was withdrawn by the defendants in satisfaction of the costs due from the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge, who tried the present suit, held that the proceedings of 1909 did not operate as res judicata in respect of the plaintiffs' claim in this suit. The learned Judge on appeal, however, has taken a contrary view and has held that the order made by the Calcutta High Court did operate as a bar to the plaintiffs' right to sue in this action and that it operates. But we think that the learned District Judge was wrong. Once a case is taken on appeal it cannot be said to have been finally determined until the Appellate Court has adjudicated upon the question in issue between the parties; and by reason of the High Court allowing this suit to be withdrawn by the plaintiffs, it cannot be said that its order possesses that necessary degree of finality so as to operate as res judicata relative to the rights of the parties to the antecedent litigation. In a case reported as Ghurphekni v. Purmeshar Dayal Dubey (1), the law upon this question is clearly summarised in the following words: "When the decision of the lower Court is taken on appeal to a superior Tribunal and that Tribunal for any reason does not think fit to decide the matter, it is left an open question." Here their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court allowed the plaintiffs to withdraw the suit and by reason of this permission to withdraw, the very foundation or basis of the order of dismissal passed by the lower Court was cut away. Therefore, in no sense can the order made by the Calcutta High Court be deemed to operate as res judicata in any subsequent proceeding. We think that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in the determination of the question of law arrived at by him and that the learned District Judge was wrong.

The only question which remains for determination is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a *bhau*li rent or to a cash rent. The learned District Judge held that they were not entitled to *bhau*li rent having regard to the determination of the point of law which arose. The learned Subordinate Judge held that they were entitled to cash rent because under the lease of 1304 the original *bhau*li rent was converted from *bhau*li into nakdi. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, dismissed the plaintiffs' claim on the ground that they had wrongly claimed *bhau*li rent when they should have claimed cash rent. In the Record of Rights the defendants are recorded as being tenants of the 44 bighas in their possession at a rent of Rs. 104 per annum. This rent bears the same proportion to the total rental specified in the thika of 1304, viz., Rs. 178, as the area in respect of which it is payable bears to the total area covered by the lease of 1304. There is nothing on the record to show that the presumption of accuracy attaching to the entry in the Record of Rights has been rebutted. Accordingly we think that the plaintiffs are entitled to receive a cash rent from the defendants at the rate of Rs. 104 per annum in respect of the total area of land in their occupation, namely, 44 bighas. Accordingly, by consent of the parties, we modify the decree of the learned District Judge and declare that the plaintiffs are entitled to have a decree from the defendants for the years in suit for cash rent at Rs. 104 per annum. Owing to the inefficient manner in which this appeal has been argued we will give no costs in this appeal which is, therefore, decreed in a modified form without costs.

(1) 5 O. L. J. 652,

Appeal partly allowed.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Gift—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 122, 123—Death-bed gift—Registration—Possession, delivery of, whether necessary.

Under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act delivery of possession is not essential to the validity of a gift, and a gift by registered deed would be valid without more. But where a gift involves questions of marriage, succession, inheritance or religious usage, the Buddhist Law will apply. [p. 855, col. 2; p. 856, col. 1.]

Under the Buddhist Law a gift made during the donor's last illness with the effect of excluding his heirs would be invalid without delivery of possession. [p. 856, col. 1.]

MAUNG BA MAUNG v. MAUNG PYU.

Mr. Ko Ko Gyi, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. N. Burjorjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the suit is a piece of paddy land which was the property of the deceased Maung Aung Ba. The plaintiffs claimed it by way of inheritance on the ground that the deceased was their brother. The defendant, who took possession of the land on Maung Aung Ba's death, claimed it as an adopted son of the deceased and also by way of gift from him. He denied that the deceased was the brother of the plaintiffs and said if they were, they had failed to maintain fraternal relations with the deceased.

The concurrent findings of the lower Courts are:—

(1) that the deceased was the brother of the plaintiffs and that they had not failed in their duties towards him;

(2) that the defendant was not proved to be an adopted son as alleged.

As to the validity of the gift the lower Courts differed. The Trial Court held that the gift was valid. The Divisional Court held that the document evidencing the gift was executed by the deceased and was duly registered, but that it was not valid on the grounds that there was no delivery of possession, that the donee was a minor who was not in a position to accept the gift, and that no duly appointed guardian had accepted the gift on his behalf.

Before me the learned Counsel for the defendant contended that the lower Courts erred in holding that there was not evidence of that publicity and notoriety of the adoption which was essential to establish it. The ground of the contention was that in the registered deed of gift the defendant is described as the deceased's adopted son, "adopted as his heir." A number of Indian rulings were cited to show that registration is notice to the world of what is done or intended to be done by means of the document registered. I do not think that those cases can be applied to this case. The deed of gift was executed when the deceased was ill; and he died from that illness a few days after. There is nothing to show that the words relied on were inserted under his instructions. As a fact someone went to the township headquarters and got the deed written by a petition-writer; and it was executed at the deceased's house at a village some four miles away from the headquarters. It was, of course, read over to the deceased before he signed it. Even so, I am not disposed to find that he acknowledged the truth of every assertion in the deed. Moreover, there is nothing extraordinary in the presence of this particular assertion as a part of the deed, because it is clear that the deceased desired to give the land to the defendant and even if the assertion had been inserted without his instructions, the deceased would not have demurred to it. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the fact that the defendant was described in the deed as an adopted son is evidence of the necessary publicity or notoriety of the alleged relationship. The second of the concurrent findings above mentioned is, therefore, correct. There is no reason to think the first of them is wrong either. In fact its correctness was not seriously impugned by defendant's Counsel and I hold that it is correct.

As regards the question whether an acceptance of the gift was necessary, I hold that it was not. Section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act does indicate that without an acceptance there cannot be a valid gift as defined by it, but that section has not been extended to the districts but only section 123. That being the case, it cannot be held that the special definition of a gift under section 122 applies. In English Law acceptance is not necessary but it seems that by section 122 the Legislature makes a special rule requiring acceptance of a gift as an essential to its validity. Such a special rule cannot, however, be applied unless its applicability has been extended.

As regards the question whether delivery of possession was necessary, the answer will depend upon circumstances. If it was an ordinary gift the delivery of possession would not be necessary. The registered deed without more would have made it valid, for under section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act delivery of possession is not an essential to the validity of a gift. Under Hindu Law delivery of possession was necessary for the validity of the gift and it has been held with regard to Hindu gifts that section 123 of the Act has abrogated the rule. Moreover, Buddhist Law cannot be applied to the case of a gift, unless questions of marriage, inheritance, succession or religious usage are involved in it. But it has been urged that the gift was made during the deceased's last illness and was of the whole of his property and that the intention was to prevent the natural heirs from inheriting the property or any portion of it. In the case of Maung Pan U v. Ma Kyi Nyo (1) Mr. Justice Twomey referred with approval to an extract given at page 4 of the Upper Burma Rulings 1907-08, under the head Buddhist Law, Gift, and said that the applicability of the Buddhist Law to gifts depends on the circumstances of each case. "In one case it may be a matter of religious usage as where a gift is made on the occasion of a shinbyu ceremony. In another it may be either a matter of religious usage or inheritance or succession, as when a father gave land to his daughter and her husband on the occasion of her ear-boring and betrothal. In a third it may be a matter of inheritance as in the case of a death-bed gift. In all such cases the Buddhist Law applies and not the general law contained in the Transfer of Property Act and other Acts". It may be doubted whether the Buddhist Law would apply to the second of the above three cases. But in regard to the first of them and to the shinbyu gift in particular, Mr. Justice Twomey held in Ma Pan Nyun v. Ma Hla Sein (2) that questions regarding their validity must be decided according to the Buddhist Law, as they are questions regarding the religious usage. As regards the third of the three cases, I have not found any dissentient view. In Pan U's case (1) above cited, the alleged gifts were made by a father far advanced in years (75) two years before his death. The gifts involved the whole of his estate and their effect was to give three of his seven children a much larger share than they could obtain after his death under the ordinary Buddhist rules of inheritance. And the learned Judge held that the donor's purpose was plainly to evade those rules and that in such a case the Buddhist Law is applicable. The case before me is much stronger inasmuch as the gift was made during the donor's last illness and the effect was to exclude the heirs. I would, therefore, hold that Buddhist Law applies and there being no delivery of possession, the gift was invalid.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The suit from which these appeals arise is based upon certain acts of waste on the part of one Nawab Sayad Delawar Reza in respect of the property claimed by the Official Trustee of Bengal to be held in trust under a deed dated the 19th February 1900. This trust deed relates to an allowance of Rs. 2,000 a month payable to the Nawab by purchasers of the zemindari, who in consideration of that purchase have made themselves liable to pay this monthly allowance. Excluded from the purchase of the zemindari was a palace and grounds measuring some 150 bighas. The acts of waste are alleged to have been committed in regard to this palace and grounds.

By the terms of the deed, executed in favour of the Official Trustee, the allowance is to be divided between the Nawab and certain relatives and the Nawab himself is to remain in possession of the palace and grounds during his lifetime. The actual words of the deed are —

"That the said Official Trustee of Bengal shall allow the said Nawab Sayed Delawar Reza during his lifetime to reside in the said palace and to use and occupy the same and all other messuages, bungalows, land, etc., and every part thereof free of rent."

The defendants obtained a money decree against the Nawab and in execution thereof purchased a stable and outbuildings valued at Rs. 2,062. This they demolished and for this and other damages done to the property, a decree for Rs. 2,262 has been made by the lower Court.

The plaintiff also claims possession of 20 bighas of the compound which have been leased by the Nawab to the same set of defendants. The Court below has held that as the deed of endowment gives the Nawab a right to enjoy the property, the lease granted by the Nawab must be held good for his lifetime. The plaintiff's suit for recovery of possession of the land leased has been dismissed.

In the lower Court the chief defence taken was that the deed was never acted upon. The lower Court decided this issue by reference to the fact that the Official Trustee received the monthly allowance and divided it in accordance with the terms of the trust. The lower Court did not specifically enter into the question whether the deed was acted upon in its entirety, that is to say, whether possession of the palace and compound ever vested in the Official Trustee, but it is clear from the evidence that the Official Trustee was never in fact in actual possession of the property, and this is indicated by the following passage from the Subordinate Judge's judgment:—

"In short he (the Nawab) has been doing all sorts of acts of waste without any check from the plaintiff, though he was allowed only to occupy and use the palace and its compound with the buildings on it free of rent during his life."

Now as we understand Volume III, Chapter XXX, of the Hedaya one of the most important points in the operation of a deed of trust or gift is that possession should forthwith be delivered to the donee or trustee. This principle was recognized in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Musammat Mohumdee Begum (1). The whole case law on the subject has been gone into, if we may say so, exhaustively by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mahmood in Rahim Bakhsh v. Muhammad Hasan (2). There can be no doubt that a deed of gift is not valid under Muhammadan Law if possession is not given. It is suggested that in the circumstances of the present case there was no necessity that the Official Trustee should travel all the way from Calcutta to take possession of the palace. The terms of the trust showed that it was not intended that he should take physical possession of the property. In the cases cited by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mahmood a clear distinction has been drawn between cases in which it was possible and the cases in which it was not possible to take possession of the property, as for instance, in the case decided in Shahazadee Hazara Begum v. Khaja Hossein Ali Khan (3). In that case the property at the time of the gift was in usufructuary mortgage to a third party. A distinction has also been drawn in cases in which the usufruct has been reserved to the donor while the donee has been regarded as in possession of the corpus of the property itself. In the case before us there was no bar to an actual delivery of possession at the time of signing the deed of gift. It cannot be said that the donor is receiving only the usufruct. He has not only been in actual possession he has actually pulled up the marble floors and iron railings and sold them and appropriated the proceeds. It is urged that an actual taking of possession would have been an idle ceremony. We cannot accept this suggestion. No ceremony prescribed by the sacred law can be deemed idle. In the case before us the ceremony would have been most valuable as putting third parties on their guard against dealing with the Nawab in respect of the property given in trust.

The result is that the trust deed is operative only to the extent to which possession has been taken. It is clearly divisible into two parts. Possession has been taken of the monthly allowance. The deed is operative as regards the monthly allowance. Possession has not been taken of the palace and grounds. The deed is inoperative to that extent. The plaintiff has no title in the palace and grounds. His suit should have been and now is dismissed with costs. Appeal No. 427 of 1915 is dismissed with costs. Appeal No. 468 of 1915 is decreed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the defendants-respondents were sued on a pro-note in their representative capacity. The pro-note was executed by K. Y. Cassim, since deceased. Defendant No. 1 is the elder brother, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are daughters of the deceased. Defendant No. 4 is the deceased's nephew. Defendant No. 3 is a minor and appeared by her guardian ad litem even in this Court. She was eleven years old, when the suit was filed. Of the defendants the first three only are the heirs of the deceased, the fourth defendant Mahomed not being an heir at all.

The plaintiffs claim that the suit is not barred by limitation on the ground that the defendant No. 1 made two part-payments which save limitation as against all the defendants. Defendant No. 1 did not appear to contest the suit. I have to take it that the alleged part-payments have been proved as the suit has been decreed as against defendants Nos. 1 and 4. The finding has not been assailed here either.

Now it has been held in Arjun Ram Pal v. Rohima Banu (1) that the payment of interest by one of his heirs on a debt due by a deceased person does not save limitation against the other heirs.

But it is alleged that defendant No. 1 made the part payments on his own behalf as well as on behalf of the 2nd and 3rd defendants as their duly authorized agent, inasmuch as he was then the manager and head of a joint family of which defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were members. This the latter defendants deny. And there is not a scrap of evidence to show that defendant No. 1 was such a head. Moreover although the case-law shows that the head of a joint Hindu family might have the necessary authority, it does not appear that the same rule prevails among the Muhammadans.

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 128.

YAGAPPA CHETTY v. MAHOMED.

The learned Judge below observed in his judgment that it is not alleged that defendant No. 1 was the natural guardian of either of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. But it has been argued before me that defendant No. 1 was the lawful guardian of defendant No. 3 and as such was a person who falls within the meaning of the words "agent duly authorized in that behalf" in sections 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act, as defined by section 21 (1) of the same Act. Sections 107 and 109 of Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan law show that failing all the female relatives mentioned in section 107, the custody of a minor girl under the age of puberty belongs to the father, and failing him to the nearest male paternal relative within the prohibited degrees, reckoning proximity in the same order as for inheritance. In Muhammadan Law puberty is presumed on the completion of the fifteenth year in the case of both males and females, unless there is evidence to show that puberty in the particular case was attained earlier. Defendant No. 3 was only eleven years old at the date of the institution of the suit and as the part-payments were made nearly three years before, she must have been about eight years old then. Defendant No. 1 was, therefore, the natural guardian of the person of the minor defendant, which means according to the books that the guardianship is for custody and education. I find also that even if the minor defendant had attained puberty defendant No. 1 would be the guardian of her person (failing father), executor of father's Will and father's father H. H. S. provided the minor is unmarried. See section 111 of Wilson's book. But this is not, in my opinion, sufficient for the purposes of section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act. I think defendant No. 1 should be the guardian of the minor's property as well, because the act in question of his is sought to be made binding on the minor's estate.

Section 112 of Wilson's book gives a list of the natural guardians of the property of a minor indicating the order of priority among them. The father's brother is not included in that list and the section goes on to say that failing all of these it is for the Court to appoint a guardian or guardians. I hold, therefore, that defendant No. 1 was not "a person duly authorised" within the meaning of section 21 (1) of the Limitation Act. The result is that the payments made by defendant No. 1 cannot bind defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 with costs.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 have not appeared before this Court and as against them the plaintiffs ask for interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of institution of the suit till realisation. They say that they ask for that in their plaint and the learned Judge below failed to deal with their prayer.

Section 34 (2) provides that where a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest, and a separate suit therefor shall not lie. The matter must, therefore, be treated as if the lower Court had exercised its discretion and refused to give interest, unless perhaps the plaintiff can show that the silence of that Court upon the point was due to an oversight or mistake, but there is nothing to show this. That being the case, the proper course is to follow the case of Hiralal Ichhalal Majumdar v. Desai Narsila Chaturbhujdas (2) of which the facts were similar to those in this case, and which decided that the High Court was right in declining to allow the prayer. The appeal is dismissed as against the 2nd and 3rd respondents with costs, the costs in this Court being confined to one Advocate's costs, as at the hearing. Mr. Das appeared for both and Mr. Judge, though set down as an Advocate for the 3rd respondent, did not appear. The appeal against the 1st and 4th respondents as regards the interest asked for is dismissed. The lower Court's decree against them will stand. There will be no order as to costs in their favour, as Mr. A. C. Dhar who, the list shows, was appearing for 1st respondent did not appear and the 4th defendant was absent.

Appeal dismissed.

Accounts, suit for, against administrator—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10—Administrator, whether trustee.

The limitation for a suit for accounts against the administrator of an estate runs from the date when the plaintiff is entitled to put an end to his administration i.e., on attaining majority and not from the date on which he does in fact put an end to it. [p. 861, col. 1.]

An administrator in whom no special trust is vested for a specific purpose is not a trustee within the meaning of section 10 of the Limitation Act. [p. 861, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Purneah, dated the 28th August 1912.

Messrs. Sahay Ram Bose, Chandra Sekhar Banerji, Purendra Narain Sinha and Simnandan Rai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. K. Sen, Lachmi N. Sinha, Abani Busnan Mukerji and Rai Tribhuvan Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case are the nephews of one Rudranand Thakur, that is to say, second cousins once removed. Their case is that on the death of their father Shiva Pershad Thakur in 1894 Rudranand Thakur took out Letters of Administration for the management of his estate during their minority and that during that management, he made purchases of properties out of the proceeds of the minors' estate and having wrongfully obtained entry of his own name in the documents of title refused to deliver to the plaintiffs their shares in the property acquired during his administration. They also allege that Rudranand had, on the expiry of his administration, refused to deliver accounts and upon these causes of action ask for the following reliefs:—

(a) That an account be taken from defendant No. 1 of the income and expenditure of the plaintiffs' share of the estate during the management of the defendant No. 1 from the year 1894 to the end of Bhadro 1315 M. S. and that he may be ordered to pay to the plaintiffs the sum that may be found due by him on taking such accounts.

(b) That if upon taking account, any other defendants be found liable to pay any sum to the plaintiffs, such sum may be ordered to be paid to the plaintiffs.

(c) That the defendants be ordered to make a discovery of all the properties, moveable and immoveable, appertaining to the estate of Shiva Pershad Thakur, Tirthanand Thakur, Kulanand Thakur and Rudranand Thakur and their descendants and not acquired with the private funds of any member or branch of the family.

(d) That the Court may be pleased, after adjudication of the title of the plaintiffs and of the shares belonging to the different branches or members of the family, to order a partition and separate allotment to be made of the moveable properties mentioned in schedule 5 hereto annexed and separate possession of the landed properties comprised in the several schedules 1, 2, 3 and 4 hereto annexed, and of all other properties that may be found to belong to the plaintiffs after the discovery prayed for as above or otherwise awarded to the plaintiffs.

(e) That the costs of the suits be awarded to the plaintiffs from the defendant No. 1 or any other defendants who may be found liable.

(f) That any other or further relief in the premises to which the plaintiffs may be entitled in the judgment of the Court may also be given them.

In dealing with the reliefs sought the learned Subordinate Judge found that the suit for an account was barred by limitation, that the suit for recovery of any money that might be due on that account was barred by limitation. The prayer for discovery of the immoveable properties acquired during the administration of the estate by Rudranand was apparently not pressed, but the learned Subordinate Judge went in detail into the title of the plaintiffs in each of the properties mentioned in the schedule and dismissed or decreed the plaintiffs' suit according to his adjudication on their title. The defendants have not appealed. The plaintiffs have appealed. The points for decision are (1) Is the suit for an account barred by limitation? (2) Having failed to secure an account have the plaintiffs succeeded in establishing by other evidence their title to the properties claimed?

There are two points in issue, upon which the question of limitation turns. Firstly, when did the younger plaintiff attain his majority? and secondly, from what date should limitation run under Article 120 or section 10 of the Limitation Act?

We have no hesitation in finding that the learned Subordinate Judge's arguments with regard to the present age of the younger plaintiff are unassailable. It is vain to attempt to explain away as mistakes the numerous indications of the plaintiff's age given at a time when the question of his age was not in dispute. There is no substantial evidence on the plaintiff's side that the plaintiff was not a major at the dates given by the learned Subordinate Judge. Knowing that these records were likely to be cited against him, the younger plaintiff failed to submit himself for medical examination. He was only himself to blame, if indeed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong. We find as a fact agreeing with the lower Court that the younger plaintiff came of age in the year 1903.

The suit was instituted on the 3rd September 1910. The next question is whether limitation runs from the date upon which the plaintiffs were entitled to put an end to the administration of Rudranand or from the date on which they did in fact put an end to it. In our view, the legal position of the defendant as an administrator terminated upon the day the younger plaintiff came of age. If thereafter the plaintiffs allowed him to remain in charge of the property, Rudranand Thakur was in charge of the property from that date, not as an administrator, but as the agent of the plaintiffs and a suit against him for an account would fall under Article 89. The view taken in Saroda Pershad Chattopadhyaya v. Brojo Nath Bhattacharjee (1) clearly indicates that in suits of this nature, the cause of action arises upon the date of the plaintiffs' majority. We are of the same opinion. The administration of Rudranand was by the definite order of the District Court limited to the plaintiffs' minority. It was open to the plaintiffs immediately they came of age to inform the District Court that the administration was at an end and to ask for an account, and on failing to get that account to maintain a suit to obtain one. Their cause of action undoubtedly arose from the date of the majority of the younger plaintiff and the date of that majority being more than six years prior to the institution of the suit, the suit is barred by limitation unless saved by section 10 of the Limitation Act. We see no reason to depart from the rule of law, which has been observed in the Calcutta High Court for the last forty years with regard to this section. The first dictum is that reported in Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (2). This has been followed in Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (3), Hemangini Dasi v. Nobin Chand Ghose (4), Barcda Prosad Banerji v. Gajendra Nath Banerji (5) and Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6). It has also been followed in other Courts. It must be taken as well settled that an administrator, in whom no special trust is vested for a specific purpose, is not a trustee within the meaning of section 10 of the Limitation Act. The prayer for an account for the period between the date of the younger plaintiff's majority and the date of the plaintiffs entering into direct management of the property is barred, unless it be shown that the latter date was within three years of suit. The learned Subordinate Judge has clearly shown that the plaintiffs must have been in direct management of the property at least from the 31st July 1907. It is well known that changes in management ordinarily take place prior to the settlements and arrangements to be made for the bhadoi crop, that is, in July each year. The assertion of the plaintiffs that they did not take charge till the middle of September is against the probabilities. The finding of the lower Court is in accordance with probabilities. We accept the finding of fact that the agency of Rudranand terminated not later than the 31st July 1907. The first two reliefs asked for the plaintiffs were, therefore, rightly refused as barred by limitation.

The properties affected by the second part of the case may be dealt with in three divisions. We may say at once that we regard it as unfortunate that the learned Subordinate Judge should have allowed a case of this complex nature to be prosecuted as one suit. The plaintiff is attempting under cover of one plaint to obtain an account for the period of Rudranand's administration, to take up family history for the past 20 to 30 years, and to obtain a re-partition of the estate. He has attacked a number of transactions to which Rudranand Thakur was not a party at all in a vain attempt to encroach upon the property of other cousins, who were not interested in the administration of the estate by Rudranand. The suit as a whole seems to us to have been framed in direct contravention of Order II, rule 4, whereby the plaintiff is precluded from joining a suit for recovery of immoveable property with suit for a sum of money due. The suit in effect was a suit to recover damages for malfeasance under sections 146 and 147 of the Probate and Administration Act. It should have been kept within those limits. The suit for the recovery of immoveable property in the hands of Rudranand Thakur and the cousins Girjanand and Gajanand Thakur was in no way connected with the suit for an account. The result of interweaving this quarrel with regard to the immoveable properties with the quarrel over the administration has been that the plaintiffs' evidence on the real ownership of each item of property claimed is so hopelessly meagre that the learned Subordinate Judge cannot possibly be taken to task for refusing to rely on it. We are asked to declare for instance that a large batch of properties were taken in the name of such benamidars as Bulan Kawas, Nanul Dutt Pande, Khublal Thakur and Badri Nath Thakur, on evidence which covers for each case not more than 10 or 12 lines of the paper-book for each benamidar. It is suggested that sufficient evidence has been given to show that these people were probably benamidars of the plaintiffs' family. This was not sufficient for the plaintiffs' case. The plaintiffs were required to show that they were benamidars of Rudranand Thakur. The evidence of their own witnesses makes it perfectly clear that if indeed they were benamidars for any member of the family, they were benamidars for Girjanand Thakur or his father Thirthanand Thakur and not for Rudranand Thakur at all. This disposes of the cases dealt with in schedule 4 to the plaint.

With regard to the properties covered by schedules Nos. 1 and 2, a considerable number of them have already been decreed to the plaintiffs. With regard to the others, we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that there is no real evidence of the plaintiffs' title.

It has been strongly urged upon us that because a number of these properties were acquired by Rudranand Thakur during the period of his administration and because during that period the plaintiffs lived in the same house with him as members of the same family we should assume that the tahbil or purse of the family was a common purse and that all sums taken from it by Rudranand Thakur for the purchase of property must be regarded as taken from the common purse of a joint family. Evidence has been given by the plaintiffs to show that they and Rudranand Thakur messed together, but even in that evidence there is no definite statement that Rudranand Thakur and the plaintiffs had a common purse. The position was that Rudranand was managing his share of the properties for himself and plaintiffs' share of the properties for them. He was required by law to keep a separate account for the plaintiffs' properties and to submit a separate account of the collections and disbursements from those properties annually to the District Judge. The fact that he failed to do so would not constitute the purse into which he placed the collections from both his own and the plaintiffs' properties a common purse. Such a purse is merely the private purse of a fraudulent trustee. When a trustee makes a profit by the improper employment of trust money, he is liable to make good to the beneficiary the amount of that profit in addition to the money improperly employed. But it is not the case that the beneficiary is entitled to claim a title in the property acquired by the improper use of trust funds. The properties claimed were not purchased by Rudranand on plaintiffs' behalf. There was never any intention in the mind of Rudranand to acquire for the plaintiffs a title therein. It is clearly the plaintiffs' case that Rudranand was throughout acting fraudulently. If he did purchase these properties with the plaintiffs' money (and this is very far from being proved), he was using the plaintiffs' money improperly. Even if it be granted that the refusal of Rudranand to file an account of the administration raises the presumption that he improperly used the plaintiffs' money in these speculations in landed property, and even if it be granted that the cases quoted in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 28, at pages 192 and 193 are authority for the proposition that the plaintiff is entitled at his option to claim either the money used with interest, or the property acquired with the money, limitation for the exercise of such an option would be the limitation for the recovery of the money used. This disposes of the plaintiffs' claims to the properties acquired in the name of Rudranand himself during the period of his administration. It is unnecessary to discuss at length the plaintiffs' title to properties acquired in the name of Rudranand prior to the period of his administration. The family was clearly separate at the time of their acquisition and there is no evidence at all to show that the properties were acquired in part from the funds of the plaintiffs' side of the family.

The appeal fails on all the points raised and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Ba U, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The mortgage in this case cannot be held to be a usufructuary mortgage. It is a mortgage like that in Maung Naung v. Ma Bok Son (1), where according to the terms thereof the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee is first created but made subject to a clause to the effect that if the mortgagor did not redeem within a certain time therein specified, the mortgagee would be entitled to outright ownership of the land. In that case Sir Charles Fox said, "If section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act were applicable, or if the decision had to be according to the rules of Equity as administered by the English Chancery Courts, this last clause would have to be held to be invalid". That section did not apply. And the learned Judge, therefore, followed the Privy Council cases of Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken (2) and Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (3), in which it was held that the rule of English Equity Courts which forbids any clogging of the right of redemption is not applicable in India, and that a clause for forfeiture in a mortgage should be given effect to in the absence of any specific law to the contrary or of any established practice, and Sir Charles Fox proceeded to hold that the clause rendered the mortgagee's interest in the land become absolute by the mere failure of the mortgagor to redeem within the stipulated time.
